Putting in tenders are firms which employ people who are not tradesmen but who just collect their pay and leave work half done. Too often, such workmen leave behind a mess for others to clear up.

The increasing numbers of elderly and others with special needs make it vital that the voluntary housing effort is maintained and, if possible, enhanced. That sector of housing provides a commendable and worthy contribution to alleviating suffering among a valued section of the Ulster community, and we should pay tribute to the housing associations.

Will the Minister provide an up-to-date report on Orlit homes and aluminium bungalows, both of which are causing tenants grave concern?

Under Class IV, another sector of public expenditure needing an injection of money is capital construction and the improvement of roads and bridges and the maintenance of the road network throughout the Province. The Northern Ireland Economic Council estimates that money spent on capital works and maintenance has declined in real terms by one third since 1973-74. Anyone can see that if anything needs an injection of finance in Northern Ireland it is road maintenance. That money is needed to protect the capital already invested in our road system and to alleviate all other problems.

The money available to maintain 14,683 miles of road is not extravagant compared with expenditure in Great Britain. Steps should be taken to carry out proper repairs to our roads instead of resorting to inadequate patching.

The Under-Secretary of State recently made a vist to Northern Ireland and he is well aware of the need for urgent provision of the Castledawson bypass, the Magherafelt-to-Moneymore road and the Magherafelt bypass—to name but a few. Several of those roads have been on the list for many years and promises have been made to provide money for them.

One of Northern Ireland's problems is education. The inspectorate's report shows that the present curriculum is being restricted by shortages due to expenditure cuts. Paragraph 38 of the report, published over a year ago, states:

> "The curriculum for 11-19 year olds is being restricted to some extent by the curtailment of outside activities, by shortages of equipment and the materials for practical subjects."

Of the building programme necessary to upgrade secondary schools, the report states:

> "There is a need to make provision which will enable schools to implement the balanced and broad curriculum through the addition of special spaces for science, craft, design, technology or physical education."

If there are shortages of material, equipment, teachers and buildings for the present curriculum, how do the Government envisage broadening the curriculum through the introduction of new subjects, new teaching methods and new methods of study?

I trust that the programme will not become another cynical exercise in diverting attention from the real plight of education in the Province, but that resources will be allocated to improve the quality of education.

Many hon. Members want to take part in the debate. I have prepared comments on many other subjects, but I shall mention only two further simple matters. I come from Mid-Ulster, the area with the highest unemployment in the United Kingdom—indeed, the highest unemployment in Europe. I plead with the Government to introduce more attractive incentive packages for prospective investors. In the face of such overwhelming unemployment, the bodies entrusted with providing jobs have a gigantic task which I do not under-estimate. However, I am convinced that, with the Mid-Ulster work force—one of the best in the United Kingdom — and the dynamic sales initiatives, we can be brought from the depths.

I will not under-estimate the figures given to us, as the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) did. I am delighted that the increase in unemployment has dropped. In February 1983-84 the figure was 7,800 and in February 1984-85 it was 420. I trust that we shall see a dramatic turn in the figures and that the people of Ulster will be allowed to do a simple job, and work and provide for the Province as they have done in the past. I spoke to the Minister privately today and asked him to visit my constituency to see some of the problems at first hand. He readily accepted that invitation. I welcome that and trust that the visit will take place soon.

[Rev. William McCrea]

The problems facing our elderly, our unemployed, those who are urgently needing home helps — all of them among my constituents — should be a burden on both my heart and that of the Government. I earnestly appeal to the Government to listen carefully representations from the elected representatives people so that we may dispel the problems and bright and happier future to the whole of this part United Kingdom.

9.56 pm

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): In his speech the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) spoke of not going back over history. The tragedy is that in a House and from a profession steeped in history, Government and Opposition indubitably have failed to learn the lesson of history and to listen to the voices of Ulster Members. We have already seen evidence of that tonight.

I draw to the attention of the House the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux) on 11 June, which is published in the Official Report, Vol. 61. He pointed out our traditional antipathy to this method of dealing with Northern Ireland business. Even tonight there have been suggestions that Northern Ireland is served more beneficially than other parts of the United Kingdom. I do not doubt that we have benefited in some areas, but if the appropriation order for the rest of the kingdom were dealt with on this basis, we would all see how other areas of the United Kingdom were dealt with specifically. We discovered in the publication of a breakdown into regions that Northern Ireland normally comes about fifth in the areas of benefit rather than first. Therefore, I advise the House that my right hon. and hon. Friends will vote against the order on the principle that we should be treated in the same context as the rest of the kingdom.

I take up the point of the hon. Member for Mid-Ulster (Rev. William McCrea) and ask the Minister to spell out the figures. The right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West may have missed the good news at that point, when he said that that was the only good news that the Minister had. I believe that I am right in saying that about 7,000 people come on to the employment register each year, so even to mark time we must create that number of new jobs each year. I hope that the Minister will re-examine those figures, because the important point was made that, although none of us can be satisfied with unemployment in Northern Ireland, constructive steps have been taken from which we should derive encouragement.

When the Minister deals with energy, will he say whether the Government have decided to allow those who have been using town gas for cooking — it looks as though the onward march of events means that comparatively soon there will be no more town gas — and who wish to convert to liquid gas to have the same rights as others who will convert to other forms of fuel? I fear that the Government may be tempted not to do so. Since they are the Government of choice, they should give those older people the opportunity to have cheaper fuel and not to have to rely on electricity.

While I am on the subject of fuel, will the Government give a little more publicity to the fact that the coal advisory service, which to the uninitiated seems to be a benevolent society to guide people on how to get the best from coal, may in fact be a cover for the coal importers and is more concerned with arguing their case? We have already seen press releases defending the fact that there will be no reduction in coal prices, although the miners' strike is over, because we have been trading in dollars and there has been advance trading. It appears that the service is already preparing an argument to force the people of Northern Ireland to continue to pay a high price for coal.

Can the Minister confirm the figures given by the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West for the employment of graduates in engineering from Queen's university? I may be more sceptical than others, but I do not normally take as hard facts the figures that appear in the press. There can be printers' errors and sometimes reporters get the wrong end of the stick. Only last week, I had the privilege of travelling in an aeroplane with a senior professor in this area at Queen's university, who said that graduates from the electrical and engineering faculties were being snapped up not only by overseas companies but in Northern Ireland. I understand that about 27 graduates annually from Queen's are automatically taken on the payroll of Shorts, which is moving forward with new technology.

As we are trying to improve employment in Northern Ireland, is enough being done to co-ordinate the Industrial Development Board's initiatives and finance with the research work carried out at Queen's university and other establishments in Northern Ireland so that the creative engineering skills latent in Northern Ireland can be harnessed to new industries? At present, many research projects are financed by overseas industrialists from Japan and America, and the outcome of the research is going across the oceans. We live in a global village, and we are happy to share our knowledge with others, but I believe that we should try to do more to create job opportunities of that kind in Northern Ireland.

I turn to a few points which arise directly out of the order. Class IV deals with street lighting. I do not think that we have been fully satisfied with the maintenance of street lighting, especially in Belfast, since the changeover from the Northern Ireland electricity service to the Department of the Environment. Are the supervisors looking after street lighting properly? Where there is community unrest, I believe that it is unwise for street lights not to be functioning for long periods. I question whether the money that is provided for this purpose is being spent wisely and properly. I notice that there has been a decrease in the amount of money set aside for new installations and improvements.

Will the Dunmurry bypass be completed this year? In particular, when will the stretch to bypass Areema be started and completed? Three years ago, I was assured by a former Minister in the Northern Ireland Office that this stretch of the bypass was to be started that year. To my knowledge, work upon it has not yet begun. It is important that it should be started, and completed at the earliest possible opportunity.

I welcome the fact that money is to be provided for the development of Belfast international airport. However, is the Department satisfied that the money is being spent in the best possible way? I declare an interest. It seems to me that the marketing director of the airport has a strange way of attracting business to Aldergrove. He criticises in the media those who are trying to build up the traffic between Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom. The firm concerned has managed to get "slots" into Gatwick and it is servicing Belfast. To do this and meet security requirements at Gatwick involves two landings. The marketing director criticised the company for the efforts that it has made to improve business.

In that context, is it wise for the Department to continue to subsidise a very fine bus which rarely carries more than two passengers? Would it not have been wiser a long time ago to provide a minibus rather than a large bus? I am sure that it impresses those passengers who are brought into the centre of Belfast, but if insufficient people use it, it is foolish to use such a large bus. It is a shameful waste of money to spend £100,000 a year on this service.

Turning to Class IX, may I say a few words about the provision of new buildings, the financing of the staff council and the overall development of the health service? Can the Minister assure the House that money to cover growing administrative costs is not hidden within these figures at a time when we are being asked to cut back on the provision of health and social services?

I know that there is great concern within the nursing profession. This may have arisen because at an earlier date the nurses opted out of their traditional role of managing the ward and the hospital. We now have administrators. Perhaps the time has come to examine again the growth in administrative costs and to urge that more facilities be provided for patients instead of allowing administrative costs to continue to rise.

I ask the Minister to supply us with a list of voluntary bodies and the grants that are made available to them. My hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, North (Mr. Walker) has expressed some misgivings on this score. I know, too, that the Community Advice Bureau has been asking questions. In and earlier debate, my hon. Friend the Member for Upper Bann (Mr. McCusker) expressed similar misgivings. Unfortunately, we have not yet had a proper response. I should like to know whether Action MS is included in the voluntary bodies and whether its grant has been upgraded to meet the tremendous work that it is doing. I should like to know also whether Lifecare has been admitted at last to the grant system to asssist it in the work of caring for those who need help.

In dealing with expenditure decreases, I ask the Minister to explain why there has been a decrease in the number of student radiographers. There is concern about unemployment and I understand that there is still a need for radiographers. Is the problem linked with that of providing a college or school of radiography in Belfast? Is this a recurring problem? Would it not be better for funds to be spent on training? There has been tremendous development at Shorts recently and I understand that it has had to advertise abroad for avionics engineers because of a failure to train local young people. The company has had to look to Great Britain to find trained personnel. Could it be that while we are providing money for unemployment benefit, we are not providing enough to enable local people to be trained to take up job opportunities as they arise?

Is the Minister satisfied no over-age workers are still being employed in social services when they could be drawing the retirement pension? I know of one case where more efficient work could be done in the office concerned, for the good of the community.

I ask again for the Secretary of State to tell us what relationship exists between the provision of bursaries for the training of radiographers and social workers and the staffing targets that are set by the various Northern Ireland health boards. I have been probing along that line. I am concerned that we are not providing sufficient staff to deal with the community's needs.

Is the Under-Secretary of State prepared to lend support to a call for an early debate on the recent report by the Select Committee on Social Services on care in the community? We should remember the comment of my hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, North about the lack of provision for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped. Those Select Committee members who visited Northern Ireland were impressed by what was happening, but they recognised the need for more community provision. The figures in the order do not encourage me to think that adequate provision has been made.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It might help the House if I say that the first of the Front Bench speakers hopes to catch my eye at 10.50 pm.

10.15 pm

Rev. Ian Paisley (Antrim, North): It comes as a surprise to hear that the Front Bench replies are to begin so early. Many of us have other things to say. I should have thought that the replies would begin at 11 pm and take half an hour. That would give hon. Members an opportunity to participate. I am glad that there is agreement between the Opposition and the Government. I shall be as brief as I can. I do not wish to go over the ground that has already been covered.

I agree with much of what has been said, but disagree with some of the points of the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth). I shall vote for the Appropriation. I am amused to find that the hon. Gentleman will vote against his own Assembly salary. That is his business, and on his head be it.

Rev. Martin Smyth: Declare an interest.

Rev. Ian Paisley: I shall say something at another place at another time.

I am grateful for every penny that comes to Northern Ireland. I do not accept that the money comes because we have a begging bowl. We have a right, as part of the United Kingdom, to a fair share of the cake, and we are entitled to the moneys that we receive. We in Northern Ireland are at the same level, pay the same type of income tax and carry the same responsibilities as any other citizens of the United Kingdom.

The emphasis in the debate has rightly been an unemployment, especially the dark shadow of unemployment in the Province. It will come as no surprise to hon. Members to hear that I shall confine my remarks to agriculture. We have talked about creating jobs, and that is very important. To some extent I agree with the hon. Member for Belfast, South, but I believe that the figures give us some encouragement. There seems to be at least a halt to the disastrous unemployment trend. I trust that it is a real halt, but we shall have to wait and see. It would be churlish if we did not emphasise that matter.

I am anxious that we should retain the jobs that we already have. There is a great danger in not preserving what we have. There is a slogan in Ulster, "What we have, we have" and I believe that we need to hold on to the jobs that we have, especially in agriculture, which is the largest employer in Northern Ireland.

The Under-Secretary of State should know that there are certain problems in Northern Ireland, some of which we are meeting face on and some of which—if the EEC has its pernicious way with us—we shall have to face in the future.

I wish to mention three matters briefly. First, Northern Ireland dairy farmers feel—I believe rightly—that they should have received the 65,000 tonnes of additional quota allocated under the milk regime by the EEC. We are coming to a new year, and the Commissioner has made it clear that he will be making a similar proposal. Can the Minister give us an assurance tonight that if the United Kingdom gets an extra 65,000 tonnes of quota he will see that it comes to us in Northern Ireland? That was its purpose.

I should like to point out to the Minister an interesting figure that has been released by the Milk Marketing Board. If we were put on a par with the Irish Republic, we would receive 190,000 tonnes. We have not been allocated much, but we should receive what we are entitled to. What will the Minister do about the matter? Will he allow the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to rob us of what is rightfully ours? Of the tribunal awards for development claims, 45 per cent. are likely to be met. Scotland will receive 57·5 per cent. and England and Wales 65 per cent. of their respective claims. That is another problem that faces the Northern Ireland dairy industry.

With regard to the outgoers scheme, exceptional hardship cases in Great Britain will be met in full, but in Northern Ireland the quota so far surrendered under the outgoers scheme is only 1 per cent., whereas the Government expected that it would be 5 per cent. That is yet another difficulty for the Northern Ireland dairy industry. What will the Minister do about those problems, because as they increase jobs are being lost?

Secondly, I want to deal with the beef industry. As the Minister is aware, the Commission has proposed to the Council of Ministers that the beef variable premium scheme should be done away with. That would mean that we would have one support scheme only—intervention. We do not produce beef to store—we produce it for the consumer. That proposal is looming ahead of us. It would be disastrous to do away with the variable beef premium scheme.

The United Kingdom will be expected to rely solely upon the intervention scheme. There are already 680,000 tonnes of meat in store in the Community. The full effects of the introduction of the milk quota have not yet worked through the system. A significant level of cow culling may be expected in 1985-86. The market will be further depressed by the release of meat presently in store. There is no proposal for any planned initiative to stimulate market demand or to dispose of the stocks already in store. We shall therefore have a further problem.

To compensate for the loss of the variable beef premium, it is estimated that about 40,000 tonnes of beef in Northern Ireland would have to be bought under the intervention scheme. At best, Northern Ireland has only 20,000 tonnes of storage space available. Such space will not be available for 1985-86 because of the beef already in store and because of the anticipated high level of cow culling. It will prove impossible both to take sufficient volume of beef off the market during the normal intervention period and to find sufficient storage capacity if the variable beef premium is abolished, and there will be a problem even if it is retained, because the stores are already choc-a-bloc full.

How will the Development Board and the Department of Economic Development handle the proposition, already laid before them, for the building of a large blast-freezing store in Northern Ireland to provide sufficient storage in Northern Ireland to cope with the meat? Last year, when there was a change in the beef variable scheme, intervention buying increased dramatically. That was evidenced by the fact that the United Kingdom accounted for 75 per cent. of increased Community-wide purchasing, and Northern Ireland accounted for some 80 per cent. of total intervention purchases in the United Kingdom. In addition, 12,700 tonnes of beef were accepted into private storage in Northern Ireland, out of a Community total of 275,000 tonnes. Even if we retain the scheme, we shall be in grave difficulty. If it is abolished, there will be a spin-off affecting the meat processing plants and so on, and we shall be in great difficulty in retaining employment.

I ask the Minister to put it on record tonight that the Northern Ireland Office will fight tooth and nail to retain the premium scheme. I hope that he will not come back to the House with a diluted scheme and tell us that Ministers could not get all that they wanted but that they have got a little. It is vital that we should know and that it should be spelt out here tonight, where the Northern Ireland Ministers stand on this issue. It is not enough to say that Ministers will fight for us. We want to know that they are totally committed to the scheme. To lose it would be a disaster. Even if we do not lose it, we shall face many serious problems.

I ask the Minister to give us some assurance on those points. There seems to be an effort by Europe to change the traditions of the United Kingdom. The beef industry is largely concerned with heifer beef. As the Minister will know, heifer beef does not go into intervention. It is the steers that go into intervention. He will also be aware that the premium is paid on the whole carcase, but that it is only certain quarters—and at certain times of the year only parts of those quarters—that go into intervention. I ask the Minister for a full commitment on that issue.

This is a debate in which one can wander from Dan to Beersheba. I want, thirdly to wander to Kilkeel for a moment. What is the Minister doing about the proposal for a new dredger for the Kilkeel fishermen? The Select Committee on Agriculture was informed on Tuesday that an application was made in February 1984 with regard to that dredger. The Agriculture Department approved it, and it is now with the Finance Department. The Fishery Harbour Authority says that if it is not approved by 1 April it will be curtains for the Kilkeel fishermen. What is happening to the proposal? Can the Minister announce that he will do something about it? I am glad that the authority has put the order out to tender in the hope that there will be a favourable answer from the Department. I am also glad that Harland and Wolff is interested in the tender, and that if its bid is no more than 5 per cent. higher than a non-United Kingdom producer it can win the contract. The benefits would therefore be felt by more than the Kilkeel fishermen.

As a constituency Member, I know that there is only one large island with a population off Northern Ireland — Rathlin. At the turn of the century, 1,000 people lived there, and there are now fewer than 100. They have serious difficulties. I know that the various Departments are doing something for them. Perhaps we can have a progress report on the schemes, which I do not want to go into for reasons of time, so that we might know how they are going. I have already spoken to the Minister about an educational problem. I hope to be able to speak to my constituent about it. I trust that it will be resolved satisfactorily.

[Rev. Ian Paisley]

I have spoken of some of the issues on my mind and on my constituents' minds, and I trust that we shall have some profitable answers.

10.32 pm

Mr. Clifford Forsythe (Antrim, South): This is a wide-ranging order. As many hon. Members wish to speak, I shall leave out the padding and get to the nub of what I want to say. I might sound a little disjointed, but I will have to risk that.

Parts of my constituency have problems when designated and undesignated waterways flood and damage houses. When we make inquiries about compensation, we are told that we must prove that there has been negligence on the part of the Department. In one part of my constituency, road drains, which belong to the Department of the Environment, run into a watercourse. Great flooding has been caused by water coming off the road and drainage work done on farmland. They drained farmland and put the water into the watercourse, which promptly flooded. When my constituents tried to get compensation, they were told that it was an undesignated watercourse and there was no way that they could be given any.

In one part, Housing Executive houses were flooded from a watercourse. People were told that they would have to prove that it flooded because of negligence by the Department. One of the families concerned was on supplementary benefit, with no household insurance. The Housing Executive had no insurance which covered this, and the department refused to pay any compensation.

I would ask the Minister how one is expected to do something for one's constituents in that sort of instance. The whole question of designated and undesignated watercourses should be looked at.

Street lights have been mentioned, and they are a favourite topic of certain people in Northern Ireland. I will not go into this because it would take too long, but in one instance I was used as a shuttlecock between the Department of the Environment and the electricity service, and it took me five days to get a rapair done. I never discovered whose fault it was that the repair was not done more quickly—I was only too pleased to get it done eventually.

Mr. Beggs: I am sure that my hon. Friend would agree that when a Member takes up any problem for a constituent with any Government Department it should be resolved by the Department concerned, not handed back to the Member so that he has to shuttle round the Departments to find which is responsible. It is about time that Departments knew where responsibility lies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Forsythe: I agree, of course, but, since I have been in business in the past and have been used to lifting telephones to resolve problems, perhaps part of that difficulty was caused by me.

Everyone is getting very excited, quite rightly, about the lignite that we have in Northern Ireland. Part of that lignite is in my constituency an there are people living in the Crumlin area who are uneasy about some of the developments in connection with this and the envisaged new power station. I have not had the greatest response from the private firm which is looking after the operation, and I am very disappointed about this.

Dr. Boyson: The operation of the mining is under a contract laid down by the Department and the firm has to comply with that. If there are problems concerning the mining, these should be taken up, so that the conditions laid down for mining there or elsewhere in the Province do not put people at risk. The firm will be taking out the lignite within the terms which have been stipulated by the Department, which, as far as I am concerned, has heard nothing whatsoever about this.

Mr. Forsythe: I told the Minister on one occasion that I wanted to speak to him about the lignite operation, and he said that I could certainly do so. I was endeavouring to look after the interests of my constituents and deal with the matter between them and the firm. I will not go into the matter now, but will explain to the Minister what I mean.

When all this comes to fruition and we are looking to use the lignite in our area, I will do my best to see that my constituents are not disadvantaged in any way, although we welcome this operation.

Will the Minister explain why there is a decrease in current expenditure on public transport and other services? I notice that money is allowed for airport services. While on occasions the bus may not be used to go to the airport, Aldergrove airport is one of the most up-to-date and finest airports in the whole of the United Kingdom, with tremendous facilities. It would be unfortunate if, in criticising the bus service, the impression was given that the airport itself was being criticised. I am sure that that was not the intention of my hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth).

One could speak for hours about Class V, which I promise not to do. Heating is put into old people's dwellings, but I remind the Minister that old people also live in ordinary dwellings. We have the unfortunate situation where old people living in old people's dwellings have heating put in, but next door to them, someone who is just as old does not get heating put in because the house is not an old people's dwelling. The Minister should consider that.

District heating has also been mentioned. The difficulty with that system is that people who have radiators are not using them but are being charged pounds every week. They get into arrears, not because they are doing anything to get into arrears, but because of the fixed price charged by the Housing Executive. If they try to move out of their home, and get a transfer, because of the arrears that they have built up by not using the heating, they cannot move. That is a tragedy for people, and one should look at it.

In one case I know, the heating system broke down. The old people were told that the system would have to be replaced. However, that was not done. They were told that they would have to wait until a scheme was devised to cover all the houses that were the same as theirs, then the heating system would be put in their home and all the others—regardless of the fact they they had no heating and that they were bringing in Super-Sers and electric heaters that were costing them a fortune to run because they were not designed for the job.

One has criticised the Housing Executive. At times it does a good job. It builds homes, although perhaps not the right ones on occasions. We should not give the impression that we are continually criticising it for the fun of the thing. But these are human beings, who are living in what is supposed to be a home. They should be treated properly by the body that has been put there by statute to look after them, consisting of people who are sitting in a comfortably heated office all day and who on occasions will not answer the phone. Constituents' Members of Parliament have to phone up to get an answer. This is a democratic and understanding House. Even civil servants have a little sympathy, although at times it appears as if they do not.

It is not a laughing matter, or a funny matter for someone who is in a disadvantaged position in life, and who finds it difficult to live, never mind heat his home, or get food to live on. For whatever reason, if such people are put at a disadvantage by a statutory body that is supposed to be there to assist them, that is a disgrace not only to the body concerned but to those who are answerable in the House. The Minister is here to answer. When we ask questions we are told by the Minister that it is a matter for the Housing Executive. When public representatives ask the Minister to do something for those who are disadvantaged he should take notice of them. If we had much more time we could raise many more problems for Ministers to deal with.

Mr. Peter Robinson (Belfast, East): The hon. Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe) referred to the heating of old people's houses. I do not know whether he was aware of it, but there was a mass lobby from the National Pensioners Convention at the House today. One of the requests placed before Members of Parliament was for a higher heating allowance so that they might have some relief from the cold winter. Many senior citizens in my constituency spend between one quarter and one third of their weekly income on trying to keep themselves warm. They pray to survive the winter so that in the summer they may save money for clothes. The Minister should show compassion for the senior citizens who have done so much to pave the way for the youth of today. I trust they will not be forgotten in their later years.

Another way in which the Government could help senior citizens is to allow them to travel free on buses. We heard earlier from the hon. Member for Antrim, South about empty buses driving up and down from the airport. The same thing happens in the city centre, yet I know senior citizens who have to walk to their destination with the aid of a walking stick because they cannot pay the concessionary rate on the buses. I do not often refer to what happens in London as an example, but the Minister responsible for the Department of the Environment would do well to emulate its system of free transport for the elderly.

The pensioners today raised other matters, including a realistic pension allowance. As that concerns the Chancellor of the Exchequer, I shall not go into it now. The Government should deal sympathetically with the petition which was lodged with Members of Parliament by the senior citizens who came to the House today.

I have had consultations on education with the hon. Member for North Down (Mr. Kilfedder), to whose constituency I am about to refer. He gave me some papers so that I might speak on his behalf, because he is ill and unable to be here. The matter refers to the second largest housing estate in Northern Ireland, the Ballybeen housing estate at Dundonald. The hon. Member for North Down and I have a common interest in the area, as it forms part of my Assembly constituency. Indeed, I formerly represented it when I came to the House in 1979. The estate has two schools within it. One of them is Ballyoran primary school. Many of us were amazed when the South Eastern Education Library Board proposed to close that school. We could see no logical reason for closing it. We recognised that more children attended that school than attended many other schools which the board was happy to keep open.

We also recognised that that school's educational standards were much higher than those of other schools in the board's area. We knew that there would only be a minimal saving, in that the board had already suggested that the school should be used for some other purpose, such as for nursery education or for youth provision. It now appears that the saving amounts to £25,000. For £25,000, the board has decided to close that school.

I must charge the South Eastern Educational Library Board with being guilty of an act of blatant discrimination and of bias of a most sectarian nature against the predominantly Protestant area of Ballybeen. I have documents in my possession, and in my hand, which clearly show that the school is being closed for one purpose and one purpose alone—to obtain £25,000, so that the board can fund another primary school, which happens to be St. Kieran's primary school in Poleglass. That relatively new housing estate on the fringes of West Belfast — which is small compared with that of Ballybeen—is to be given the money to have a primary school. Those who are to be punished are the Protestants of the East Belfast and North Down area.

As if that was not bad enough, it was appalling to discover that, although the board has for years recognised that there is a need for nursery and youth provision in the area, it has given additional money, not to Ballybeen for that provision, but to St. Kieran's for nursery provision in the Poleglass area. Thus, a primary school will be taken away from Ballybeen, and instead of giving the nursery provision to Ballybeen in its place, it is being given to St. Kieran's.

I know that the Minister does not have direct responsibility for the board's day-to-day affairs, but he has overall responsibility for its actions. Under the provisions of the Northern Ireland Constitution Act, which forbids such religious and political discrimination against my constituents and those of the hon. Member for North Down, I hope that the Minister will look into the board's activities and ensure that it makes provision for the need which it has already recognised, instead of making provision for the Roman Catholics, Republicans and IRA supporters of the Poleglass area.

Mr. James Nicholson (Newry and Armagh): I was prepared to condense a half-hour speech into one of 15 minutes, but now I find that I shall have to condense it even more. I shall do my best. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe), I may have to make a somewhat disjointed speech, but I hope that hon. Members will bear with me.

I turn first to the employment, or lack of employment, in my constituency. Once again I must castigate the Industrial Development Board, and to a lesser extent the Local Enterprise Development Unit, for the total failure to bring any employment to my constituency or to provide any jobs. They have shown a lack of interest in the area, and have been unable to provide anything. The IDB has been a dead loss, and although LEDU has been somewhat of an improvement on that, that does not say an awful lot for it.

I am concerned about employment in the area. I am only too well aware, however, that the events of last Thursday night in Newry cannot enhance the area's reputation and might deter employers from setting up in it. The Government and others will have to cope with that in due course.

I shall have to dispense with much of what I had intended to say about the roads in my constituency. I regret that the Under-Secretary of State is not here tonight, because I was looking forward to crossing swords with him regarding the Damolly customs post. Or perhaps he was aware of that, and that is why he is not here.

The hon. Gentleman was led up the garden path. He came to Newry one afternoon in a blaze of glory and went on television to tell the whole of Northern Ireland that he had solved the problem of the customs station in Newry. He was led up the garden path by the SDLP-controlled council on his visit to Newry. The people of Damolly were left high and dry and the vast majority of the elected representatives in the area do not agree with the Under-Secretary's decision.

He capitulated, first to the SDLP and secondly to the Provisional Sinn Fein, the latter of which challenged him not to put the customs post where it should have been put, which was on the border. I feel strongly about this issue, especially for the people of the Damolly area. It is a mixed community and every member of it is up in arms about the decision over the customs station and the fact that the new link road is to go through the area. I look forward to crossing swords with the Minister on the issue on another occasion.

Time does not permit me to raise various matters concerning the Housing Executive. I will confine myself to appealing for more old people's dwellings in the Armagh area. They need accommodation much nearer to the city centre than where the Housing Executive is currently building houses, which is almost one and a half miles outside the town; and the elderly do not have a bus service to get into the centre.

Housing Executive grant officers are seeing people throughout the Province, but they are interpreting the rules differently in almost every area. One will tell people that they do not qualify for renovation grant while a second officer will tell people living nearby with similar problems that they do qualify for grant. Alternatively, an officer will tell somebody that grant is payable, and another officer will appear on the scene later to say that grant is not applicable. Indeed, people have to put up a hard fight to obtain grant. If we are to have grant officers, they should interpret the rules correctly and Members of Parliament should not have to be called in almost daily to resolve difficulties.

Hon. Members will be aware that I frequently speak about agriculture. I will restrict my remarks, because of the time, to saying that I agree with the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley) about the milk quota. With regard to the beef variable premium, not enough is being done for that sector and the Government have not lived up to what was expected of them in trying to obtain cheaper grain for that sector of agriculture in Northern Ireland.

I urge the Government not to ignore the importanc animal health in Northern Ireland. Strict control is nee

There are 70 miles between Newry and the entry at Belcoo. Cattle are in danger because of that distan I know of one man who sat for 10 hours in a queu Belcoo at the beginning of this week with cattle on wagon. He had travelled for hours before that. If tha not to the detriment of the animals I do not know wha Something is wrong. It is disgraceful.

Mr. Stuart Bell (Middlesbrough): I am pleased to able to reply on behalf of the Opposition. I shall not be to comment on all the speeches. The Minister will be to do that better than I can. I shall not be able to emu the blaze of glory in which the Minister visited constituency represented by the hon. Member for Ne and Armagh (Mr. Nicholson).

The Minister talked about the economy of North Ireland and about unemployment and employment. rightly took credit for the fact that public expenditure Northern Ireland would be £30 million higher than level planned. It is not that he has got blood out of a sto he did better than that. He extracted money out of Chief Secretary to the Treasury. The Minister declared this was further evidence of the Governme determination to tackle the economic and social proble in Northern Ireland at a time when public expendit elsewhere in the United Kingdom is being held.

The Minister rightly said that, whereas betw February 1983 and February 1984 the increase unemployment was 7,800, between February 1984 February 1985 the increase in unemployment was 4 However, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Mem for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) said, that means that extra 420 able-bodied people are looking for work.

The Minister spoke with compassion about unemployed. I accept that compassion. I accept his v that no one wishes to see the scourge of unemployme Northern Ireland or on the mainland. The Minister i compassionate man. He also made my right hon. learned Friend the Member for Warley, West an of which he almost could not refuse. He offered harmony bipartisanship, but my right hon. and learned Friend not in as harmonious a mood as that.

Industrial production in Northern Ireland has increa by 3 per cent., and manufacturing output is up by 4 cent. A further sign of recovery is the increase employment of 4,170 in the third and fourth quarters 1984. We welcome the increase in industrial producti and manufacturing output, and the increase in the num of those who are employed, but that does not mean t the storm cloud of uncertainty is any more dissipated Northern Ireland than it is on the mainland.

Independent commentators and job creation agencies Northern Ireland appear to be agreed on another aspect the Northern Ireland economy—that unemployment remain high for years to come. Indeed, when I read forecasts earlier, I was reminded of the 1933 Budget Neville Chamberlain. He predicted for both North Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom t unemployment would remain high for years to come hear echoes of that speech in most of the statements ma by Government spokesmen on Treasury and econo matters. Neville Chamberlain said that there was a li to what Government could do. I do not suggest that th views were put forward by the Minister tonight, but they are the views of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and they attach to the economies of Northern Ireland and of the rest of the United Kingdom.

The two most recent surveys carried out in Northern Ireland show that jobs will be lost more rapidly than they will be replaced, and that unemployment is likely to reach a total of 140,000 by 1989. At Question Time today, I wondered out loud whether those who find work in Northern Ireland are part-time or full-time workers. The Minister replied that while they may be part-time jobs, they are better than no jobs, and that part-time jobs may be converted into full-time jobs. However, it is recognised that because employers do not pay national insurance on part-time workers, but do pay on full-time workers, there is a cost-cutting incentive to employ part-time rather than full-time workers. The surveys show that there are in excess of 100,000 people working part-time in Northern Ireland. In 1978, part-time work accounted for 17 per cent. of the total work force, but it now accounts for nearly 22 per cent.

We cannot distinguish this order from the consequences of the medium-term financial strategy of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He is not present tonight, and he has that in common with our colleagues in the Social Democratic/Liberal alliance. I make no criticism of that. They are rarely present for these debates. The Labour party is present, with solid ranks on the Front Bench.

Rev. Martin Smyth: Only two.

Mr. Bell: Those two may be the great talent of the Labour party in years to come. Two are better than none, and no hon. Member from either the Liberal party or the SDP is present.

The medium-term financial strategy affects Northern Ireland as it does the mainland. That strategy is a sort of ghost that runs through this order. The Chancellor is seeking to squeeze inflation from the economy and at the same time to create growth and jobs. The Opposition believe that those objectives are mutually exclusive and will no more work for the Northern Irish economy than they will for that on the mainland.

Housing has been mentioned tonight. The Minister referred to a visit by hon. Members from both sides of the House, who were encouraged by what they had seen being done about housing. I am no expert on housing in Northern Ireland, but on my visit I spoke to members of the Housing Department, visited houses and was impressed at the progress made, considering the problems.

Housing remains the Government's top priority on social and environmental programmes, and we welcome that. We recognise that the immediate environment of a person is part and parcel of his way of life. That is as true in Northern Ireland as it is on the mainland, but there has been a shift in emphasis away from new public sector house building towards the improvement and maintenance of existing stock. The preliminary results of the 1984 house condition survey show that the level of unfitness has fallen from 14·1 per cent. in 1979 to 10·4 per cent. last year. In 1981 the unfitness level in Great Britain was 6·2 per cent. In Northern Ireland, more than 51,000 houses were still unfit. The number of homes lacking at least one basic amenity has also descreased, from 19·9 per cent. to 9·2 per cent.

The worrying feature of the survey is disrepair in the private sector, which increased from 8·6 per cent. in 1979 to 15·4 per cent. in 1984. As I understand it, the Government propose to reduce new Housing Executive construction from 3,000 new starts last year to 2,250 for 1985-86. The Housing Executive will concentrate instead on the improvement and maintenance programme. The expenditure on housing services is planned to increase from £149 million in 1984-85 to £169 million in 1985-86.

The Northern Ireland Economic Council questioned this change in strategy and made the following comment in its annual report for 1983-84:

> "The available statistics do not show clearly whether this switch is justified. On the one hand, the census results suggest a housing surplus; on the other hand, the Housing Executive still has a waiting list of 20,000."

The council suggests that a mismatch may exist in terms of location or type of accommodation between the supply of and demand for, public housing. The latest Government figures show that the Housing Executive's waiting list is getting longer. There were 23,482 people on the list in March 1984, and 24,543 in September 1984.

In the 13th annual report of the Housing Executive, the chairman stated:

> "Whether this shift in policy"— away from new build—

> "will prove to be correct must depend to a large extent on the willingness and ability of the private sector to fill the gap by providing a sustained programme of new low-cost housing of acceptable quality."

Experience gives little cause for optimism on that front. In 1982, 4,487 new starts were recorded in the private sector, but only 2,672 new dwellings were completed. In 1983 there were 6,892 new starts, and only 3,571 completions. We can see the comparison. Moreover, it should not be forgotten that the Houseing Executive's target of an annual reduction of at least 1 per cent. in the unfitness level has not been met. Therefore, while we scrutinise the figures in Class V, as we scrutinise all of the elements in the order, we shall continue to examine these matters carefully in the months to come.

Mr. J. Enoch Powell: The hon. Gentleman might wish to know that the Department of the Environment has accepted that the comparative statistics for the commencement and completion of houses are seriously inaccurate, and that the picture given by figures such as the hon. Gentleman has just read to the House is inherently misleading. It hopes to be able to produce correct figures for completions, which will put the picture in a different light.

Mr. Bell: I welcome the right hon. Gentleman's intervention. If that is the case, we shall look forward to a different perspective on the figures that we have before us now.

May I refer briefly to the intervention of the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley). He is worried about the implications for Northern Ireland of the price proposals of the Commission for 1985-86 as they relate to beef. In addition to the persistently high level of unemployment in Northern Ireland, which is about 22 per cent., there is the employment potential of the agriculture industry, which employs 10 per cent. of the work force directly, and which provides employment for a further 3 per cent. in ancillary industries. Therefore, what the European Community proposes to do about beef is important to Northern Ireland and we shall give to the hon. Member and to all those who are worried about this issue all the support that we can.

[Mr. Bell]

We shall not vote against the Appropriation (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, but we shall continue to ride hard on the Government on this issue as it relates to Northern Ireland as we will on the economy as a whole.

11.15 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Nicholas Scott): Clearly it is impossible, in the time now available, to cover all the points that have been raised during the debate. However, I hope that the House will agree that it was right that we should allow as many contributions to be made from the Back Benches as possible. I shall ensure that either I or my colleagues reply in due course to the detailed points which have been made that I am unable to cover. I say in particular to the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley) that I shall ensure he receives a co-ordinated reply on the approach of the Government to the undoubted problems facing the community on Rathlin as well as on the narrower educational point that he raised.

May I begin by saying a word about the point made by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth), which I understand forms the basis of the decision of the Ulster Unionist party to vote against the order. The arrangements which he criticised for the financial management of Northern Ireland are not new. He must know that Northern Ireland has had separate legislation and a separate Consolidated Fund for the last 60 years. There is no secret or hidden reason why the Government decided to continue with these arrangements. I know that there are those who assert that there is, but I can assure the hon. Member that that is not so.

We continue to believe that a devolved Government would best meet the future needs of the Northern Ireland community. As the House knows, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is engaged in talks with the parties to find out whether it is possible to work out mutually acceptable arrangements. I know that some hon. Members have reservations about that policy, but that is what this Government, with the support of this House, are seeking to do. Viewed in that light, I believe that the financial and legislative arrangements for Northern Ireland are appropriate and sensible.

A number of hon. Members raised detailed questions about the roads programme. I shall make sure that they receive replies. In particular, the hon. Member for Mid-Ulster (Rev. William McCrea) asked about the maintenance programme. Within the £48·4 million which was provided for this programme, priority is given to the structural maintenance of the existing network. The budget allocations for this work to each division are closely correlated with the annual data on the condition of the entire roads network in Northern Ireland. A system known as the maintenance assessment rating and costing of highways, or MARCH, which is used on this side of the water in order to make an objective judgment of the needs of the roads system, is used in Northern Ireland. I believe that in general it gives us very good value for money. There is an appropriate allocation of the limited but still substantial resources that are available for highway maintenance.

The hon. Member for Antrim, North made three separate points under the broad heading of agriculture and fisheries. I can assure the hon. Member and the House that Northern Ireland has received the full benefit of the 65,00 tonnes of milk from the Community reserve, plus a additional amount from the United Kingdom total. Th percentage amount by which the Northern Ireland quot was less than the 1983 deliveries would be no more tha in other regions of the United Kingdom, even thoug deliveries of milk in Northern Ireland increase proportionately more between 1981 and 1983 tha deliveries in England and Wales. Northern Irelan received a quota about 12·6 per cent. above wholesal deliveries in 1981 and 2·5 per cent. above that for 1982 which was a record year. In England and Wales the quot represents an increase of only 1·5 per cent. on 198 deliveries and a reduction of over 3 per cent. on 198 deliveries. I do not think that Northern Ireland can clai that it has not received the full benefit of the 65,00 tonnes. If this is continued for 1985—I believe that will be—Northern Ireland can look forward next year t similar treatment.

The hon. Member for Antrim, North referred to th beef variable premium scheme. I can assure him that m right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisherie and Food will be pressing strongly for the scheme' continuation. We are conscious of its importance to th agriculture industry in the Province. He spoke also of th Kilkeel dredger. I am told that the project is bein appraised in terms of the normal procedures for a projec of that nature. We have noted the hon. Gentleman' remarks about the need for urgency and speed i considering the matter. I can assure him that the appraisa will be completed in the very near future.

The right hon. and learned Member for Warley, Wes (Mr. Archer) made great play about the treatment of thos who owe money to public authorities in Northern Ireland He seemed to imply that we were being unduly harsh an unsympathetic. I urge him and the House to recognise tha public debt in Northern Ireland at the end of 1983-84 wa about £45 million. That is an absurdly high figure for province the size of Northern Ireland. It is one that ha been the subject of criticism by the Public Account Committee. It was essential that we took urgent action t get debt to public authorities under control. The right hon and learned Gentleman omitted to mention that many o those who are in debt to the authorities avail themselve of the opportunity to enter into voluntary repaymen agreements. It is only those who decline to enter into suc agreements who are subject to the scheme to which th right hon. and learned Gentleman referred.

Mr. Archer: Is the Minister saying that no one i subjected to the Payment of Debt Act if he subjects himsel voluntarily to a repayment agreement?

Mr. Scott: If they comply with the conditions of th scheme, there is no reason why they should be subjecte to the last-resort mechanism. I can assure the House tha the mechanism is operated as humanely as possible. I includes a review procedure to ensure that excessiv hardship can be avoided. Given the scale of the problen that is faced by the Government in Northern Ireland, w have tried to tackle it in a humane and compassionat manner. However, we are responsible for public mone and the PAC has criticised the Government for allowin the level of debt to reach such a level.

The House will be aware of the cancellation of th Kinsale gas project. The subsidy was running at £1 million a year and there was not even a distant prospect of the project becoming viable. There was a possibility of the subsidy, and even an increased one, continuing indefinitely. The gas industry's joint working party has proposed a revised option that is confined to greater Belfast and its satellites. It involves much lower capital costs than the cancelled project. We have not received the scheme officially. When it is received, we shall have to consider how it can be evaluated. We are told that there is a possibility of European Community support for any such scheme. We shall have to appraise it carefully, as will the Commission, to ascertain whether it is viable. I cannot see that we could possibly enter into any commitment for a continuing subsidy for the gas industry in Northern Ireland.

A number of hon. Members' comments on health and social services in Northern Ireland might have led some listeners to believe that in some way we were cutting back on health and social care in the Province. That is the reverse of the truth. Over the four years from 1979-80 to 1983-84, expenditure on those services has grown from £353 million to £600 million—some 70 per cent. in cash terms and 8 per cent. in real terms. This is the clearest possible evidence that, despite our economic problems and the inevitable constraints on public expenditure, we are committed to the maintenance and development of health and personal social services to meet the needs of the whole population.

I understand the point made by the hon. Member for Belfast, South—it is important that we spend that money as wisely as we can. That is why my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State has asked the health and social service boards to make what I regard as modest efficiency savings of 0·5 per cent. per annum—not so that that money can be cut, but so that it can be put into vital new developments in health and social services and to meet the new needs that are emerging. By making the system more efficient and by not allowing administration to burgeon, we can provide a better service to those who need it.

The hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) made serious allegations about the motives of the South Eastern education library board in closing the Ballyoran primary school. The matter had to come to me to approve the closure. The closure was not carried out on anything like the grounds that the hon. Gentleman described. In fact, there were two schools on that estate. The closure occurred not to ensure financial savings but primarily to ensure that the children at the school got the proper spread of curriculum necessary for their education. If the hon. Gentleman feels that he can substantiate those serious allegations, he should without hesitation or delay let me see the evidence that he claims is in his possession.

The hon. Member for Mid-Ulster drew attention to the critical findings of the inspectorate report on the effect of expenditure policies. He did not draw attention to the fact that the report concluded that, by an large, educational standards in schools are being maintained. I am as aware as anyone of the pressures on the education system in Northern Ireland, but I still think that education is a feature of life in the Province of which teachers, administrators and others involved can be extremely proud.

The hon. Member for Belfast, North (Mr. Walker) talked about the dangers of integrating nursery provision with primary schools. Nursery provision is extremely close to my heart. I hope that in due course it will be possible to have an expanded programme of nursery education in Northern Ireland, but in the meantime I believe that joint provision of the sort that the hon. Gentleman was criticising can play an important part in nursery education for many of the young people who need it.

Many hon. Members rightly expressed their concern at the level of unemployment in Northern Ireland. As the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) recognised, the Government fully share their concern. I assure hon. Members that the overall strategy is designed to create the circumstances in which the private sector will develop and thus create new job opportunities for people in Northern Ireland.

We do not have endless resources in Northern Ireland. Public expenditure already amounts to 70 per cent. of the gross national product of the Province. With limited resources, it is important that we optimise the use of those that are allocated to us. One of the most useful contributions that Northern Ireland Members can make to these debates is to address the priorities and the way in which we are using these resources. It is easy and tempting for hon. Members to identify gaps in provision. Doubtless there are gaps representing needs which should be met, but they are to be met within limited budgets. Hon. Members have to identify also what can be done less lavishly or with less money.

Northern Ireland will never be able to flourish simply on the basis of a massive public expenditure injection of funds.

We must provide a safety net for the people of Northern Ireland. I believe that we do that effectively, efficiently and with compassion, but we must also provide a springboard. I hope that public money can provide that springboard, but eventually it is the people of Northern Ireland and private enterprise that will have to turn the springboard into a reality in terms of increased living standards for the people of the Province.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this Ho do now adjourn.—[Mr. Major.]

11.40 pm

Mr. Roy Mason (Barnsley, Central): The aim of debate is to obtain justice for those coalminers who, du this long dispute, have been arrested, photograph fingerprinted and either discharged or taken to court acquitted. They are all innocent men who now want to fully satisfied that their names are clean and that t characters are without blemish: in short, that they have criminal record. All of them, to date 1,416 men, have right to witness the destruction of their photograph fingerprint records.

According to the Attorney-General's figures, wh were given to the House on 25 February, another 2,4 cases remain to be heard. There could therefore hundreds more such as I have described. Why has all come about? I believe that it is because of indiscrimin mass arrests. No fewer than 9,750 people have b arrested. The police, perhaps fearing riotous assembly having spent a few years in Northern Ireland I well kn the meaning of it—have dispatched snatch squads take out the front men. They are not necessarily agitato but men who happen to be in the front line of the m picket. Indiscriminately, scores per day have been pick up and processed like sausages. That is one method defusing the situation. There has then been conveyor-b justice at almost every stage of their journey through courts.

Home Office statistics supplied by the police prov substance to the claim that blanket arrests have been ma among legal pickets and without proper evidence. Of 7,223 arrests recorded until 9 October 1984, 1,354 min were released from police stations without being charg National and provincial newspapers have been full stories of miners being taken to court in their hundre and being cleared. The Sheffield Morning Telegraph 10 October 1984 ran the headline:

"Miners cleared of unlawful assembly"

"Seven miners accused of offences during a blockade of M1 in north Derbyshire were acquitted by a jury yesterday af a fortnight-long trial. The jury at Derby Crown Court took m than four hours to clear the South Yorkshire miners who fac 13 charges, including the centuries-old offence of unlaw assembly."

The Guardian of 9 February 1985 reported:

"Striking miners cleared of picket charges. Eight striki miners were acquitted by a jury yesterday of unlawful assem during the pit dispute . . . The defence claimed that the m were arrested as a result of a police order to take prisoners rat than because of unlawful behaviour on their part."

The Guardian of 27 February 1985 reported:

"Arrests questioned as pickets go free. The police yesterd dropped charges of unlawful assembly against 23 So Yorkshire miners among 87 arrested during a mass picket Harworth colliery in north Nottinghamshire last August . . . M Craig"—

the men's solicitor—

"said that since August the men 'have been prevented fr picketing except at their own place of work. Now the cases being dropped wholesale. It makes the defence, the defenda and the union wonder why they were arrested in the first pla It suggests that the powers that be decided to use wholesale b conditions and wholesale arrests as a device to keep people picket lines.'"

The Yorkshire Post of 27 February 1985, under the heading "Picket cases dropped", said:

"Police were yesterday accused of using mass arrests, and rigid bail conditions to prevent picketing after charges of unlawful assembly against 21 South Yorkshire miners were formally dismissed."

Their solicitor, Mr. Alan Craig, said:

"This case is likely to make legal history in Nottinghamshire. I know of no other case where men facing such serious charges have had them all dropped. It is completely extraordinary."

Provincial paper after provincial paper said the same. The Sheffield Telegraph, in the heart of the Yorkshire coal field, under the heading "Unlawful assembly charges are dropped", referring again to those 21 south Yorkshire miners, said:

"Mr. Craig criticised the circumstances in which the men were arrested. 'They were battle-charged, chased and eventually rounded up in a field, arrested willy-nilly and brought to Mansfield court in the dead of the night to face extremely harsh charges."

So there we are—mass arrests, it cannot be disputed, and all innocent men. Those police methods were suspect, are suspect, and must be challenged in future, especially by an inquiry. Therefore, one can understand the National Union of Mineworkers' call for an amnesty.

Of the 9,750 people arrested, 1,416 were acquitted of all charges, and there may well be many more. The nature of the charge was that 4,089 of them were likely to cause a breach of the peace — they were stopped on the Queen's highway. We all remember the nonsense of the Dartford Tunnel, when 1,682 men were arrested for obstructing a police constable—old-fashioned picket-line pushing, a shove at a bobby, resulting again in mass arrests. These were not criminal acts, but just the normal activities of picketing now well known and established in Great Britain. Yet many hundreds of these men have been sacked by the NCB, their future ruined, thrown on the dole — and in many mining communities that means for good.

These police methods of mass arrests were the cause, and that is why there is legitimacy in the demand for an amnesty. There is no doubt that the methods of strike policing will have to be reviewed. Although the Government may well feel happy at the outcome, there is no doubt about the bitterness in our mining villages and towns over the methods used against the miners. It will take time for the wounds of the conflict between our mining communities and the police to heal. An inquiry only into what lessons the police can learn from the strike is of no use to the NUM, or indeed to society at large. There is need — indeed, an urgent need — for an independent public inquiry into the whole of police activity during the past 12 months of the coalmining dispute.

This is also true of clearing the records of the 1,416 innocent men. Solicitors on behalf of the men have written to me, and I shall quote from one of the letters:

"The taking of fingerprints by the police is not of course, peculiar to the miners arrested in the NUM/NCB dispute but the strike has highlighted the present unsatisfactory situation.

Upon arrest all miners were automatically finger-printed by the police. The men were not allowed to see a solicitor at this stage and were not, until later on in the strike, aware that they could object to having their fingerprints taken. Most miners were charged with minor offences of police and highway obstruction and threatening words and behaviour (e.g. shouting 'scab')— the sort of offence where fingerprints are not needed. . .

It is worth noting that there is no such thing as a photgraph order—despite this when taking fingerprints the police also take a photograph of the defendant. . .

A number of Chief Constables have stated publicly that they would like to have the whole populace finger-printed. By fingerprinting everyone who is charged (even though that person may later be acquitted) this helps the police a little nearer this goal.

The widespread taking of fingerprints by the police is an infringement of civil liberties. Parliament has not yet legislated that the whole country must be fingerprinted and it is, therefore, wrong for the police to endeavour to achieve their ends by this back door method."

That is just not good enough. Miners were photographed, some of them twice, and fingerprinted without permission. It is all wrong. Nor have they been given the opportunity to see their photographs and fingerprint records destroyed. That is wrong, too. They are on file in a police station. They might also be on the police national computer, staying there for ever if there is not destruction of their records. None of those men and their families will have a chance of getting a credit card, of being able to borrow money or of buying goods on hire purchase. They will be listed as a credit risk, men with a criminal record.

What of the senior police officers asking the Home Office to allow the use of the police national computer to store a special register of criminal incidents in mining areas? The Association of Chief Police Officers is interested in new categories of offences and may want to use the computer register to identify new categories of agitators — the political agitator and the industrial agitator. Hence the first national list compiled with help from the chief constables in the coal mining areas of political and industrial agitators. If the records remain of some of those 1,416 innocent men, and are so recorded on the national computer, they will be blackballed for life.

The Home Secretary is, I believe, in sympathy with my objective. Indeed, in a letter to me on 4 February 1985, he said in answer to representations from Owen Briscoe, the general secretary of the Yorkshire area of the NUM:

"At present there is no legal requirement that fingerprints and photographs should be destroyed if a person is acquitted or the case not proceeded with, nor is there any requirement that a person should be given the opportunity to witness destruction."

But the right hon. and learned Gentleman went on to say:

"It is, however, general police practice at present to destroy fingerprints and photographs if a person is acquitted or his case is not proceeded with and also to allow him to witness destruction."

In the light of those words, I now ask the Minister and the Home Secretary to make sure that the men can see justice done and that all chief constables are asked to send all the acquitted men's records to the police station nearest their homes, inform them, and allow them to go and see their records destroyed. That will be the first step to restore a good, healthy working relationship in mining communities, between police and public, between bobby and miner, and will create an atmosphere in which progress can be made on an amnesty between the area boards and the local unions. By that means the police can play a positive part in bringing peace in our coalfields. The Minister and the Home Secretary can give a lead. I hope that they will take this opportunity of doing so.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Giles Shaw): The right hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Mason), who is both courteous and well-informed on these matters, has raised a serious issue to which I hope that I shall be able to give a reasonably serious response. He has brought the debate before the House at a time when a major dispute—the longest-running dispute of all time in United Kingdom industry—has now come to an end. It is appropriate that this evening we look at steps that should now be taken to return both policing and the industry to the normal terms of reference to which the right hon. Gentleman, and I am sure the entire House, would fully subscribe.

I remind the right hon. Gentleman that the dispute had seen some of the largest police operations ever, but operations against some of the most intimidatory and vicious tactics ever. Every police force in England and Wales has either provided or received aid and on occasion as many as 8,000 officers have been deployed on mutual aid.

I must use this occasion to pay tribute to those who have ensured that intimidatory practice — not normal picketing, as I am sure the right Gentleman would agree —did not succeed in preventing from doing so those miners who wished to exercise their right to go to work. Given the scale of the violence and the intimidation and the number of pickets involved in the dispute, the police have had to use their powers to arrest offenders and, where possible, to prosecute them.

The extent to which the police have had to have recourse to the use of powers is an indication of the very scale of the violence they have met. As the right hon. Gentleman said, nearly 10,000 people have been arrested in connection with the dispute; nearly 8,000 have been charged; over 5,500 have been dealt with by the courts. Of the cases dealt with to date there have been some 1,400 acquittals as the right hon. Gentleman pointed out. Of course, there are cases, including some of the most serious charges, still to be heard by the courts. As these figures show, the fact of arrest by no means indicates certainty of prosecution. Let me briefly describe the courses which can be taken after someone is arrested.

To arrest a person for an offence, the police must have reasonable suspicion of the commission of an offence for which a power of arrest exists. When a person has been arrested, the police have three broad choices: they can take no further action against him; they can caution him formally; or they can charge and prosecute him. To issue a formal caution the police would need to be satisfied of three factors: that there was sufficient evidence to justify prosecution; that the person admitted the offence; and that he consented to the issue of the caution. To charge someone, the police would have to be satisfied that there was sufficient evidence to justify the prosecution. It is important to make the point that a higher standard of evidence is required for prosecution than for arrest.

The Attorney-General's guidelines on criteria for prosecution lay down the test that the evidence should be such that there is a greater prospect of conviction than acquittal; it must also be in the public interest that the person should be prosecuted. But even when a person has been charged it is still possible that the charges will be dropped at a later stage.

Perhaps I should also mention at this point the future role which the Crown prosecution service will have. Legislation to create this service will shortly be coming before this House, having completed its passage in another place. The new service will have the duty to review cases where prosecutions have been initiated by the po will have the power to alter or drop charges and it w responsibility for the conduct of the case in court.

Now let me turn to some of the specific points right hon. Gentleman raised. Perhaps I could rel sequence of events to the records which are made police. When a person is arrested, he will usu photographed and fingerprinted. Often two photo may be taken, particularly when a large number of are made at the same time. In such cases, one w Polaroid photograph taken of the arrested person arresting officer. The purpose of this photograp avoid any doubt about which officer arrested person. The other photograph would be a conve photograph taken for local criminal records. The present no legal provision governing the photograp suspects, but there is no bar to the police photographs so long as they do not use force.

The police will also usually take fingerprint purpose of this is to link the person with any p criminal record and to provide for the future a defin between that person and his conviction, should tha result of the case. There is at present no general po the police to take fingerprints, but if a person who h charged refuses to allow his prints to be taken, the may apply to a magistrates court for an order fingerprints.

There are at present no legal obligations on the as to what they must do with fingerprints and photo if a person is cleared or if his case is not proceede But it is, as the right hon. Gentleman acknowl standard police practice that fingerprints and photo should be destroyed in these circumstances. Furthe as my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Se made clear to the right hon. Gentleman, it is usual police to allow the person to witness the destruc these documents if this is requested. That latter was, I understand, temporarily withdraw Nottinghamshire because of the administrative p placed on the police, but I can say that as from the the dispute the force has reverted to the prac acceding to requests to witness destruction. This wil not only to persons acquitted after the end of the but to any other cases where fingerprints and photo are still with the police.

I said that at present there was no legal requiren the police to destroy fingerprints and photographs offer the facility to witness the destruction o documents. But there will be such a requirement future, with the implementation of the main provis the new Police and Criminal Evidence Act at the next year. Section 64 of the Act will requi fingerprints are destroyed if the person is cleared offence or if he is not proceeded against and not cau The Act will give a specific right to the indivi witness their destruction if he so requests. The poli be required to keep the fingerprints for a set, but period of about a month, in order that the person con has the opportunity to witness their destruction. Af period they will be destroyed by the police.

That requirement will be repeated in the c practice on identification. The code will also gov taking of photographs and provide similar obligatio duties on the police in relation to photographs as in to fingerprints. Failure to comply with the provis a code will render a police officer liable to disci proceedings. I believe that underwriting these obligations and duties by law backed up by disciplinary sanctions is a significant and important step forward, and I hope that the right hon. Gentleman will accept that, and will regard these provisions at least as progressive and helpful in relation to the problems that he has outlined to the House.

The right hon. Gentleman raised the issue of the right to witness the destruction of fingerprints. That subject was clearly given substantial attention during the dispute, and tonight's debate will obviously give it further publicity. I have no doubt that the NUM will take whatever steps it considers necessary to keep its members informed of their rights. Again, the code of practice will formalise the suspect's rights, by requiring those fingerprinted or photographed to be told of their right to witness destruction at the time when the fingerprint or photograph is taken.

I do not see that it is necessary, beyond that, to require the police to go through the process of highlighting those rights on each and every occasion after acquittal or after the decision not to proceed, whether or not it is of the slightest interest to the person concerned. We already place substantial burdens on the police, and I am reluctant to do more where it is not specifically needed.

The question of returning the prints to a station at which it would be convenient for the person concerned to witness destruction is, however, a different matter. I fully take the right hon. Gentleman's point that an offer to witness destruction at the other end of the country would contain within it a pretty powerful disincentive against taking up the offer. I have no doubt that, if a chief constable in one part of the country received a request to witness destruction from somebody living in another part of the country, and the prints had not already been destroyed, he would consider sympathetically any suggestion that they be forwarded to a police station that was more convenient for the person concerned. I am sure that the police will accept the sort of proposition that the right hon. Gentleman has put to the House, and I shall certainly draw that point to the attention of the Association of Chief Police Officers. I have reason to believe that it will agree to accept it.

I come to the question of records. The records at Scotland Yard are kept only in relation to recordable offences. These are offences which, broadly speaking, carry liability to imprisonment. Local records are kept in relation to a wider spread of criminal offences. Let me explain first what happens with the national records. When a person is arrested for a recordable offence, the local police notify Scotland Yard of the fact of his arrest. If the person has no previous convictions, a new file is opened in his name and a Criminal Records Office number is allocated to him. If the person is subsequently not prosecuted or is acquitted, that file and the CRO number are destroyed. If, on the other hand, the person does have a previous criminal record, the entry in respect of the offence for which he is arrested has marked against it clearly that he has been acquitted, or the offence has not been proceeded with. I understand that similar arrangements apply in relation to local records.

Let me also say something about the police national computer. The criminal names index on the PNC is, in effect, no more than an index to the central collection of criminal records at Scotland Yard. Although steps are in hand to computerise conviction records, these are not in operation at present. A person will not be identified on the PNC as having a criminal record unless he has a record at Scotland Yard and a CRO number. I have explained that a person with no previous record and who has been acquitted would have his file at Scotland Yard and the CRO number destroyed. At the same time, his CRO number and name would be removed from the police national computer.

I have explained the circumstances in which police records are destroyed and those in which they are kept. The allegation that those records which are kept will be disclosed to credit brokers and other such people is totally without foundation. Police records are confidential and their improper disclosure is an offence against police disciplinary regulations. If the right hon. Gentleman has any evidence to support his view that police information has been disclosed, he should report it to the appropriate chief constable concerned.

I hope that that detailed explanation of the position will satisfy the right hon. Gentleman that the systems and procedures for the retention and destruction of police records are adequate and that they take account of the concerns that he expressed.

I do not believe that it would be right to make any special provision or arrangement in respect of criminal records related purely to offences connected with the miners' dispute. Safeguards are already there and further protection is at hand when the Police and Criminal Evidence Act is implemented.

Moreover, there is no reason why criminal records of offences committed during the dispute should be treated in any different fashion to criminal records in relation to any other criminal offences. Those who have criminal convictions will, however, benefit from the protection which the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act will afford them after the passage of the requisite time. In the case of minor sentences, the rehabilitation period will be relatively short. In the case of heavier sentences, particularly sentences of imprisonment, the rehabilitation periods will be much longer, and a conviction which results in a prison sentence of over two and a half years will never become spent.

In conclusion, I make a simple point. Those who are cleared of criminal offences have a right to expect that police records will not be kept. Those records will not be kept. But those who are convicted of criminal offences can expect that there will be a police record kept on them. That is one of the prices to pay for behaviour which led to their conviction in the first place.

I hope that what I have said will do two things. First, I hope that it will assure the right hon. Gentleman that proper steps will be taken to deal with the specific issues he raised about destruction and the prospects of witnessing such destruction. Secondly, I hope he will agree that, in providing such encouragement to chief police officers to make this an easy proposition now, that will provide a modicum of assistance to achieving the right hon. Gentleman's overriding concern, which is to bring a sense of healing and community back into those areas which have been so heavily afflicted by this ghastly dispute.

I think that he will also agree that, in the longer term, the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act will provide the statutory backing for the kind of process he would like to see.

Mr. Mason: I am obliged to the Minister for that sympathetic and understanding reply.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at seven minutes past Twelve o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 8 March 1985

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Pensioners

9.34 am

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): I rise to ask leave to present to the House a petition on behalf of the National Pensioners Convention. It contains over 1 million signatures and has been signed by pensioners throughout the country. All hon. Members will have in their constituencies many thousands of men and women who are retired and pensioners.

The petition reads:

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled; the Humble Petition of the National Pensioners Convention sheweth that they are concerned at;

The present situation of State Retirement Pensions which denies pensioners the right of choice, dignity, independence and security in retirement;

The increasingly heavy burden of fuel costs borne by pensioners which undermines their health and well being;

All hon. Members will have received in recent weeks many letters from pensioners expressing their concern about the payment of fuel costs in view of the severe weather that Britain has recently experienced.

The petition continues:

The erosion of public transport services on which pensioners depend.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that your Honourable House will;

Make an immediate commitment to a pension level of not less than one-half of average earnings for a married couple, and not less than one-third for a single person;

Ensure pensioners' ability to maintain warm and well lit homes with adequate heating allowances covering all fuels without a means test, and with total relief from standing charges;

Extend the statutory free fare scheme recently enacted for London pensioners throughout the United Kingdom.

I am proud to present this petition to the House on behalf of the millions of men and women, now pensioners, who, during their working life, worked for, and in many cases loyally served, this country in times of need.

I, like many other hon. Members, express to the Government the hope that they will take note of and act on the views expressed in the petition.

To lie upon the Table.

Crayford School

9.37 am

Mr. David Evennett (Erith and Crayford): I beg to ask leave to present a petition signed by 224 parents and governors of Crayford school and residents of the surrounding area. Crayford school is within my constituency and most of the petitioners are my constituents:

The humble petition of the Parents and Governors of Crayford School and Residents of the surrounding area sheweth

That the council of the London Borough of Bexley has proposed to cease to maintain Crayford School which is to be put forward to the Secretary of State for Education and Science for his approval.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that your Honourable House will urge the Secretary of State to reject the proposals of the Council of the London Borough of Bexley to close Crayford School and see fit to ensure that the Council of the London Borough of Bexley will continue to maintain the aforesaid school with its existing status for the foreseeable future in its present position in Iron Mill Lane, Crayford in the London Borough of Bexley.

I wholeheartedly support the petition because Crayford school is the only secondary school within the local community and its closure would be a severe blow to the local population. The decision has been referred to the Secretary of State and I join my constituents in urging him to reverse the decision of the local education authority.

To lie upon the Table.

Nuclear Waste (Disposal)

9.39 am

Mr. T. H. H. Skeet (Bedfordshire, North): I beg to move,

That this House, while congratulating the electricity supply industry on the production of some 18 per cent. of its power from nuclear sources as compared with 48 per cent. in France, and recognising the need following the miners' dispute to have a diversity of fuels available for the manufacture of electricity in the United Kingdom, acknowledges the need to adopt a satisfactory policy for the disposal of nuclear waste to ensure that people and the environment are protected from any hazards to which they may be exposed; expresses the need to hold a full and comprehensive inquiry into the siting of such repositories and into the several options technology has made available to the industry in such a manner that the public may participate and be fully informed of all relevant facts; and asks the Government to consider the prospect of employing the planning machinery contained in sections 47 to 49 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 relating to a planning inquiry commission.

We are lucky that the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Macfarlane), is able to be with us until my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), the Minister responsible, can get here. He has been delayed in Paris, but it is expected that he will be here between 10 and 10.30 am. He will then be able to listen to the many invaluable contributions of my colleagues.

In the United Kingdom the electricity supply industry produces some 18 per cent. of its power from nuclear sources, compared with figures of 48 per cent. for France, 46 per cent. for Belgium, and 18 per cent. for the Federal Republic of Germany. Thus, it is a very substantial industry. The year-long strike by the National Union of Mineworkers has convinced many that without alternative energy sources for electricity the United Kingdom might have been administered by Scargillism, with all the revolutionary content that that would involve. That could have had a significant bearing on the cost of electricity for all consumers.

Many people fail to appreciate that nuclear electricity, the manufacture of radio isotopes, and X-ray facilities in hospitals produce waste that must be dealt with. The Government's policy on this issue was outlined in the 1982 White Paper, which sought to accommodate the industry's requirements with the inegrity of the environment. I have noted that in the 1985 report—the consultation exercise on the draft principles for the protection of the environment — the Government have added a further significant dimension, with which I agree. Page 7 states:

"The Government recognises that waste management policies will not be successful unless there is public support based on a full and accurate assessment of the situation."

Of course, people are perplexed by the bewilderment caused by a force that is both intangible and unseen, even though it is easily measurable. Such apprehension was felt about the growth of the railways, the use of the car and the passage of aircraft. The risks were felt to be intolerable, but gradually the majority began to appreciate that there were long-term advantages, and that it was safer to travel by car than to move along the highway on a horse.

A public inquiry is essential to examine local fears, to examine propositions in depth, to extract the facts, and to site a nuclear repository in an acceptable location. It is well recognised in the House that high level waste is no concern of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive. It comprises fission products and actinides in liquid form, and will continue to be kept at Sellafield, until at some future date it will be vitrified in borosilicate glass, ready for long-term disposal.

Lower levels of waste have been entrusted to NIREX. Radiation from high level waste is intense, but the quantity is small and is estimated at 4,300 cu m by the year 2000 AD. On the other hand, intermediate and low-level waste tends to be bulky and much less radioactive. The figures for the year 2000 AD are assessed to be 90,000 and 500,000 cu m respectively. The options available for disposal are limited. Discharges into the deep sea in the north-east Atlantic have been temporarily suspended. I hope that the Minister will say something about the prospects of dumping nuclear waste at sea, following the recent moratorium. As that was a useful option, will it be revived?

In 1984, the Government agreed to comply with a requirement from the Paris Commission for the gradual elimination of radioactive discharges into the Irish sea from Sellafield, and to suspend the dumping of low-level waste into the Atlantic, 600 miles off Land's End, pending the Holliday report, which has now been published, and the report of the ad hoc scientific review arising out of the London dumping convention. That is due in September 1985, together with the Nuclear Energy Agency's site suitability review.

As some 200 to 300 tonnes of low level waste were dumped in that way every year between 1966 and 1982, permanent suspension could negate one of the most useful options available to the United Kingdom. Another option available to the United Kingdom is to fire the waste into space, but that is not recommended, as the cost would be inordinate. The remaining option involves deposits on land, together with openings which have been and will continue to be created by technology. For example, Ensec Ltd. has proposals for the location of long-lived intermediate level waste in deep boreholes beneath the sea.

But perhaps I may turn my attention to the Elstow type of repository or trench. This functions through the inhibiting factors of muliple barriers which prevent the movement in and out of waterflows. The first barrier is the insolubility of the waste and the supporting concrete and bitumen matrix. The second barrier is the impenetrability of the canisters containing waste. At the extreme end of time, I am informed by the Swedes that a 10 mm copper canister could last for about 10 million years. That simply illustrates the capability, but a lot of waste of lesser intensity would completely decay within 300 to 400 years, and would need to be placed in much less expensive containers.

The third barrier would depend upon the absorption capacity of the clay surrounding the canisters, its ability to thwart the movement of water. However, there are three further far-field barriers which apply more particularly to deeper sites. I should emphasise that these barriers are designed to prevent the movement of radionuclides into the wider environment and into the public water supply. Since public safety is the prime consideration, it is not surprising that the memorandum on the principles for the protection of the environment spells out the safeguards. Apart from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, which gives the Secretary of State independent advice, and which is broadly represented and may, indeed, include new men, at a later stage, there are several other procedural safeguards. They can be grouped under three headings. First, there are authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to ensure the maintenance of radiological standards, in particular in relation to the radiological impact of disposal. Secondly, there is licensing under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The Nuclear Installations Act 1965 established that the facility must be designed, constructed and operated to the required safety standards. Thirdly, planning permission, under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, as subsequently amended, should ensure that the site is suitable for the use proposed, taking social and other considerations into account.

A comparatively recent innovation in the British system — thanks to the United States and France — is the environmental assessment referred to in chapter 5 of the principles. It is designed to improve the quality of decisions made. Extensive consultations are required, and at least 16 references have to be undertaken with the local authorities.

The European directive will make mandatory the assessment of the environmental effects of certain large projects. Meanwhile, until acceptance by the Council of Ministers under oil and gas operations, the environmental assessment has been accepted as good practice, though without legal force. In the nuclear industry, it has become established as an administrative requirement pursuant to chapter 5 of the principles.

The timetable will necessarily be long, because of the incorporation of special procedures and the desire at once to inform the public of the facts and to seek their participation. I have endeavoured to piece together a projected timetable which may be of interest to the House.

Notification of other sites could take place in May or June 1985. Presentation of a special development order to the House of Commons to make possible the geological testing of all three sites nominated, subject to a negative resolution and one and a half hours debate, could take place in July 1985. Allowing about a year for geological drilling and collation of the information, we arrive at July 1986. A series of consultations, and the drafting of the environmental assessment — in part running in parallel with the processes already mentioned—might take about a year, to July 1987. Presentation of an application for planning permission to develop one or all three sites, coupled with an environmental assessment, might take us to 1987-88.

Dr. Flowers made the following observation during Mr. P. Critchley's evidence to the Sizewell inquiry:

"I think we must see that it would be three to four years at least from now before we have a document ready to support a planning application for the construction of a shallow repository."

A comprehensive public inquiry under the Town and Country Planning Act might take little less than a year, taking us to 1988-89. There would then be the inspector's report, consideration by the Government, debate in Parliament and the Secretary of State's decision, which might be expected in 1990.

If authorisation was granted, it would have to be obtained, licences granted and the facilities commissioned and constructed. That might take two years, or until 1992 at the earliest.

In France, the French national radioactive waste agency, ANDRA, has been invited to find a new site to follow La Hague. The French allow two years to complete procedures for obtaining building authorisations and a further two years for construction. Commissioning would thus take place in the early 1990s.

The planning exercise will inevitably be a long one. In my judgment, the most appropriate procedure would be a planning inquiry commission under sections 47 to 50 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. Section 48(2) states:

"Any of the matters mentioned . . . may be referred to any such commission . . . if it appears expedient . . . that the question whether the proposed development should be permitted to be carried out should be the subject of a special inquiry on either of the following grounds — (a) there are considerations of national or regional importance . . ."

there is no doubt that in this case matters of regional importance are involved—

"(b) the technical or scientific aspects of the proposed development are of so unfamiliar a character as to jeopardise a proper determination of that question . . ."

It is important that one should recognise that the planning inquiry procedure has been on the statute book since 1971. It has not been used, yet it is not unserviceable. Wherever the respository is to be sited, let the public have the full facts in a comprehensive examination of the issues involved. Section 48 is tailor-made for the job.

Against that background, the battle currently being waged by the newspapers in Bedford is in my view premature. It is bound to bore even the most persistent sympathisers. More extreme stories have to be discovered in rapid succession to maintain local interest, and the facts that there are have become immersed in emotion and alarm. I have consistently adopted the policy of waiting for the facts before reaching judgment rather than prejudging the case without the evidence. A number of people seem to have fallen for that fallacy. I trust that my attitude will be fully understood and will not continue to be misrepresented by sections of the local press.

My constituents are concerned about proximity — about the distance of the site at Elstow from a population of 135,000. Will the Minister address his mind to that point? In answer to a question from the Billingham Band, Mr. A. Faussat, deputy manager of ANDRA, stated that population density was not a criterion in site selection and that one of the proposed new sites was 3 km from a population centre of 80,000. It should also be noted that the radio isotope manufacturer, Amersham International, is situated within housing settlements at Amersham and, indeed, in Cardiff, the new AGR power stations being constructed at Heysham and Hartlepool are relatively near to centres of population. Further, there is no evidence of fatalities from ionising radiation from nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom. That exemplary record appears to compare favourably with the difficulties experienced with coal-fired stations.

I should like to read a short extract from the book by Alan Cottrell, FRS, entitled, "How Safe is Nuclear Energy?" On page 90 he states:

"if we really want to worry about releases of radioactivity from the earth, we should concern ourselves much more with emissions of radon-creating uranium from coal-fired power stations and from large earth-moving operations, for these present radioactive hazards to future generations which, although extremely minute, are nevertheless larger than those from deep underground nuclear waste deposits."

Nevertheless, this matter is referred to on page 21 of the report on the consultation exercise on the draft principles, prepared as recently as 1985, where it is stated that the size and distribution of local populations is a relevant planning consideration, and that the risk of a fatal cancer to any member of the public should be less than one in a million per year. That alone is a remarkable safeguard.

I see that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment is now in his place. I welcome him back to the House of Commons after his return from Paris. I should like to ask him whether I am right in assuming that, apart from natural radiation, the radiation at the perimeter fence of a repository or tumulus would be virtually nil, and therefore nil in Bedford?

The principles also seek to establish a satisfactory framework for the construction and operation of disposal facilities so that future generations will not be exposed to risks unacceptable to the present generation.

The proximity factor is common to a number of letters that I have received from constituents. It is a serious point to which the Government will have to address themselves, wherever the developer locates a repository. Can the Minister tell me whether proximity is a radiological consideration as well as a planning one, or a factor confined to principles arising under the Town and Country Planning Acts?

Some of my constituents are advising that low and intermediate level wastes should be stored at nuclear facilities and power stations rather than at a green site nuclear repository, which might be attended with some difficulties. They cite the case of the projected Sizewell B where provision is being made to store waste in modules at the station. However, there is a clear statement in the fifth report of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, which advises the Government:

"We are firmly of the opinion that these wastes should be disposed of as soon as practicable. We consider that each generation should deal as far as possible with its own waste arisings and has a duty to minimise the responsibility it passes on to future generations. Provided wastes are safely contained placing them underground in a way that removes any need for future handling has clear radiological advantages."

There appears to have been a little urgency in the voice of Dr. Ron Flowers, director of fuel processing for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, when he emphasised that the packaging techniques for nuclear wastes such as I have described would last 500 years—well beyond the point of total decay of the content. He also stressed that the wastes could be stored safely in existing nuclear installations at no significant extra cost to the electricity industry while the political obstacles to new and permanent repositories were being overcome.

I am mindful that the comparative assessment study of disposal and retrievable storage options being undertaken by the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee to determine the best practical environmental options, as suggested in the fifth and tenth reports of the Royal Commission on environmenal pollution, has yet to report. I should nevertheless appreciate some guidance from my hon. Friend the Minister. I should like to stress the obvious merit of early publication.

Although studies have been undertaken with a view to reducing substantially the volume of low-level waste by conventional incineration and recycling and treatment of the gases produced, also for intermediate level waste, what has been the outcome of investigations in tunnelling from the shore out to sea for the establishment of underwater repositories? What has been the outcome of investigations into the acquisition of a salt cavern in the United Kingdom for the final placement of longer-life intermediate wastes and vitrified higher level materials? It might also be relevant to inquire whether it has been found feasible to incinerate fission products and actinides in nuclear reactors, and to invite the industry to participate in the destruction of its own waste.

The timetable for choosing a site would be long due to the painstaking procedures that must be followed. I nevertheless recommend the course in planning that I have advocated. As nothing has yet been decided, there will be every opportunity to object at the most suitable time. That time is certainly not now, before any application has been lodged by the developer and before consultations have got under way. As the local press has prejudged the issue, it seems that there is little point in their minds in holding a public inquiry to ascertain the facts. Members of Parliament should stand back, examine the problem in all of its dimensions, assess it on the facts and decide in the community's interest.

The press and the county council have adopted a county approach. On that basis, in which county could a repository be located, even if such a repository is recognised as the best environmenal option? Could it be located anywhere in the United Kingdom if the matter is approached on a county basis, with everyone objecting in succession? My reply to those who want the waste to be stored at nuclear installations is to ask "Is Amersham to keep all its waste? Will the same apply to Hartlepool and Heysham?"

Public safety is paramount, and the Government would be failing in their duty if they omitted to establish that concept in theory and practice. A site should be chosen only on the basis of the risk or the probability of fatal cancer to any member of the public from a repository being no greater than one in 1 million per year. For the sake of succeeding generations, movement of radioactivity should not be permitted to show a significant increase above that naturally occurring in the general vicinity. Perhaps I might illustrate that point by quoting what Dr. Lewis Roberts of Harwell said in November 1984 at a British nuclear forum:

"no one individual, at any time in the future, should suffer more radiation from the operation of a repository than he would get by moving from a low-radioactivity part of the country, like London, to an area with higher natural radioactivity, like Aberdeen or Cornwall. Moving from one to another was not usually thought of as a risk."

The Atomic Energy Authority is conducting a study on the behaviour of radionuclides in geological formations beyond the repository. When will it report? The findings will be material to the Elstow issue. Materials technology is also vital as it will doubtless improve the containment capability of canisters and the performance of cement as a matrix and as an external containment material.

Does my hon. Friend the Minister doubt the ability of containers to hold their charge until decay renders it innocuous, and of cement to perform reliably during the term required? He might be interested in a paper by Atkinson and Hearne of Harwell of October 1984 which says:

"Sulphate attack and $Ca(OH)_2$ leaching have been identified as the most likely processes causing degradation in repository environments. Corrosion of reinforcement and alkali-aggregate reaction are likely to be somewhat less deleterious whereas carbonation, action of micro-organisms, crystallisation, environmental cycling and radiation effects are likely to be negligible. The engineering lifetime of a 1 m thick reinforced concrete slab has been estimated from the data available. The lifetime could be as short as 350 years for a concrete based on Ordinary Portland Cement, but is likely to be in the range of 500—1000 years for Sulphate Resisting Portland Cement and may be as long as 3000 years for SRPC in the deep repository."

Problems will arise for the industry 30 years after the building of the Magnox stations. They will have to be replaced by new plant, and old reactors will have to be decommissioned. Well ahead of that date, thinking will have to be done and feasible plans will have to be reached for disposing of abandoned resources. That is more of a problem for the Department of Energy than for the Department of the Environment, though the latter will have its say.

When alarm, stimulated by fear of the unknown, builds up, it is essential to have a public inquiry to dispel many of the monstrous chimeras. While the Government have an open mind, nuclear waste must be discussed freely in a public forum. I welcome the opportunity for that in the 1980s. The public will be richer for the information derived from a clash of opinions, and for the shattering of many illusions. We have traditional methods for settling these great issues. While these matters are being considered, the Government cannot expect local authorities to defend their positions and yet be penalised for the expenditure involved. The Department may consider that later when it comes to make some accommodation.

Finally, we have an environmentally sensitive Government. I have noted their actions on siting airports, responding to accidents at Sellafield, pursuing broad studies into realistic alternatives and tackling the pesticide nettle. I detect changes in their inner counsels about Elstow. However, it does not require the clamour of masses to promote change. The Select Committee on the Environment, which is considering this matter and hopes to report by October 1985, may presage the course ahead.

10.10 am

Mr. Ian Wrigglesworth (Stockton, South): I congratulate the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on choosing this topic for debate today. I am sure that it is most timely and that the House will have listened with interest to the detailed and responsible way in which he introduced his motion. He displayed his technical knowledge and understanding of these matters to the benefit of the House and of those outside who take a close interest in them.

I shall deal less with the technical than with the political and human aspects of the problem. Hon. Members will know that on Teesside the last few months of our lives have been dominated by a proposal by NIREX to place nuclear waste in the anhydride mine at Billingham. That caused an outcry in Billingham and from the surrounding area. I congratulate the Minister on the fact that the Government responded by withdrawing the proposal.

I shall address my remarks to the House on the basis of that experience. I appeal to the Government and the industry to realise that the nuclear industry will be successful and the technology to develop it will be allowed only with public consent and support. It is absolutely vital that we have, not secrecy and misunderstandings, but the fullest possible public discussion and exposure of the details of the case. I welcome the hon. Gentleman's remarks about following planning procedures that will allow that to happen. Indeed, the Government are to a considerable extent allowing that to happen. However, some aspects of Government policy have made the position much worse.

I shall deal first with energy policy. The lack of clarity about the Government's energy policy is giving rise to fear and uncertainty. We do not even have a vague certainty whether the Government intend to pursue a vigorous policy of nuclear power generation. We can only search Ministers' answers to parliamentary questions, their occasional speeches and other statements from Government sources to ascertain how much reliance the Government will place on gas, oil, coal, nuclear power generation, other non-renewable sources of energy and renewable sources of energy, which at present constitute only a small part of our energy needs.

My first criticism of the Government is that they unnecessarily allow people to have greater fears than may be necessary, because of the lack of a clear energy strategy. That is remarkable, because we are an energy rich nation and have the good fortune to sit on enormous supplies of coal, to have oil under the North sea and possibly even more oil elsewhere, and to have gas. We are the most energy rich nation in Europe. In those circumstances, it is remarkable that the Government have not made their strategy clear.

In the light of our rich energy resources, it is natural for people to ask why we need to rely on the nuclear option to the extent that we do. My colleagues and I believe that we need to retain the nuclear option. I visited Japan recently and looked at the work on nuclear power generation there. Japan is a major competitor to much of our industry, and in future it will have a substantial thriving nuclear power industry. Other countries, such as France, also have that option.

The source of energy to our industry is inevitably a major part of the equation that determines our competitiveness. For many of our industries, the cost of energy is a substantial part of their overheads burden and profoundly influences how competitive they can be. As we remain a great industrial nation, albeit not as great as we used to be, we need to ensure that our industries have a potential source of nuclear energy available in future, which could provide a cheap source of energy. Our competitors could completely undermine some of our industries if the whole of the energy equation were to come together in 50 or 30 years' time to make our position grossly uncompetitive. We therefore need to retain the option, for that and other reasons.

On the other hand, there is no justification for following the road which the Prime Minister and other Government Ministers wish to take, which is to adopt a substantial nuclear strategy, to rely on nuclear energy power generation and to minimise our reliance on our other sources of energy. We should not adopt that policy.

If the Government made clear what they see as the future of our nuclear power industry, we could have a much clearer debate on the disposal of waste arising from it and the many other industries which the hon. Gentleman mentioned which give rise to nuclear waste. I urge the Government to make clear their strategy on nuclear power generation within an overall energy policy. I repeat that if the Government want to continue along the road of nuclear power generation, they will have to produce a much greater degree of public support for their policy than they have up to now. The method of disposal of nuclear waste is a major factor in people's minds.

[Mr. Ian Wrigglesworth]

It is understandable that people living in rural areas are very concerned that their areas might be chosen as sites for the disposal of nuclear waste. On the basis of our experience at Billingham, I cannot think of anything more calculated to give rise to public anxiety and concern than a proposal to put nuclear waste underneath people's houses. Such decisions create a degree of opposition to the whole nuclear industry that has to be seen to be believed. In the case of Billingham, it was a remarkably stupid decision. Clearly, density of population must be one of the factors—although not an overwhelming factor—in the choice of sites for the disposal of nuclear waste. It was not surprising that there was an outcry at Billingham.

I believe that opposition to proposals for the disposal of nuclear waste can be overcome only if people can be reassured and can feel that matters are not being kept secret. Recent events have not helped to reassure them in that respect. The dreadful saga of Sellafield in 1983 and afterwards created grave doubts in people's minds about the willingness of the nuclear industry to come clean and display to the public the difficulties and dangers that can arise in the handling of nuclear substances. Secrecy is counter-productive. The authorities may think that by keeping quiet it is possible to calm public fears, but that has not proved to be the case. As a result of the investigation and activities of Greenpeace, many factors have emerged. Rather than having secrecy, it is far better to have a full public announcement giving details of the risks and dangers that may be involved. Such information should be given as soon as it becomes available.

I appeal to the nuclear industry not to be secretive or to cover up details of the disposal of nuclear waste. If accidents happen in the industry, it is vital to publish the full facts, so that when claims are made as to the safety of sites—in Bedfordshire or wherever it may be—the public can feel confident that what is being claimed is accurate and that they can trust what is being said. I hope that the industry and the Government will ensure that there is the most open debate and discussion on all such matters.

The people of Teesside and Billingham fought a tremendous campaign to prevent the disposal of nuclear waste under Billingham. The leaders of Billingham's campaign against nuclear dumping deserve to be congratulated on the effectiveness of their actions. It was a great encouragement to people, such as myself, who do not believe in groups breaking the law to achieve their ends. The Billingham campaign was carried out within the law, using all the available democratic means, including those in this place. As a result, the Minister was persuaded to reverse the decision. I hope that the people of Bedfordshire will take some heart from our success in Billingham.

Mr. Skeet: I have followed closely the hon. Gentleman's remarks about Billingham. I remind him that ICI owns the anhydride mine and that ICI has its own problems on Teesside. It has a cyanide plant there. It has enough troubles on the chemical front. Does the hon. Gentleman think that, on that basis, ICI perhaps decided that it would not add to its problems?

Mr. Wrigglesworth: That may be part of the reason why ICI took its decision to oppose the use of its mine, but there were probably bigger reasons than that, such as the ones to which I have been referring. As I have been arguing, it is not simply a technical problem. We dealing with people's fears. People's individual inter and the community's interests are involved. As politicia we must take account of those interests. The techn problems with which the hon. Member for Bedfordsh North dealt in his speech can be ascertained, weighed and controlled much more easily than can peop opinions and fears. I do not think that the nuclear indus the Government or previous Governments have b sufficiently sensitive to the need to calm people's fears to take people along with them in their arguments. A g deal more time and resources — I particularly st resources—need to be devoted to ensuring that pe understand exactly what is being proposed and what the threats.

When we talk about nuclear waste or nuclear po generation, many people think that we are talking ab a bomb; they do not think that what is involved is disposal of nuclear waste. I do not doubt that many pe in Billingham thought that there was a proposal to p bomb underneath their houses. That sort of fear misunderstanding has to be overcome. We must rea that people's minds are confused and mixed up. They not understand the technical details in the way that t are understood by those who have studied th Therefore, although it is important that the techn aspects should be investigated in great depth, adeq consideration must also be given to people's fears. Billingham, those fears began to affect house sa because of the general uncertainty involved. It was felt the value of their houses would drop, that people wo not want to move into the town, and that industries wo not want to move there.

I believe that the fears about nuclear waste are alm certainly exaggerated. On Teesside we have the lar concentration of hazardous material in Britain. We h petrochemical plants north and south of the River T We have heavy engineering and other plants. We have largest proportion of hazardous and waste materials t found in any part of Britain. All sorts of hazard materials regularly travel by road and rail through community. Perhaps NIREX thought that as we ar used to the hazardous materials we would not mind ano one, but this was the straw that broke the camel's ba

In the past, I have fought for schemes such as Hazchem scheme for the labelling of hazardous wa when they are transported. People should worry n about other hazardous substances being transported our roads, not least liquid gas, which has caused s devastating accidents in other parts of the world, suc at Seveso. If we want all the things that we have, suc plastics and other materials, we must learn how to with the waste. However, let us not over-exaggerate nuclear threat and forget the other hazardous substance think that they are not as dangerous.

My main point this morning is to make a plea that e possible effort and resource is put into taking the pu along with this argument, reassuring people and gi them full information so that their understandable fear overcome. The Government have done a reasonable jo this, but I urge them to do more and continue with consultations, and particularly I urge them to encou the industry to be open and unsecretive.

The industry should involve the public as much as i in discussions of these matters, otherwise it wil crippled in the way that it has been in the United St and fear will become so great that public opinion will stop the industry from making any progress. If that happens, an important opportunity for Britain might be lost.

10.32 am

Mr. Nicholas Lyell (Mid-Bedfordshire): I am glad to follow the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth); and I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on giving the House its first opportunity to debate the widespread issues that surround this difficult question.

The House will know that I speak as the Member of Parliament for Mid-Bedfordshire, which is the constituency within which Elstow is sited. Elstow is the place where NIREX, at least until the recent announcement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, has been concentrating its efforts to dump low and short-life intermediate level nuclear waste.

This debate gives me the opportunity to do a number of things. First, as Member of Parliament for that area, I can, in some detail, say why I strongly oppose the proposals of NIREX. I do so from the standpoint of someone who strongly supports the programme of nuclear energy policy. We need nuclear energy as part of our overall energy provision. We need it to keep our children and grandchildren warm, both now, as 18 per cent. of our electricity comes from nuclear energy, and increasingly into the coming century and the centuries ahead.

The Government have to overcome the problem of nuclear waste. I quote my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), who said that this is a management problem, and in some senses more a management than a technical problem. He recognises that there are still technical questions to be answered, but he is right that it is a management problem. I am sure that he intended to comprehend the fact that this is also a political problem.

If we do not recognise that these problems are political, we shall go down the wrong road time and again. I can draw an analogy with airports, about which I have some experience. The notion that we can slough off a problem of this nature to public inquiries and thereby think that it will go away is wrong. We have to hold public inquiries, and there will have to be a major public inquiry before any final decision as to how or where nuclear waste of this nature is dumped, dealt with or stored. However, to think that this decision can be passed to a judge, an inspector or a multiplicity of inspectors under a planning inquiry commission and get away from the political problem is fundamentally to misunderstand the nature of the beast.

I believe that until recently, and to some extent even now, we have been going about it the wrong way. NIREX has certainly been going about it the wrong way from the outset. The notion that we can simply take one place for low and intermediate levels of nuclear waste—Elstow—and another place for longer-lived nuclear waste — Billingham — and then use money and energy to persuade the local population that it will be all right is gravely mistaken.

Nothing illustrates that point better than the Billingham campaign. I hope that I shall not be thought to be over-cynical when I say that the Billingham campaign succeeded for two reasons, not for one. There is no doubt that the enormous weight of local opposition was a major and serious cause. However, I ask myself, as the Member of Parliament representing Elstow, whether the campaign would have come to so swift and, for them, happy a conclusion if the anhydrite mine had not been owned by ICI, and if ICI, having at the outset shown complicity, had not then changed its mind.

I know something about compulsory purchase procedures. I urge my right hon. and hon. Friends not to shrink from the notion of compulsory purchase if the right site requires it. But, as a lawyer, I believe that to seek the compulsory purchase not only of the right to use part of a mine but of all the access ways and requirements that would have been involved would be a legal maze from which we would never have emerged. I believe that one of the real reasons why we so quickly got rid of the Billingham idea was that, as soon as ICI showed its implacable opposition, the idea became an impossibility.

Mr. Wrigglesworth: One of the reasons why ICI changed its mind was that Billingham is almost an ICI town. ICI's employees, expressing their strength of feeling about the proposals, led ICI to take that decision. Therefore, it was a political decision.

Mr. Lyell: I accept what the hon. Gentleman says. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) will accept both points. There was real and profound local opposition.

However, at Elstow we have a different position. One of the prime reasons why Elstow was chosen as a potential site — indeed the preferred site — was that the site is owned by the CEGB, which is one of the partners in NIREX. That makes life a great deal easier for it. That is not the only reason. Elstow has good communications, and NIREX argues that it has a suitable geological basis in the Oxford clay. However, the fact that the CEGB owns the site was a powerful incentive for NIREX to choose Elstow, and this represents a big difference between Billingham and Elstow.

I know that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment will not underestimate the profundity of the local opposition in Bedfordshire. We did not have advance notice of the decision, as they did in Billingham, and perhaps the feeling has been a little slower in building up. I shall describe the level of that opposition, because I have no doubt that rational, sensible people, as we are in Bedfordshire, are profoundly worried. The breadth of the opposition that I am receiving and the nature of the people from whom I am receiving it—I am confident that it is coming from over 90 per cent. of the population—shows the deep nature of the political problem that must be tackled.

While I speak for one county and am, therefore, conscious of the "not in my back yard" syndrome, I am sure that there would be similar opposition were it in Hertford, Hereford or Hampshire. I choose the names carefully, so that it will not be thought that they will necessarily be the next sites to be chosen!

I also take the opportunity to comment on the handling of the matter from a parliamentary point of view, because I believe it is undesirable that the Department of the Environment should not only have to field the questions on how the matter should be judged, but should also have to argue the case for the prosecution.

Questions on the technicalities and options should go to the Department of Energy; and questions on how the issue is weighed up and decided should go to the Department of the Environment, which the Secretary of

State has been at pains to say is standing back from the technical issues so as to be seen to be taking an impartial view.

I am sure that the Secretary of State will seek to take an impartial view, but in public presentation it is appalling if the same Department is forced to be prosecution, judge and jury in its own case. I hope that serious thought at the highest level will be given to changing that way of dealing with the issue in a parliamentary way, so making it easier to have an open and clear discussion of this important issue.

Although an earlier Parliament tried to set up a suitable procedure, the planning inquiry commission procedure is probably not the right type of procedure in these matters.

I shall now explain why, as the representative of the Elstow area, I strongly oppose the present ill-thought-out proposal.

First, the Elstow site is far too close to major centres of population, the most major centre being the town of Bedford, part of which I represent, though much the larger part is represented by my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North. The proposed site is only three miles from the town of Bedford and is close to the villages of Elstow, Wilstead and Houghton Conquest. The degree of anxiety in those villages can hardly be overstated.

Secondly, the technology is unproven. Many assertions are made about the one in a million or one in 10 million risk, the life of concrete, copper, and so on, but all are unproven. Other responsible countries with major nuclear industries—in particular, Sweden and West Germany—have rejected the idea of shallow land burial, mainly because of what is described as the problem of capping the site. Such sites are, by definition, waterlogged. They are below the water table. The published literature, from the Government and all concerned, recognises that in the fullness of time—and nobody can put an accurate time scale on it—water will seep into, totally surround and finally fill the site. The Oxford clays which Elstow enjoys are strongly alkaline, and that can have a corrosive effect on canisters and cement.

The life of a concrete trench is finite. My hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North put forward some of the technical arguments. We have often heard about the long life of concrete. I do not want to be cynical or to raise unnecessary fears, but one need only think of high alumina cement, of the effects of the use of concrete in Ronan Point and of the way in which concrete has broken down in many towns and cities, including great engineering projects, to appreciate that we do not yet know enough about concrete to give a confident estimate of its life.

When the University of London gave instructions before the war for the Senate House to be built—that great building in Bloomsbury—it told the architects that it wanted a building which could be sure to last for 500 years. It was built in dovetailed granite blocks.

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): The hon. and learned Gentleman is knowledgeable on the subject about which he is speaking. I am extremely concerned because we currently store nuclear waste in shallow burial in the county of Cumbria. If his assertion is correct, the whole of that part of west Cumberland must be at risk. I hope that the Minister will give reassurance on the point remembering that we do not want to upset the apple cart and disturb public confidence too much.

Mr. Lyell: The hon. Gentleman will know that what is stored in open trenches in west Cumbria is low level nuclear waste. The trenches are not even lined. I understand that plastic bags are virtually just dumped in shallow open trenches. I have not seen the process and do not want to misrepresent the position, but I gather from my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North, who has seen the operation, that that is the case. I have been talking about intermediate life nuclear wastes, which are not dumped in that way but are put in lined concrete trenches.

When speaking of unproven technology, it is important to consider with care the likely life of concrete. I am saying not that it will not last, but that, as yet, we cannot be confident that it will. That is one reason why other responsible countries—and 50 per cent. of Sweden's electricity comes from nuclear power—have chosen to go down different roads.

There is a certain illogicality about the arguments that are sometimes put forward about low level nuclear waste. We are told that the dumping will be done carefully. We are also told that it is not necessary to do it carefully because there is no great risk.

The French have at Centre de la Manche a repository for storing nuclear waste which I saw on a visit there with my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North and others. I was not deeply impressed by the approach of the French to the technology.

One reason for choosing Elstow is that it is on Oxford clay. The respository at Centre de la Manche is on shale. Oxford clay is supposed to be impervious, whereas shale clearly is not. Yet we are told that it is vital to use an area having Oxford clay. That is one of the illogicalities in the argument which supports my view of the unproven nature of the technology.

Mr. Skeet: My hon. and learned Friend is speaking of the integrity of cement. He will be aware that Pompeii has lasted until this day with all the bodies there preserved. In other words, volcanic ash plus water is a cement, and in that case it has lasted for well over 1,000 years.

Mr. Lyell: My hon. Friend gives a good example of an excellent preservative cement. Volcanic ash may be considered as one of the options. I do not want to be flippant, but my point about high alumina cement must have struck home. That cement, which was intended to be particularly strong and effective, crumbled within a few years. I am not suggesting that that will happen, but we are dealing with an unproven area.

On the same point, although I am changing direction slightly, the United States has used trench methods for the siting of short-life intermediate level nuclear waste of the kind that is to go to Elstow. The United States began by telling everybody that it was perfectly safe and that the radionuclides would stay within the perimeter of the site. However, those sites have been closed because it has been found that the radionuclides have migrated outside the site area at a far faster rate than was expected. Again, I hasten to say that I do not wish to raise alarm among the public. If my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment believes that that information incorrect or that it should be put into another perspective, I am sure that he will tell the House. I go only so far as to say that this technology is unproven.

My third reason is that I believe it to be utter folly, from a management point of view, to transport such large quantities of low level nuclear waste all over the country, unless it is necessary. The fact is that 70 per cent. of all low level nuclear waste will come from Sellafield. What is the point of carrying it right across the country to Bedfordshire when, if mud rock clays are the answer—and Oxford clay is a mud rock clay — there are substantial mud rock clay areas, often deeper than those in Bedfordshire, much closer to Sellafield? I ask that that option should be looked at again carefully.

Other options should be explored in much greater detail. Our knowledge is still limited because this problem has come upon us fairly quickly in the last three years due to the closure of what was first thought to be the best option—dumping at sea. Therefore, I believe that we should have a period of dry storage on site, see how it works, and study the effects for another generation. There seem to be no technical difficulties about dry storage on site. I strongly suspect that the cost of such storage may be substantially lower. In this context, I take up the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North about each generation solving its own problems. By going unwisely for shallow land burial, although we may solve the problem for ourseves and for perhaps the next 50 years, I believe that, because we do not know whether there will be water seepage and an escape of radionuclides, we may be storing up a problem for future generations —a problem which my hon. Friend professes, and I know sincerely wishes, to avoid.

Another very important fact is that the Oxford clay on the Elstow site is in itself an important mineral resource. That site was originally owned by the London Brick Company. It was compulsorily purchased by the Royal Air Force before the war and then sold to the Central Electricity Generating Board with a view to its possible use as a power station. It was understood initially that the site would return to its original owners, the London Brick Company. It is exactly in the path of the environmentally preferred route for the exploitation of brick clay resources in the next generation. The London Brick Company, if environmental considerations played no part in the decision, would prefer to go to Houghton Conquest and then up to Elstow, but the county council has said that on sound environmental grounds it does not want it to go to Houghton Conquest. Therefore, the preferred route for exploiting Oxford clay for brick-making purposes, the largest and most important single industry in the county of Bedfordshire, is exactly where this site is to be placed —a very strong and independent reason for turning away from this site. The fact is that there are about 10,000 square miles of Oxford clay in the country.

Furthermore, the depth of clay at Elstow is somewhat suspect. During the past 18 months NIREX has published different estimates of the depth of clay that it requires. In its earlier pamphlets it said that it required up to 20 m of clay. It is now widely believed that over most of this site 20 m of usable Oxford clay are not to be found. NIREX seems to be changing its requirements. Therefore, we must look extremely carefully, on technical grounds, at whether Elstow would be the right site in any event.

I return to the key political problem—the strength of local opposition. It will be well known to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State that both the county council and the two district councils, north Bedfordshire and mid-Bedfordshire, are strongly against it. I hope that my hon. Friends in neighbouring constituencies will be able to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in order to express their views on behalf of their constituents. A poll was carried out recently. One should not attach too much weight to opinion polls. Nevertheless, they give a broad indication of people's views. An opinion poll was carried out in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North. I am told that 93 per cent. of those who were asked—the poll was carried out throughout the constituency, not just in the areas that is nearest to Elstow—are opposed to it. The opinion poll also took into account the efforts made by NIREX.

That brings me to the "unwisdom" of the approach which has been hitherto been adopted. NIREX has spent about £250,000 on propaganda in order to try to persuade the people of Bedfordshire of the beneficial nature of its Elstow proposals. It says that there is nothing to fear from them. I am glad in one respect that NIREX is seeking to do so. However, I would prefer NIREX to indulge in a more open and careful examination of the problem than to use propaganda in an attempt to persuade. The opinion poll showed that of those who received the NIREX propaganda—over 70 or 80 per cent.—45 per cent. said that they were not influenced one way or the other, while 53 per cent. said that the material made them even more worried than they were before. One might say, "They would say that, wouldn't they?" Of those who received the propaganda, only 2 per cent. said that they had been a little comforted by the material. We are dealing with the feelings of people. That is the profound political problem with which we are faced.

On the planning inquiry commission procedure, the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 has never been used although it has been on the statute book for nearly 15 years. It was sensible to try to formulate a more comprehensive procedure. However, it stems from the days when we were absolutely wedded to the notion of great public inquiries, as though somehow they would solve rather than merely defer political decisions.

I should tell the House what the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) said when he had to consider using it. In 1978, in a statement, he said that he perceived the procedure to be defective. He took the view that the first, investigative, stage envisaged by the Act was bound to lead the commission to conclusions that arguments of policy and principle, as well as local issues, would also arise at the second stage of the local public inquiry, and that people would not feel that they would get a fair hearing. If people feel that they will not get a fair hearing, the principal purpose of having a major public inquiry will be defeated. The quotation which I took from footnotes to section 47 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 in the "Encyclopaedia of Planning Law" comes from a report at page 731 of the Journal of Planning and Environment Law in 1978.

I believe, therefore, that one should be cautious about choosing a planning inquiry commission per se. As my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Government have made clear, a major public inquiry is certainly needed and will be held, but we should not necessarily be wedded to the notion of a planning inquiry commission.

NIREX has been spending a great deal of money on propaganda and there is always a little humour to be found in these matters. I am told that NIREX has produced a video tape showing a little man—perhaps one of my constituents or one of the constituents of my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North—settling down to write a letter opposing the NIREX proposals. The television set in the corner of the room suddenly starts speaking and telling him not to do that; it will be perfectly all right; it is all entirely safe. That is scarcely sensible propaganda. The only precedent for a television set to speak to people is to be found in the book "1984". That example gives some idea of the ineptitude of NIREX, which I appreciate has a very difficult job.

I was most grateful to see my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy in the Chamber at the beginning of the debate because basically this is a management problem for the Department of Energy. The technical questions should be under active and open debate and they should be ruled upon and investigated by the Secretary of State for Energy and his team. All hon. Members should have the opportunity to question the Department of Energy in detail about all the options. Parliamentary questions on this should not be transferred to the Secretary of State for the Environment, as now happens. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, who takes such great trouble with these difficult questions, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State would then not be in the embarrassing position of appearing to be judge and jury in their own cause.

That would lead us away from the present position in which NIREX—which, I accept, is not the Government—chooses a site and it is assumed that everything must go ahead. It would lead us away from the notion that NIREX should do nothing but plug the case for the site that it has chosen and it would lead us back to a proper and open debate about how to overcome this very serious problem. If we can get back to proper and open debate, I believe that solutions can be found. In those circumstances, I and my very rational constituents will put all our efforts into seeking sensible solutions to this national problem.

11.4 am

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): It is interesting to follow an hon. Member in whose constituency it is proposed to locate nuclear waste. Geographically and temporally, nuclear waste disposal is on the horizon for my constituency. It is also novel to be the second Opposition Member and also the second alliance Member to be called. At one point, I noted that four alliance Members were present, while only the shadow Minister was here to fly the flag for the Labour party.

The hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) should be congratulated on raising this important subject. I apologise for missing the first few minutes of his speech, due to a delayed plane. The hon. Gentleman gave a very detailed exposition of the issues as he sees them.

We are all aware of the public anxiety that this issue generates. When I was a Euro candidate in the south of Scotland in 1979, the possibility of test boring for high-level radioactive waste disposal in the Galloway hills was an important issue. At that time, there were similar fears in the Cheviots. Subsequently, the same anxiety has arisen in Billingham and Elstow. In my area there are now fea about the possibility of under-seabed disposal at Storr Bank 16 miles west of my constituency.

In many respects, I believe that that public anxiety a scepticism are justified, because of the shortcomings Government policy and the arrogance of the nucle industry over many years. For far too long the indust acted in a paternalistic "trust us, we know best" mann and shrouded its activities in secrecy. In more rece times, there has been greater media and public interest environmental issues and the industry has come und increased scrutiny.

The nuclear industry often complains that opposition ill-informed or uninformed, but the industry itself mu carry the can for some of the lack of information, in vie of the secretive way in which it has sought to fob off t public with bland official assurances.

The tenth report of the Royal Commission environmental pollution captured the situation well paragraph 2.25, when it stated:

"Industry and pollution control authorities . . . must bewa of adopting a 'we know best' posture. They must recognise th the public's subjective judgment, and even 'gut reaction', ha an essential part to play. In a democracy it is an unhealthy si when authority claims omniscience and dismisses grass-roo concern as 'irrational'. On the other hand, a similarly intolera attitude on the part of the public and pressure groups is equal reprehensible if conditions exist for reasoned discussion."

Public confidence is not helped by bland assuranc which turn out to be wrong, as my hon. Friend the Memb for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth) showed in h exposition of the history of the Windscale/Sellafie incidents. An environmental pressure group had to reve to the public the leaks that had occurred at the sit Government policy has also contributed to alarm an concern. In the late 1970s and in 1980 we were told by th Government that there was an urgent need to mak arrangements for the disposal of high-level toxic wast Then, at the end of 1981, we were told that it was n urgent at all and could certainly wait 50 years. What a the public expected to make of that?

Similar confusion has reigned in my constituency. have been assured several times by junior Ministers th under-seabed disposal is highly futuristic. When th Secretary of State made his statement in January c present disposal procedures, he replied to a question fro me that under-seabed disposal was many years away. O the same day, the media reported that desk studies we about to begin. The public simply do not know what make of all these apparent inconsistencies.

I assure the House and the Government that an proposal to deposit nuclear waste under the seabed off th coast of my constituency will be met with the same sc of hostile reception that greeted similar proposals Billingham and Bedfordshire. Even the perception th such things may happen can be equally damaging to m local industry, particularly as so much of it depends c marine activities. Colleagues and friends have already sa to me, "I see that they are going to dump nuclear was off your constituency." That is not the case, but the publ get that perception.

I should be reassured if the Minister would confirm th there are no proposals to dump waste or to do test drillin off my constituency. If there is a possibility of test drillin outwith the planning area, I hope that we shall be to something about what planning procedures will apply.

It follows from what I have said about secrecy that one prerequisite of any planning inquiry must be the fullest disclosure of information to the public in a form which can be understood by them. Commercial confidence often blocks the proper disclosure of information, but there are circumstances in which even that must be sacrificed if the public are to be confident that a proper environmental assessment is being undertaken before proposals go ahead.

The motion mentions the possibility of a planning inquiry commission, and serious thought should be given to that. It was put into planning legislation, but no Government yet have had the courage to activate such a body.

I understand that the Radioactive Waste Disposal Advisory Committee recommended that at least 10 sites should be nominated for the disposal of intermediate and low-level nuclear waste disposal and that there should then be a procedure to narrow down the number. At first, NIREX nominated two sites, one of which is not to go ahead, and we are told that five sites are still to be named. It would have been better to have the 10 sites named, and perhaps a planning inquiry commission would have been appropriate to consider the whole issue. When it became necessary to hold a planning inquiry on a particular proposal, the alternative sites would have been discussed and put out of the way and the inquiry could consider the merits of only the proposal before it.

There is anxiety about the fact that planning inquiries such as those at Sizewell and Windscale and the one in Ayrshire, at which I represented one of the groups of objectors, always produce an imbalance in the resources available to the two sides. The nuclear industry commands substantial resources. Mr. Justice Parker drew attention to that fact in his report on the Windscale inquiry. He said in paragraphs 8 and 9 of chapter XV that it was a matter of concern to him that there should be such a disparity.

I should like the Government to contemplate giving legal assistance to objectors, because, as Mr. Justice Parker said, it must be in the public interest that counter-arguments are fully examined. Perhaps objectors would have to impose some discipline on themselves to get together, and that might reduce the time taken by some inquiries.

Much has been said about the planning procedures for the disposal of waste. We have to ask whether there is yet a need to dispose of intermediate and low-level radioactive waste. Part of the trouble with NIREX is that it is comprised of representatives from the industry — the Central Electricity Generating Board, British Nuclear Fuels Limited, the Atomic Energy Authority, and the South of Scotland Electricity Board—who have a vested interest in disposing of waste, and perhaps they do not look at other options. It is regrettable that NIREX has such a membership.

The Flowers Commission recommended that there should be a nuclear waste disposal corporation with a remit to "protect the environment, rather than offer the cheapest terms to BNFL, the electrical utilities and others who might require its services."

It is unfortunate that such a body was not established.

Storage must be seen as a possibility. It would give us more time to see what happens to materials. The industry will claim that it knows all about the material anyway, but many years ago we put asbestos into our homes and factories in the belief that we knew all about it and that it was safe. Storage gives us the option of continuing to monitor material to see whether factors which we cannot foresee at present may arise.

In many respects, NIREX is hamstrung by Government policy. The then Labour Government set out in their response to the Flowers report a list of measures which they regarded as important in dealing with radioactive waste management. The two points at the head of the list were that the creation of waste from the nuclear industry would be minimised and that waste management problems would be dealt with before any large nuclear programme was undertaken.

NIREX cannot manage properly unless it also has some control over the volume of waste generated. At present it is comprised of people who are generating the waste, so Government policy must come in and we must question whether there is a need to produce the volume of waste which comes principally from the reprocessing facility. Reprocessing is one of the major generators of waste and most of the intermediate waste that was scheduled to go to Billingham would have come from the reprocessing facility.

The present facility was started when there were fears of a uranium shortage, but those fears no longer exist. My right hon. and hon. Friends who were in the House at the time opposed the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Windscale. We were told that it was an urgent necessity, but it has still not been built. The right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) pioneered that project.

One of the economic arguments for the Windscale project was that it would be able to reprocess fuel from Japan. In recent weeks, I have visited Japan with the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), and we learnt that the Japanese are keen on developing a complete nuclear cycle, including a reprocessing facility. Therefore, one must question the economics of the Sellafield proposal.

There is a pollution risk from the discharge of a reprocessing facility and a risk of proliferation in the military sphere. That was why the Carter Administration banned any further reprocessing in the United States in 1977. Economically, reprocessing is at a disadvantage compared with dry storage. If we are to minimise waste, we must examine our attitude to reprocessing and question whether we really need a reprocessing facility in this country.

The Labour Government also said in response to the Flowers report that waste management problems would be dealt with before any large nuclear programme was undertaken, but my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South has already pointed out that this Government have no coherent energy policy. We do not know how many nuclear power stations they wish to build. I agree that the nuclear option must remain open. We cannot leave a hole in our energy supplies. Admittedly the programme that we are now talking about is not on the scale of the programme talked about by Governments in the 1970s. However, Torness is to go ahead in the next two or three years, and Sizewell is being promoted, though without any reference to the capacity need. Yet, while we are undertaking the commission of new nuclear power stations, we have not solved the waste management problems. The very fact of this debate today shows that the waste management problem has not been solved.

It is the responsibility of Members of Parliament and of the community at large to confront the problems posed by nuclear waste. It exists, and even if it is stored for a length of time it will have to be disposed of at some stage. It is equally our responsibility to ensure that the problem is not unnecessarily magnified by continuing a reprocessing facility which I suggest is not absolutely necessary and by a continued expansion of the nuclear industry while the waste disposal problem remains unsolved.

Mr. David Madel (Bedfordshire, South-West): Like my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lyell), I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on winning the ballot, on his motion and on the debate that he has initiated. I was particularly attracted by that part of my hon. Friend's motion which talked of the need "to adopt a satisfactory policy for the disposal of nuclear waste to ensure that people and the environment are protected from any hazards to which they may be exposed."

In my opinion, at this stage that is the most important part of the motion.

Before I comment on those words, I want to underline three or four topics which have come out in the debate. The hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth) referred to the highly effective campaign in Billingham and the way that people in Billingham had kept within the law, showing that it was possible to mount successful campaigns against proposals to dump nuclear waste in a lawful way. Of course, in Bedfordshire we are quite used to such campaigns. We have twice had to mount tremendous campaigns to stop the third London airport being built on our doorstep. At all stages of those campaigns the law was observed and democratic processes were used, as they are being used now.

The second aspect of the debate that struck me is that public fears about nuclear waste will not be allayed by drowning them in scientific detail and enormous scientific research. We have this political worry. The hon. Member for Stockton, South said that people in Billingham felt almost as though a nuclear bomb was being put under their houses. But it is not only that that worries people. People get their news basically from television. It can present views in a highly articulate and neat manner, and people are well aware of the accidents that have occurred in other parts of the world—not only accidents involving nuclear waste but accidents involving general harmful substances. Those news items have registered loud and clear with people. That, too, has come across in the debate, and it underlines my argument that scientific detail cannot do it all.

I was intrigued by the remark of my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North about Pompeii and volcanic ash. I did not quite follow it because, as far as I know, there is no volcano in Bedfordshire. I do not know whether it was a fair comparison. It was probably a necessary light aside in what is an extremely serious debate.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire described what happened when judges were appointed to hold inquiries, and he asked whether we could solve the problem in that way. Unfortunately, we cannot. There is a great deal of reverence for the law in Britain. Indeed, there is a great deal of reverence, pe However, when Mr. Justice Roskill ruled that Cublin was ideal for the third London airport in 1971, I d think that he realised the political volcano that he ha off. I hope that we shall avoid thinking that, becaus have a judge or a panel of judges to rule on an iss important as the disposal of nuclear waste, some because the law is involved, the country will fall int and accept the decision that is reached. The blunt tr that it will not.

I also support those hon. Members who have sai this is not only a Department of the Environment m I welcome my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of Sta the Environment to the debate and thank him fo patience with which he has listened to us in Bedford not only about nuclear waste but about other matters are outside the terms of the motion. I also welcom hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for E because, like my hon. Friends, I take the view that very much a Department of Energy matter as well.

As I said earlier, the part of the motion that I w discuss is the part dealing with public worry. Wh store nuclear waste will always be controversial, should like to know what experience we have of deadly substances. Such information would necessarily allay public worry, but it would imm people's knowledge of these matters.

We read more and more about how we wer prepared for the last war, and it occurs to me that w quantities of poisonous gas and other substances could have been used in the war and were ready to b if Hitler's army had invaded or if Hitler had threate with chemical warfare. It is well known that we had of poisonous gas and other chemical substances. were they stored, for how long were they stored, there any accidents and what lessons were learned their storage? Are any of the sites used to store pois gas and other deadly substances suitable for the stor nuclear waste? I ask all those questions with the ob proviso that national security may prohibit an However, I do not believe that national security pr answers to all those questions, and answers to th some stage would be extremely useful.

The hon. Member for Stockton, South referred arguments between those who live in rural areas and who live in urban areas about where these subs should be stored. I believe that the bulk of the pois gas that we had to have ready in the last war was pr stored in a rural area. Any information about it wo useful.

Reference has been made to other countries in E and their attitudes to the disposal of nuclear waste. is the level of European co-operation? I understan other countries are embarking on long re programmes to see whether what is proposed at will do for them. Are we joining in that research? sort of contact do we have with those west Eu countries which are taking a long-term look at this If we are not actively involved, could we be? I thi we could be. If we are not, how long would it take ourselves involved in their research and what contr could we make?

The Elstow proposal obviously dominates the for Bedfordshire Members of Parliament who are today in large numbers. The green document "Radioactive Substances Act 1960" was produced Department of the Environment and the Scottish and Welsh Offices in December 1984. I have picked out three topics which are being discussed in Bedfordshire and which are relevant to the debate and to future consideration.

Chapter 4 is headed "General Principles". Paragraph 1.c. says:

"a site must be selected where it is unlikely that future development of natural resources, or of the site, will disturb the facility."

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire answered that to some degree when he referred to the history of Elstow when the London Brick Company owned it, and to the use that could be made of the Oxford clay for the production of bricks. Bearing in mind the reference in paragraph 1.c. to the future development of natural resources, that instantly cuts across Elstow and begins to render it unsuitable.

Paragraph 1.c. then talks of development of the site disturbing the facility. On the site in question there is planning blight, but no one knows what use may be made of the site. We are constantly seeking ways of attracting more industry into Bedfordshire which will provide more jobs. Therefore, the second part of paragraph 1.c. is just as relevant as the future development of the clay for the necessary production of bricks.

At the bottom of page 23, part of the appendix on the environmental assessment, it says:

"Social considerations: likely effects on employment".

At the side of the page, under "Bodies to be consulted", it mentions the Department of Employment and the local planning authority. That is crucial to Bedfordshire, because the county has a big employment problem. Planning blight already exists and we must find ways of attracting more industry. However, the county has a limited amount of space available for attracting new firms and jobs and that leads me to my next point.

On page 24 one of the factors listed for consideration is the proximity of green belts. That gives rise to quite a tale in Bedfordshire. We have a sort of green belt policy. In its structure document, the county council went for low growth and now it is thinking about changing that. The balance between village and town, industry and agriculture is a narrow one in Bedfordshire. The county is fairly small in total acreage, but there is what is almost a green belt quite near to Elstow. Therefore, the local planning authority must be consulted. As my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire said, the district councils are opposed to Elstow and one reason for that is the future of green belts in Bedfordshire and the necessity to have a balance between town, industry and village and to recognise that not everybody who works in Bedfordshire can live there and not everybody who lives there can work there. We are interdependent on our next-door neighbours, but that interdependence and the seeking of the necessary balance has been somewhat upset by the present proposal on Elstow.

Those three points in the document published in December 1984 lead me on to two questions. What do Whitehall and Westminster see as Bedfordshire's role in what is basically an industrial country? When they have decided what they want Bedfordshire to do, can they say that sufficient help has been given to Bedfordshire to enable it to fulfil that role?

Although Whitehall and Westminster have not been as forthcoming as they might have been over the years, they see Bedfordshire's role as providing jobs in the manufacturing and high-tech industries while at the same time doing as much as it reasonably can to solve its housing problem, it being clearly understood and remembered that in the past Bedfordshire has made a big effort to help London with its overspill and housing problem. However, that is now over and London has so many empty spaces and houses that it is asking people to come back if they possibly can. Nevertheless, that does not undo what happened in the past.

Bedfordshire has been doing two things. It has been trying to find jobs and trying to solve its housing problems and those of London as it was compulsorily required to do in the 1950s and 1960s. One of our problems has been that we have not had the financial advantages of Government help that our next-door neighbours have had in housing and industry.

Milton Keynes has a brand new railway station, plenty of bypasses and a brand new bus station. An enormous amount of public money has gone into Milton Keynes to build it up to enable it to do what it is now successfully doing. On the other side of Bedfordshire is Stevenage. That has taken an enormous amount of London's overspill. It was earmarked as the place where London's housing problems would be solved and where jobs for Londoners would be provided. In order that Stevenage would fulfil that role it was given extra Government resources.

In between those two towns is Bedfordshire, without the financial back-up that those two towns have had. There has been a squeeze on the county. The problem now is simply that the second generation of London's overspill families in Bedfordshire are all trying to seek employment in the county or as near to the county as possible. Choosing Elstow as a nuclear waste dump will do nothing to help us solve that employment problem. In fact, it will hinder that. It will do two things. It will not help us in our search to get new industry into the county, and therefore will not help us with our employment problem. Nor will it help us with our housing. I have taken on board what has been said about what happens to housing, property values and possible housing development when an area has been chosen for a nuclear waste dump.

Bedfordshire is doing its level best to attract more industry and to build up its infrastructure by, for example, building more bypasses. Moreover, we take an enormous amount of London's waste into the brickfields. The hon. Member for Stockton, South talked about the transportation of dangerous goods and substances, and so on, and a lot of that is done in Bedfordshire. We are very much the crossroads county between the industrial midlands and the east coast ports and between the south-east and the north-west.

What Bedfordshire is trying to do to boost its employment prospects by getting more jobs will not be helped by the Elstow proposal. The three points that I have picked out of the 1984 document cut clean across Elstow as a possibility. Therefore, I hope that the proposal—Elstow is close to my constituency, a mere two miles from the parish of Cranfield—will not be proceeded with so that Bedfordshire can resume its normal course of doing its level best to provide better housing, more jobs and more industry.

Dr. David Clark (South Shields): I add my congratulations to the hon. Member for Bedfordshire,

[Dr. David Clark]

North (Mr. Skeet) on his success in the ballot which allows us to debate this vital and important matter today. It has been a well-informed debate on both sides of the House. The way in which hon. Members from Bedfordshire have rightly defended their county against something which they find undesirable is understandable. But, in a sense, that shows the dilemma in which any Government—I stress that—find themselves. I shall return to those points later, although it is obviously not up to me to prejudge the issue and no hon. Member has sought to do so.

There has been much interest and debate nationally. We have heard of the situation in the Orkneys. My hon. Friend the Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Ryman) is here and I know that he is deeply concerned with the Cheviots, as I am. We have also had reference to the early drilling programmes in the Galloway hills. But the debate is also an international one. The disposal of nuclear waste is an international problem. I hope that the Government, while accepting our national obligations, will accept that we also have international obligations.

The motion mentions the miners' dispute. Naturally, with the scarcity of mines in Bedfordshire, that point has not been raised, but, representing a constituency in an area which still has coal mines I want to comment on it. We are debating the motion when we have had the longest coal strike in British history. One of the tragedies of that strike has been that, in a sense, its issues were never discussed. I remind the House that the strike was not about wages or conditions but about energy economics. That is what the motion refers to.

All energy is obtained at a cost. Nothing is free. Some costs are hidden and some are overt. The cost of producing coal was at the centre of the dispute. I have not mentioned this before in the House, but a student from Leeds sent me an article from an accountancy magazine. It was written by lecturers at Manchester business school, Sheffield university and Manchester university. Those eminent experts say that the NCB's accounts are "a mine of misinformation". The article states:

> "Careful scrutiny of NCB accounts produces the conclusion that they fail to form an adequate basis for informed management decisions."

That is an important point. The article demonstrates that it is not sufficient to look solely into the cost of mining coal. More costs than that are involved in producing energy. It is sometimes as well to remember that.

Some hon. Members may think that I am wrong, but I believe that there is a future for the coal industry. The motion refers to the percentage of electricity produced from nuclear sources, but I believe that coal has a very exciting future. I think that the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth) or the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) said that we were an energy-rich nation. Consequently, we must not allow the coal industry to degenerate so that it forms only a minor component of energy production. Our coal industry has an exciting future if we can persuade the Government to press ahead with all sorts of environmentally-led techniques, such as fluidised bed combustion.

The main thrust of my argument is that all energy is produced at a cost. Projects such as the Morecambe bay barrage may seem cost-free, but there is a price to pay. There is not only the cost of construction but the effect on wildlife. I can imagine the letters that the Minister w receive if he had to follow that path, as he might ha do.

Hydro-electricity is clean and renewable and appa involves no cost. However, I have followed the deb Norway. That country has no nuclear power. Norwegians have to go way beyond the Arctic circ Spitzbergen, to mine their coal. They rely heavi hydro-electricity and the debates held there are now reflected in Scotland.

I was also interested in the scheme intended fo Talladale and Grundie rivers, near Loch Maree, in n west Scotland. The hydro-electric board wanted to a dam and to produce hydro-electricity, but that w have meant damaging some very sensitive environm areas. Therefore, there is always a cost. I am labo that point, because nuclear energy also has a cost must never forget the cost of disposing of and st nuclear waste. I do not think that that cost has been into account when considering the economics of nu energy.

The Labour party is not against nuclear energy believe that there is a balance to be struck. By presence here today, hon. Members have shown that are informed and interested in the subject. A very em scientist told me that no nuclear power plant could ju its existence in energy terms. He argued that the co producing that energy, of running that nuclear p station, and of decommissioning and storing the wast greater than the value of the amount of energy that it ever produce. I do not know whether that is right or w but we must bear that in mind. Nuclear waste h lifespan—or, as it is called, a half-life—that varies a few hours to billions of years. That must no forgotten.

There is a price to pay for everything, and we ultimately work out whether it is worth it. In a sense price is public confidence. That point was well argue the hon. Member for Stockton, South. The Secreta State has made no secret of it. On 24 January he m statement and said that it was important to maintain p confidence. Many people will share my view that p confidence has been greatly shaken during the past tw three years. British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. must a considerable responsibility for that. It is not only acci like that on Three Mile Island that worry people. I other things have happened over here—there have cover-ups, attempted cover-ups and denials.

I pay tribute to the work of Greenpeace, not beca disobeyed the court, but because it did that work i Irish sea and forced BNFL to take action. We very welcome the millions of pounds now being spen cleaning up the effluent. All power to Greenpeace's e in drawing that matter to our attention. But people about that in Cumbria, people who worked in Sella knew about it, but knowledge of it was suppressed b management of BNFL. Thus, we welcome open because we need it.

I think that we can all agree that it is best to keep level waste on site, and stored above ground level s an eye can be kept on it until we have the technica scientific knowledge to deal with it appropri Consequently, I should like to concentrate on low- waste.

I had a very interesting discussion with a Govern official of one of the Nordic countries. Of course Nordic countries have a tendency to know the answers to everything, including nuclear problems. I asked him what was done with the radioactive material. He said that there was none. I pointed out that I thought that the Nordic countries had pretty good cancer hospitals. His face fell and he said, "Oh, I had not even thought about that." Of course he had not. The Nordic countries flush out the very low-level stuff into the sea and bury the rest on the land, in the way outlined to us by the hon. and learned Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lyell), and it is quite safe. Thus we have not only an energy problem, but a medical problem, although it is a very welcome one, in that many people have been cured and great hope is offered for the future.

As the Minister knows, my hon. Friend the Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) has taken a particular interest in this subject. I have a copy of the Western Mail in front of me, dated Thursday 7 March. It says that 10 premises discharge radioactive waste into Swansea bay. I do not wish to create any alarm about that, because it is quite safe. However, I should like to refer to an oral question of 4 March 1985, which in turn refers to Singleton hospital.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gower has discovered that there is a process by which Amberlite IRA 410 resin is used to remove radio-iodine before discharge, but he has not been able to elicit from the Welsh Office how much research is being done on that process. It is inevitable and necessary that medical processes produce low-level waste, but the effects of radioactivity can be cumulative. If there are processes by which it can be removed it would be worth while developing them. I hope that the Government will investigate the question whether there is a viable way of removing very low-level radioactivity. I understand that the half-life may be only a matter of hours, but still, during that time, the waste can be dangerous.

My hon. Friend has told me about a letter that one of his constituents, a local authority worker, has received, advising him to keep out of the main sewer from the hospital to the bay on a day when radioactive material was to be flushed out. The material is dangerous for a time, even though the safety levels are not exceeded. I hope that the Government will step up research into the possibility of removing the radioactive qualities of materials.

I turn from the question of low-level material for medical use—a question which must be tackled even though there is no great danger—to the question of public confidence. We all accept that the planning procedure is one means by which we must try to allay public fears and ensure that what is done is done in the national interest. All Bedfordshire Members have discussed how that should be done. I believe that we must adopt a twin approach to assuaging public fears. There are the planning procedures, and there is Government action. I have already applied some brief strictures to British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. I believe that that company has learned its lesson and now realises that it must be open.

I do not want to prejudge the Elstow proposals. I thought that the hon. and learned Member for Mid-Bedfordshire was somewhat unfair to the people of west Cumbria. I understand that at Drigg it is a matter of shallow clay trenches, but that the Elstow proposal is a duel proposal. One proposal is for a solution identical to that at Drigg. NIREX—I have the material here—states that one reason why it wants a site such as Elstow is that there will soon be over-capacity at Drigg. There is also a proposal to go slightly further and have higher-level intermediate waste that would be encased in concrete.

Mr. Skeet: No. The waste will be intermediate but it will be shorter-lived. The idea on Teesside was to cater for higher-level intermediate waste where the radiation would last for a long time.

Dr. Clark: I have not made myself clear. I was trying to compare Drigg with Elstow. The hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North is quite right, and I shall discuss Billingham in a moment.

I am not trying to make a constituency point. I have no constituents in west Cumbria. I am simply trying to highlight a dilemma. There is over-capacity at Drigg. If it is safe for west Cumbria—I am talking about the clay, not the concrete—it must be safe for Bedfordshire. If it is not safe for Bedfordshire, we need speedy action in west Cumbria.

Mr. Lyell: The hon. Gentleman highlights one of the serious inconsistancies in the argument. If shallow trenches are perfectly safe at Drigg—I believe that the water just runs through them, and the material is in plastic bags—what is the point of transporting hundreds and thousands of cubic yards of material hundreds of miles across England to dump them in Bedfordshire? Why is there a need for Elstow clay? Why not just dig another trench at Drigg, or somewhere nearby? If it is not safe to do that, there is a good reason for our anxiety. Can the hon. Gentleman cast any light on that dilemma?

Dr. Clark: No, I cannot. The hon. and learned Gentleman and I are trying to elicit the same information. We are talking about the clay proposal, not about the concrete, which is a different matter. We need an answer from the Government. The hon. and learned Gentleman makes a logical point when he asks why the material should be transported. Perhaps Cumbria does not have the necessary facilities. Perhaps the material does not all come from Sellafield. Perhaps—terrible thought—some of it may even have to be transported through my constituency. We are in a dilemma; that is why we need information from the Government.

Mr. Lyell: I understand that 70 per cent. of the low-level nuclear waste comes from Sellafield and that the need to turn to somewhere other than Drigg is caused by crowding out at Sellafield. I hope that my hon. Friend will enlighten us on that point. If the material can be put in open shallow trenches, why should that not be done at or near Drigg?

Dr. Clark: I hope that the hon. and learned Gentleman and I have made it clear to the Minister what information we seek.

The evidence convinces me that the low-level, short-life intermediate waste is safe. However, much depends on the topography and the clay, and on soil science. That being so, I am sure that I speak for the Liberal party as well as for my hon. Friends when I say that it is sheer folly for the Government to reduce the amount of money made available to the soil survey by 50 per cent.

We need the experts to consider such matters. I do not know the answer. The hon. and learned Member for Mid-Bedfordshire does not know the answer. If the Minister knows the answer, he knows it because he has been advised by the scientific experts. I know that the Minister has a good minder at the Ministry of Agriculture—I saw him at work in Committee earlier this week. I hope that the Minister will try to persuade the Ministry of Agriculture of the importance of reconsidering that decision. It cannot make sense to reduce the amount of money made available for scientific research with a practical application. That is the sort of thing that shakes public confidence.

Similarly, there is the case of the Natural Environment Research Council. It is crazy of the Government to cut the grant to the NERC from £66 million in 1984-85 to £57 million in 1989. Such decisions weaken public confidence in the Government. There must be a scientific and technological answer to the problem. Even if we decommissioned every nuclear plant tomorrow, the problem would remain. Will the Minister please get that policy reversed? In January, the Secretary of State mentioned the work of the NERC in a project with HMS Discovery.

The NERC does long-term research, terrestrial and marine. Its work cannot be done by giving short-term contracts to universities or private consultant organisations. The NERC's record has proved its worth to all Governments, and it is reprehensible that the Government are cutting its funding.

As the Opposition spokesman on these matters, I recently had the opportunity to familiarise myself with the work of Merlewood research station at Grange-over-Sands. I had a long meeting with members of staff and the director, Mr. Jeffers, who told me about the exciting work that they are doing on, for example, control of bracken and, dare I mention it in front of the Minister, acid rain. One essential piece of research that they are doing, which is vital to this debate, is their monitoring of the aerial emissions from the Sellafield project. They are alone in that. It is a long-term study monitoring soil, grass and sheep droppings in that part of Cumbria. We are all seeking public confidence and public safety. I should like a categorical assurance from the Minister that no financial restrictions will stop that vital research project. If he is unable to give me that assurance, public confidence will be severely shaken.

I hope that NIREX has learned a lesson. The hon. Member for Stockton, South, my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) and their colleagues fought a campaign which effectively persuaded the Government and NIREX to change their minds about Billingham. It was crass folly to contemplate putting higher-level intermediate waste under Billingham, as it would have been under an industrial area which also happens to be probably the most complex chemical industrial site in Britain. The proposal was stupid and has caused more damage to the credibility of the nuclear industry than almost anything else. I am aware that other countries are examining the possibility of storage under the sea and underground. The Swedes have a scheme for tunnelling out under the Baltic. I do not know whether they hope to be able to deal with Soviet submarines. I am not discounting the idea of storage, but it cannot be done under a major industrial complex.

Mr. Lyell: I cannot entirely agree with the hon. Gentleman. Was not the anhydrite mine frightfully good environmentally?

Dr. Clarke: The word "anhydrite" makes the point. It is dry. Westoe colliery in my constituency would not be used for storage because the water comes in far too quickly to make it useful. Scientifically, the choice was right, but we are dealing with more than a scientific matter. The public must have confidence. As the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland said, rumours now abound, nowhere more so that in the north-east. The hon. Gentleman mentioned rumours in his constituency, but, within two weeks of the Billingham decision, I was told that one of NIREX's proposals was to dump off my constituency. I do not know whether that was a red herring, but it is a serious rumour that is causing great anxiety.

I have a long letter—I do not know whether I dare mention the name with the Minister here — from Brendan Quayle, the director of Community Service for Durham County. My hon. Friend the Member for Bishop Auckland (Mr. Foster) has also asked me to draw attention to alarm at the possibility of NIREX dumping nuclear waste in Weardale. Brendan Quayle wrote:

"The area is characterised by unstable rock formations and the former lead and fluorspar mines are liable to flooding and subsidence. In addition, the watercourses which penetrate these old mineral workings lead directly into the river Wear which flows through a number of highly populated urban areas, including Durham City and Wearside".

His mentioning unstable rock formations reminds me of the brouhaha about dumping high-level waste in Galloway and the Cheviots. An article in The Times yesterday says that a senior geologist in America has suddenly discovered that one of the three sites which were to be considered for nuclear waste is in an unstable rock formation. It is important that NIREX acts quickly and that the Minister takes the opportunity to answer my questions and dispel fears.

Dumping at sea seems, on the face of it, to be an attractive alternative. It is a case of out of sight, out of mind. As I represent many seamen, I might be more aware than some that it is not so attractive. I do not want to prejudge whether we should dump in the sea—it is a matter on which the experts should convince us. Disquiet was expressed in February 1973 at the conference in London on dumping. Other Governments, especially from countries around the North sea, such as Germany, Norway and Denmark, were worried about Britain's actions. I was pleased that the British Government were prepared to accept the pressure from our neighbours and to suspend dumping while the inquiry went ahead. We have since had the Holliday report, and it might be opportune for the Minister to comment on some of its recommendations today. That report recommends that dumping should not be resumed until current international reviews and the comparisons of sea dumping with land-based alternatives have been completed.

I am deeply worried about our becoming isolated from our neighbours on environmental matters. It happened on acid rain. We had a long and interesting debate on Tuesday about the Food and Environment Protection Bill, in which the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North participated. The figures show that we dump more material in the North sea than any of our neighbours. The figure I have, 98 per cent., was confirmed in chapter 4, paragraph 100, on page 109 of the Royal Commission report.

We have a different perspective of the North sea from our neighbours. We have fast rivers, assume that dumping is safe and think that the risk is minimal. We have strong tides, but our neighbours have not. The Federal Republic of Germany has a completely different attitude from ours, as do most of our neighbours. Environmental isolation involves economic cost. I know that the Minister was not responsible for Tuesday's debate, so I draw his attention to the fact that the Swedish Prime Minister has already said that, unless Britain acts responsibly, in an environmental sense, economic action will have to be taken against us. I make that point only to urge the Government not to follow their course of dumping in the sea.

We are talking about material that is dumped on the surface of the seabed. Regarding the research work on canisters that are dumped on the seabed, not under the bed, has any work been undertaken to see whether those canisters can be retrieved? Similarly, would it be possible to retrieve barrels which have been dumped in various seas, if it were discovered that our scientists were wrong? It is amazing how scientists make mistakes as, indeed, we all do on occasions.

The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland may have touched on the proposal by Ensec to emplace torpoe-type canisters, into wells drilled in the seabed. We would use the technology of the oil and gas industries to do that. I do not wish to prejudge the issue, and I can see both advantages and disadvantages in doing that. As I understand it, capsules containing intermediate waste would be emplaced, and with the decommissioning of the old Magnox plant and other old facilities there will be an increasing problem. The wells into which the canisters are placed are sealed on top with concrete.

I have had brief discussions with the company, which assured me that it would be possible to retrieve those containers easily. Obviously that has certain attractions, but to do that, we need scientific evidence and the international co-operation of our neighbours. It would be folly to do that without them. I am not endorsing the scheme in any way, but seeking to explain it to the House, because it has not been explained as fully as it might have been. Is Government research being done to examine that interesting project?

The problem will not go away. I re-emphasise that even my right hon. and hon. Friends who are so green that they do not believe in nuclear power must face up to the problem. It is interesting that Sweden had a referendum and decided to phase out nuclear power by the year 2000 or 2010. However, it still faces the problem of what to do with the waste. Whatever party is in power, it will have to solve that problem. I have approached the debate in that spirit. I suggest to the Government that we have as much openness as possible, that together we try to build as much public confidence as possible, that we scotch as many rumours as possible and that we proceed with as much caution as possible, bearing in mind that waste and its management is a cost that must be borne in mind when we deal with nuclear energy.

Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory (Wells): I have been sitting among a cluster of distinguished hon. Friends from Bedfordshire, but I cannot claim such a direct interest in the debate, as I come from Somerset, which has not received the same attention from the nuclear power industry, although in the past various sites near Somerset have been mooted as possible areas for waste disposal. We have two nuclear power stations at Hinkley Point near Bridgwater. I shall, therefore, speak generally to the motion.

Public misunderstanding on the issue is high. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) for instituting this debate, which I hope will dispel some of the misconceptions that surround the issue. I appreciate the presence of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment this morning. It is wrong for the Department of the Environment to be seen simply as sweeping up behind the nuclear power industry, when we need a co-ordinated approach between Government Departments, in order to get the right policy nationally.

Nuclear power has been overshadowed during the past year by the miners' dispute, although the dispute has brought home to the public the need and desirability for a diversified energy supply. The Sizewell inquiry also may have postponed some thinking about nuclear energy. We await eagerly the publication of the report. However, before then, it is necessary for us to pay continuing attention to how nuclear waste is to be dealt with. Whatever route we follow, nuclear waste will have to be managed and disposed of, and the long time lag between the decision and the implementation of it means that we must discuss these matters now rather than later.

Unfortunately, technology and politics collide in this issue, and technology does not come off best. Few hon. Members are technically equipped. I plead guilty to that, although I am an enthusiastic amateur and try to discuss science and technology as rationally as I can. I have noticed that people who are otherwise sane and sensible allow emotion and instinct to cloud their judgment on technical issues. However, the fault is not all theirs, because technicians frequently fail to understand the political dimension of, and to underestimate perfectly legitimate public anxiety about, some of their activities.

I have little to say to people who equate nuclear power with nuclear weapons. Recently I was on a trip to Japan and visited Hiroshima, which was the site of the first atomic bomb explosion, and a Japanese nuclear power station. The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) was an excellent companion on that trip. He will agree that it was reassuring to see that, although Japan has suffered from atom bombs, it is turning the same physics to safe and peaceful use.

For other people, the benefits of nuclear energy are plain to see but the risks are simply too great. It must be said immediately that they are right in one sense: no human activity is entirely free from risk. Life can never be completely safe. But we do not ban cars because many people are killed in them, and we do not stop building dams or flying in jet aeroplanes because catastrophes occur. The same is true of energy. There is no risk-free way of producing electricity or energy, and there is no means of doing so that is free of an environmental impact on the surrounding countryside and atmosphere.

The hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) was right in saying that with energy production there are associated costs which must be taken into account. Indeed, the burning of coal is risky. It has to be mined, and that costs miners' lives. It has to be transported in bulk by road or by rail—chiefly by road now, I suppose. It has to be burnt, and that pumps carbon dioxide into the air. That gas is not itself polluting, but many scientists are concerned that the amount of carbon dioxide in the air has risen substantially in the past 40 years or so. That creates a greenhouse effect, which could be heating up the surface of the earth, with unpredictable consequences.

[Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory]

There is also the problem of acid rain, with a complex bundle of causes and effects, but it is certain that the emissions and exhausts from coal-fired power stations play a part and have a damaging effect on forests, lakes and rivers. The exact mechanism is unknown. It is perhaps a paradox that, although we have been burning fossil fuels for centuries, the chemistry of what happens, and its effect on the environment, has yet to be worked out.

I do not want to do to the coal industry what the enemies of nuclear power have done and spread general alarm and suspicion. I hope that we shall continue to burn substantial quantities of coal, and I believe that we should. However, I part company from the SDP spokesman, the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth), when he calls for an energy plan. It is not sensible to predict exactly what proportion of our electricity will be generated by the various means until we can see how the economics are evolving. For example, it was wrong to make predictions about future coal use until we saw how the coal dispute would end. I hope and think that, if we can achieve sensible economies in our coal industry, we should be able to remain substantially dependent upon coal for many years to come.

All electricity generation is accompanied by risks and drawbacks, and so it is with nuclear power. It is our job to identify those risks and to minimise them. Fortunately, a great deal is known about nuclear reactors, radiation and nuclear waste, even though the technology is still evolving. Radiation in particular is easy to detect, even in small dosages. That conflicts with public perception. The public think that radiation is difficult and mysterious, whereas it is emissions from coal-fired power stations which are more difficult to detect and control, and less is known about them.

I think that the public living near nuclear power stations have confidence in the technology, and that confidence is to some extent supported by responsible research. For example, in November last year, Somerset county council published a report entitled "Leukaemia in the West of Somerset", which is relevant to the debate, because that is where the two nuclear power stations at Hinkley Point are situated. In contrast to a number of other reports about leukaemia in other parts of the country, the tone of the report is sober. It goes into great detail, analysing medical statistics. It concludes that there is no special incidence of the various forms of leukaemia in the area of west Somerset, and certainly none that can be attributed to radiation emitted from Hinkley Point. But I am afraid that it is true that reports of that nature are not read by the public and are not picked up by the media.

The same is true of the report that followed the accident at Three Mile Island near Harrisburg in America. I dare say that if one were to ask a cross-section of the public in Britain what happened at Three Mile Island they would say that hundreds of people had been killed and that it was indeed a catastrophe. The fact is that no one died as a result of the accident at Three Mile Island, and the Kemeny report which was subsequently published showed conclusively that the surrounding residents were subjected to only a very slight increase in dosage.

Hon. Members may or may not know that most radioactivity to which they are subjected occurs naturally. About 80 per cent. comes from the atmosphere, from the food that we eat, the houses in which we live, and so on. The bulk of the remaining 20 per cent. comes chiefly fro medical sources, X-rays and so on, and only a tiny fractio can be attributed to emissions from power stations or fro the reprocessing of fuel. Therefore, a slight increase in th section has an almost negligible effect on the overa dosage that the public are receiving, and so it was aroun Three Mile Island, but that is not the public perception

There is a great gap between the knowledge of th experts and the knowledge of the public. I hope tha responsible commentators and people in the media wi realise how important it is to understand the issue and no to scare the public with sensational reporting an misunderstanding of statistics which are readily available

Apart from the nuclear power stations themselves, th management of nuclear waste coming out of them pose a special problem. As far as I am aware, the cost o management and disposal of such wastes is taken int account in assessing the economics of nuclear power. I believe that the hon. Member for South Shields wa mistaken in that respect. The figures that I have seen, comparing the costs of electricity generation, provide fo the disposal of nuclear wastes. It is still true that base-load electricity is cheaper to generate by nuclear means.

Dr. David Clark: I fail to see how that can be taken into account when we do not yet have a policy for the storage and disposal of the waste. That is what the debate is about today. There may be a very general estimate, but there cannot be anything like an effective cost evaluation, because we do not yet have a policy. We are trying to feel our way towards one. I take the hon. Gentleman's point, but I hope that he sees my point.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's point, but while he is right in saying that the details are unknown, even if exceedingly generous allowances are made for the subsequent costs of the disposal of nuclear waste, in most cases nuclear power is still slightly cheaper than alternative means of producing electricity.

Technology is still developing, and it is essential that the House maintains pressure on the regulatory authorities, BNFL and NIREX, to ensure that safety and public protection are given a higher priority than simple economy and convenience. If that does not happen, nuclear waste might become a burden on future generations. Like the coal pit at Aberfan, it might one day take revenge. That is why it is necessary to address ourselves, not just to the convenience and economy of the matter, but to safety for many generations to come.

There may be a breakthrough with fusion power. Fusion is a means of producing heat and energy through fusion, rather than fission, of atomic nuclei. Even if I fully understood the physics, I would not try to explain it, but such a power station would produce very little waste and have an almost inexhaustible supply of fuel. The engineering barriers to be overcome are formidable, and at the moment fusion remains a dream, although a dream worth pursuing. Research is going on not just in this country and other parts of Europe but in America, the Soviet Union and Japan. However, for the foreseeable future, we shall be operating conventional nuclear power stations from which waste is inevitable.

Low-level waste from nuclear power stations and from other sources such as hospitals may be disposed of by shallow burial, and that is relatively uncontroversial, because the radioactivity is fairly shortlived. Of much greater concern is the intermediate and high-level waste, on which this debate has mainly focused. Such waste is produced from spent fuel coming out of power stations and from the reprocessing of that fuel. It is stored mostly in liquid form at Sellafield or existing power stations, and it is the aim to vitrify this liquid, which not only reduces its bulk but makes subsequent storage a great deal easier and safer.

I hope that we can move without too much delay towards the final disposal of radioactive waste and that we do not have a continuing policy of long-term storage. On this I differ from the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland, who was suggesting that long-term storage is preferable. Although storage is necessary for a time, while radioactivity decays and heat is lost, it creates difficulties of management and security. There is already a heavy enough responsibility on the management of Sellafield, without burdening it with the long-term storage of waste simply because we fail to provide disposal sites.

I do not want to go into the methods of long-term disposal. Most of them entail deep burial of one sort or another, and investigations are still proceeding. It can be done without long-term risk, but I do not wish to suggest, and it is not for me to propose, that Elstow in Bedfordshire is the right or suitable site. It is probably necessary to take account of population. Scientists and technicians may feel that the overriding priority is to find a safe site that is perfect from the technical point of view. As politicians, we must understand that people's concern, even if not strictly rational, must be taken into account. It may be necessary to site the long-term storage depots away from population centres, even if it is the second-best technical solution.

Waste disposal is inextricably bound up with the technology and the means by which we develop our nuclear industry. I shall touch on security and its association with our fast breeder reactor programme. Research into a fast breeder reactor is proceeding not only in this country but in many other countries, often in a collaborative programme. The fast breeder reactor uses, as part of its fuel, plutonium, and the operation of the reactor produces or breeds more plutonium, and this enables a more complete use of the uranium fuel. In other words, it is more economical. It allows us to be less dependent on outside supplies of uranium and it can use plutonium used in other reactors. A great deal of plutonium is already being stored at Sellafield, anticipating the commercial operation of a fast breeder reactor.

That may be well and good, but I am concerned because the increased use, transport and storage of plutonium raises questions of security. Plutonium is a highly poisonous substance and in the hands of terrorists could be extremely dangerous. It also has implications for nuclear weapons proliferation, because if fast breeder technology becomes generally available throughout the world, and can be bought by developing countries, it could become more difficult to control nuclear weapons proliferation because of the quantity of plutonium and the ease with which it could be acquired.

I may be exaggerating the danger, but the fast breeder programme may have a technological momentum which may be taking us down a path regardless of the merits of the case. Fast breeder reactors will always be more expensive to build and more complex to operate, and although they will use less fuel, there is, nevertheless, plenty of uranium in the world—reserves are enormous—and it is difficult to see that uranium shortage will ever be a constraint on our or anyone else's peaceful nuclear power programme.

Therefore, I have reservations about the fast breeder reactor, not about its safety or operation, but about its associated fuel cycle, and I hope that the prospect of a fast breeder reactor in commercial use is not in any way holding up our waste disposal programme.

Nuclear power can be managed safely and effectively. Mistakes have undoubtedly been made, particularly at Sellafield, but none of that underestimates my basic confidence and my hope that our continuing successful programme will not be held up through a political and institutional failure to provide disposal sites.

It is important that we move towards a satisfactory waste disposal route. It needs a lead from the Government, but above all it needs informed public debate, and I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North for giving us this opportunity to discuss the matter today.

Mr. Graham Bright (Luton, South): I shall reiterate some points that have been made in the debate, especially those on behalf of Bedfordshire. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on bringing the matter to the House for discussion, and it has turned out to be an extremely informative debate. In particular, I thank my hon. Friends who represent Bedfordshire constituencies for their constructive speeches. They have clearly given the subject a great deal of thought.

This issue arouses strong feelings. The prospect of the establishment of inland sites into which low and intermediate-level radioactive waste may be disposed is the cause of considerable concern to residents of the areas under review. They have no means of telling whether the process will be safe. Inevitably, therefore, they prefer not to take any risks—a view which I understand and share.

I have every sympathy, however, with the Government, who are faced with the responsibility of deciding where the waste should go. It is not a choice that can be avoided, because we must face the problem. It will not go away. The Government have a duty to satisfy themselves and the nation that their decisions are as acceptable and safe as expert judgment can render them.

Reference has been made to short-term and long-term storage and disposal. Bearing in mind that we are thinking, not of three or four years, but of thousands of years in some respects, perhaps we ought to consider storage in the short term and ways in which the waste material can be retrieved. As such rapid progress is being made in science, I am convinced that eventually we shall find a solution to this problem. It is important that this material should not be put into the ground in such a way that it cannot be retrieved. Therefore, I have misgivings about the Elstow storage depot in Bedfordshire.

The view that that site is completely unsuitable is widely held throughout the county and it has been expressed by my hon. Friends this morning. We do not know whether the Elstow site is geologically safe. We do not know whether the clay belt is thick enough. In recent weeks there has been a great deal of confusion about that. We do not know exactly what safety measures will be required or what kinds of transport will be used. This material will be brought into the county from all over the country. There are great fears throughout the county about how it will be transported through the towns and villages of Bedfordshire. All these matters have still to be clarified.

The obvious way to clarify them is by means of a public inquiry. I understand that in October 1983 the Department of the Environment gave undertakings to Bedfordshire county council that such an inquiry would take place before NIREX began investigatory works at Elstow. The news that a special development order could be granted to permit NIREX to conduct its preliminary investigations, thereby cutting out a planning inquiry at this stage, came as a considerable shock. What concerns me is that, because no public inquiry is to be held, a great deal of propaganda and publicity is being put out by NIREX. A very good survey has been carried out during the last week by Anglia Television. It shows that people are more alarmed by the publicity material that they have received from NIREX than they were before they received it. It underlines the fact that a public inquiry and a debate on the issue should be held, rather than that we should merely rely——

Mr. Skeet: We have just finished the Sizewell inquiry, which lasted for 340 days. I do not suggest for one moment that this inquiry would last for so long, but will my hon. Friend say perfectly frankly that he would welcome such an inquiry, so that the nuclear waste issues can be fully discussed and the facts evinced?

Mr. Bright: I could not agree more with my hon. Friend. I should greatly welcome such an opportunity. That is what I am asking for. There should be a public inquiry at an early stage. The decisions which seem already to have been made are not very helpful. They have disappointed Bedfordshire county council and the district councils. The people living in and around Elstow are afraid that their views will not be taken fully into account before a final decision on the establishment of a disposal site is taken. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment has a chance to set their minds at rest. I hope that he will take up the challenge and do so.

Detailed tests are, of course, necessary to discover whether a site is suitable. Those who are in favour of this site must understand that they have to prove their case. Evidence must be made available for public scrutiny and be open to formal challenge. The voice of local residents, organisations, district and county councils and of the safety experts must be heard. Only then will an impartial assessment of the evidence and a decision that can be defended be possible.

My constituency is at the southernmost tip of Bedfordshire, and about 15 miles from the site. Nevertheless, there is widespread alarm at the prospect of nuclear waste, however low its radioactive level, being dumped in the county. By no stretch of the imagination can Bedfordshire be described as sparsely populated. Elstow is an urban area, and no amount of evidence or argument will satisfy the real fears of residents in that area.

I urge the Government to think again, especially about the way in which they are handling the planning and the opportunity for a public inquiry, because they are dealing with the fears and emotions of people and they should n rely on mere scientific theory, which is sometimes high questionable.

Mr. John Ryman (Blyth Valley): I, too, congratula the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) o raising this important topic. I wish briefly to put the cas for the north-east of England, where there is deep anxiet about this problem.

It is an open secret that the CEGB is running around th Cheviots and the area of Druridge bay making the mos fiendish plans in the most surreptitious way for the futur use of land in that areas for the dumping of nuclear waste

Public confidence has been mentioned in several ver able speeches from both sides of the House. To me, public inquiry is a two-edged weapon. It provides semblance of fairness in that objections are heard, a senio judicial figure conducts the inquiry with great fairness an dignity and many days or weeks are spent hearing evidence and perusing proofs of evidence. I strongly suspect, however, that often it is no more than a charade because the Government have already made up their mind about the action to be taken. Two and half years ago, the Secretary of State for Energy—now Chancellor of the Exchequer—when he was contemplating setting up the Sizewell inquiry, said in reply to a parliamentary question from me that that inquiry was to be the first of several in various parts of the country where the Government wished to site pressurised water reactors. That reinforced the alarm in the north-east, especially in Northumberland, in view of the plans for a nuclear power station at Druridge bay, which is strongly opposed by all sensible public opinion in the area.

Half-way through the Sizewell inquiry, which lasted almost two years, the CEGB chairman, Sir Walter Marshall, publicly stated on television that the board was determined to have a nuclear power station at Sizewell, that the inquiry was merely a formality to give members of the public, objectors and pressure groups a reasonable opportunity to raise their objections and that he felt absolutely confident that the outcome would be permission for the board to build the power station. That is a totally unsatisfactory state of affairs. I suspect that public inquiries are used by the Secretary of State for the Environment as a sop to allay public anxiety by giving a semblance of fairness when the executive decision has already been made by the Government. Indeed, in law the Government are right, because a public inquiry leads to a report by an inspector—appointed by the Secretary of State—who simply makes recommendations which the Secretary of State may accept or reject. In certain cases, the inspector has the right to make the decision himself.

I do not share the confidence of many Members that a public inquiry allays the anxiety of the public. I suggest that such inquiries are often no more than window dressing or public relations exercises and that often the decision has already been made.

Mr. Skeet: The hon. Gentleman is talking about Sizewell, which concerned a PWR. The decision was simply whether to have it or not to have it. Naturally, a number of safety measures had to be examined.

How can the hon. Gentleman say that the Government have decided that there should be a nuclear waste repository at Elstow? There are three possible sites. They have not been compared and no research has been done. The repository could be put at any one of those sites or at none of them. The Government cannot have made up their mind. Therefore, a public inquiry could not be a facade.

Mr. Ryman: I do not say that the Government have made a detailed decision. I suggest that they have made a decision in principle, with the details to be worked out later. I am not qualified to comment on the affairs of Bedfordshire, which is well represented in the debate.

However, I know that the informed opinion in Northumberland is that the Government are determined to have a nuclear power station at Druridge bay and to dump nuclear waste in the Cheviots. Little men from the CEGB were running around last summer and the one before drilling test holes and so on in the middle of the night. When we have asked the CEGB for information, we have been fobbed off with vague generalities and evasive answers, and ambiguous press statements have been issued.

There is no doubt that plans are afoot to build a nuclear power station at Druridge bay, which is strongly opposed by all sensible people in the north-east, and that there are carefully laid plans to dump nuclear waste in the Cheviots, which would be a monstrosity and is opposed by county and district councils and hon. Members of all political parties and by pressure groups representing, among others, residents and environmental societies.

We would not be satisfied with a public inquiry, because we know that the Government plan to site a power station at Druridge bay and to dump waste in the Cheviots. If the persistent rumours, based on tangible evidence and ambiguous denials by the CEGB, are wrong and the evidence is incorrect, I hope that the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment will repudiate them. I hope that he will not fob off the House with a vague general statement. There is a mass of evidence that such plans are afoot and the Government are aware of the strong opposition to them in the north-east.

It is an insult to the intelligence of ordinary people for the Government to say, "Don't worry. Before we make a final decision we shall have a public inquiry, appoint an eminent lawyer as the inspector, have lots of experts, give the objectors funds to pay for legal representation and provide premises and proofs of evidence. You can talk for a year or two, because we have not made a decision." People know that in many cases the decision has already been made. The proof of the pudding is the arrogant utterances of the chairman of the CEGB. Not only during the Sizewell inquiry did he make these pronouncements. He has made press statements — there is one in the national press today—that he is fully confident that the Government will decide in favour of siting a nuclear power station there, whatever the inspector says in his report.

Many people were at the Sizewell inquiry for months on end. The general opinion is that it will be very difficult to persuade the Government not to site a nuclear power station there, no matter how strong the evidence against it.

The general impression amongst people taking part in that inquiry is that the decision had already been made and that the onus is upon those who oppose that decision to persuade the inspector and for the inspector to recommend to the Government that that decision should not be implemented. But that is putting it the wrong way round. The onus should not be on the objectors. The onus should be on the Central Electricity Generating Board to satisfy the inspector that there are good grounds consistent with public safety and energy and environmental needs to site a nuclear power station at Sizewell. That is my point, and I do not think that I can improve upon it by repeating it.

In this lengthy, comprehensive and elegantly worded motion, reference is made to the miners' dispute, and in that respect I must take issue with the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North. It is as plain as a pikestaff to anyone with the slightest knowledge of the industry that our future source of energy is coal. Although the Government have paid lip service to "Plan for Coal", they have decimated the coal industry and are in the process of closing pit after pit. That is what the coal miners' dispute was about. It was not about pay, conditions or productivity. The lengthy mining dispute has been about jobs, pits and communities. Anyone with only an elementary knowledge of the industry knows that there are rich coalfields to be mined in many parts of the country which can be made economically viable. It is only the asinine energy policy of this Government which has jeopardised again and again the successful mining operations of our coalfields.

It is a heavy responsibility on the Government that they have sought on narrow financial criteria to close pit after pit. In the north-east of England they have been engaged in a ferocious and unintelligent pit closure programme.

In my constituency, the National Coal Board invested some £2 million a couple of years ago in new pit props in the Plessey seam of Bates's colliery in Blyth, which employed 1,700 men. A year later, before the mining dispute started in March, the board engaged in negotiations with the National Union of Mineworkers because it wanted to close that seam in which it had invested £2 million the year before and make 800 miners redundant because, on further reflection, it had decided that it was an unwise investment, and that it had better cut its losses, close the seam and throw 800 men out of work.

That is the level of commercial judgment exercised by the National Coal Board management in the north-east of England. The board invests £2 million of taxpayers' money, and a year later it says, "Sorry, we made a mistake. We shall close the seam after all."

The National Coal Board is closing the seam and throwing those men out of work because it is part of the Tory Government's policy of pit closures in the north-east. It is difficult to close a big pit, such as Bates's colliery with 1,700 men. It is easy to close small pits, as it has done at Eccles and Dudley, throwing 500 and 600 men out of work. It is not possible to close a big pit straight away. Instead, through the National Coal Board, the Government make a big pit smaller by getting rid of half the men, and then they say in a couple of years that it is only a small pit and it will have to be closed. I mention that only as an example, because the miners' dispute is specifically referred to in the motion.

It is asinine for the Government on the one hand to murder the coal mining industry with indiscriminate pit closures based on the wrong criteria and on the other to exhort the country to switch to nuclear power and to deceive the public on the siting of nuclear power stations by the vehicle of a public inquiry.

The anxieties of the people of Northumberland have not been allayed at all by any of the fine speeches heard this morning. I hope that the Minister will, when he replies to the debate, give us some assurances on the Government's intentions in the north-east.

Sir Peter Mills (Torridge and Devon, West): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) for having initiated the debate on the disposal of nuclear waste and other matters. I want to turn my attention to the transportation of waste and the important question of soil survey.

I am sorry that the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Ryman) feels that they are all little men at the CEGB. Some of them are good and deep men, certainly in my part of the world. They are only carrying out their instructions and orders. In the south-west of England, where I come from, they carry out their task well, whether they are big or small.

We in the south-west are worried about the transportation of nuclear waste, particularly as we have the naval dockyard at Plymouth, and special trains run from Plymouth to the recycling plants or factories. Some people fear that there may be an accident, although I do not really share that fear. The system is pretty safe on the whole. The modern tests on the waste-carrying wagons seem to show that they are substantial and that the situation is under control.

For all that, there are fears. Will my hon. Friend the Minister assure us that in all such matters there will be the utmost vigilance and that the Government will constantly look at new techniques for the transportation of dangerous waste material? I hope that the Government will keep a close watch on those matters.

Fears cannot be dismissed. I well remember as a boy, during the early part of the war, the huge ammunition trains trundling through the west country up steep inclines. There was always the fear that they might come off the rails, resulting in a terrible explosion and tragedy. People must be reassured, and the Government must keep a close watch on that.

The soil survey is important. I share a little concern about what is happening in that area. The officers who are carrying out those tasks have come to see me in the House and to my Back-Bench agricultural committee, and they are worried about the cutbacks. A lot has already been done in soil surveying in Britain. A first-class job has been done and there is much information about our soils. The Government will continue with that work, perhaps on a reduced scale, but private enterprise should play a bigger role. If people wish to have the information, and if it is to their advantage, that they should help to pay for it, pound for pound, does not seem unreasonable.

I hope the Minister will reassure us on those two counts. I hope that the soil survey will continue, perhaps on a limited scale, and that every encouragement will be given to private enterprise and those who benefit to take part in financially aiding the survey.

We in the south-west of England are perhaps a legitimate target for the disposal of nuclear waste, because there are very old tin and other mines in Devon and Cornwall. They may seem suitable to some people for waste disposal, but I would be against that, because, although I am not an expert, I am not happy about nuclear waste being deposited in mines or on the land. I am very much in favour of disposing of it in the sea. Mention has already been made of drilling deep holes into the bowels of the earth, under the sea, and of putting in canisters. That would seem to be the right sort of place for it.

If it is safe to put this nuclear waste somewhere in th United Kingdom, it must be safe everywhere. I do not s that there can be any argument about that. The waste ca be disposed of on the land, below the land or anywhe else. If it is safe, it must be safe everywhere. But I am su that many people in the south-west are opposed to th waste being disposed of in Cornwall and Devon. It shoul be disposed of in the sea, in wells that can be drilled. W already have the techniques needed, because of oil.

Fears do exist. Fears may be expressed in Bedford, bu there are also fears in the south-west, particularly given th enormous number of holiday makers who support ou tourist industry. Nuclear waste and nuclear power are her to stay. We should not exaggerate the problems an difficulties, but should act responsibly. The press an those with vested interests should be careful about wha they say, and should not spread alarm, gloom and so on We should think very carefully about how we make an pronouncements on such matters. In my brief speech, hope that I have been careful not to alarm people in th south-west. Nevertheless, there is some fear. But we mus not exaggerate, and I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will help to put our minds at rest.

1.7 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. William Waldegrave): One of the central messages of the speeches during this debate is that there is a very real burden on hon. Members to explain the issues properly, without stirring up unnecessary trouble, and to lead as well as to represent.

I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) for introducing this debate and for allowing us the opportunity to hold an interesting and thoughtful debate on a multiplicity of different aspects to the problem. I pay tribute also to his expert knowledge. As a very junior hon. Member compared with him, I hope that I do not sound patronising if I say that I pay tribute to him too for the courage that he displays. He has not thrown over his well-known and often-stated allegiance to the nuclear industry, although in some senses the matter has become rather inconvenient at home. I do not in any way criticise anyone else, but I greatly respect the way in which my hon. Friend has led from the front in trying to find out the truth and to represent his constituents. He has also pointed out that there is a national interest too.

I once wasted some time studying academic logic, although it is of no help to anyone who wishes to become a Member of Parliament. There used to be a famous academic dilemma, and many gallons of ink were spent writing about it. It was called the prisoners' dilemma. It is a formal logical problem in which two separate decisions have to be taken by two separate people, and the best outcome for both can be achieved only if they work in conjunction. We face a similar problem. The interests of each constituency in the land, added together, do not necessarily produce a national outcome. In this matter, we have to represent the nation's interests as well as our own, and the tension between the two can cause problems for us.

There have been several things on which all those hon. Members who have spoken have agreed. My hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North and the hon. Members for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth), for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) and for South Shields

(Dr. Clark) and others have all agreed on the importance of openness. The present Government have patiently and doggedly tried to maintain the importance of and necessity for openness. I was grateful for the tributes paid to us in that respect by the hon. Member for Stockton, South. Openness can make the job of leadership even more difficult.

Without sounding too critical of one aspect of his speech, may I say that the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland gave a good example of that when he said that he wanted me to lay to rest the rumours about the possibility of burying waste in the seabed off Orkney. He then said — as did my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordhsire (Mr. Lyell) — that we must be quite open in the discussion of options and consider every possibility. The trouble is that the more open one is about every tentative investigation, the more the rumours spread and the easier it is for people to get up scares and make rational discussion difficult. That is something that we have to face. It behoves us, therefore, to be very careful about how much currency we give to rumours.

For example, let us consider the Ensec proposal—the matter to which the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland was, I think, indirectly referring. The hon. Member for South Shields referred to it directly. He told us that he had met representatives of Ensec, as I have done. As far as I know, the proposal is one that has been honourably advanced by a serious company with a good record in oil drilling and expertise. The company's geologists and engineers have suggested that there may be an application in the nuclear field for their expertise and equipment. I can answer the question asked by the hon. Member for South Shields by saying that the Department cannot make a judgment on the matter simply by looking at the brochures. We have therefore decided to look into it and to refer it to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee for assessment, and to include it among the options to be studied in consequence of the Holliday report.

At this point, those who feel that there is a danger that some decision will be taken in consequence, years ahead, which may involve changes in planning law, and even in international treaties — those who fear that they may have to cope with that situation—begin to try to block off that route. It is difficult rationally and openly to compare all the different routes without being driven back by the pressure groups which want to pick off one or other of the options.

That is a real dilemma for the Government. The Government are willing to take the flak that results from their openness. It is right that we should do so. However, we may sometimes have to tell people that we will not deny a rumour that a particular option is being considered. We will tell the truth. We will say that the investigation is at a very early stage, that nothing has been settled, that such a decision would involve various consequences, but that we will not wholly rule it out. Such an attitude may create some anxieties in the country, but if we take the easy way out and rule out all anxieties early on we may find that we have ruled out investigations of feasible options.

I accompanied my Secretary of State when he had that self-same discussion very recently with representatives of the TUC fuel and power committee. It is right that we should discuss such matters with the TUC. The general secretary of the National Union of Seamen said in regard to the Discovery and the Laird contract that he did not want us even to consider the possibility of dumping high-level waste on the seabed. He said that he did not want the ship to sail with the penetrators on board, never mind radioactivity. We are now engaged in a dialogue with him and it behoves us to convince him that, if there is to be validity in the scientific method, scientists must be allowed to assess things, even if only to rule them out. If we do not allow that, there will be no comparisons and no way in which to convince the constituents of my hon. Friends from Bedfordshire that we have examined everything. We had a friendly and constructive discussion with the TUC, and I hope that we shall make progress.

Dr. David Clark: Perhaps I might assist the Minister and the House. Can he make it clear that my understanding of the experiment is right? Is it intended to drop canisters on the seabed and then monitor how they react? May we have a categorical assurance that the canisters will not contain radioactive material?

Mr. Waldegrave: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for enabling me to put something useful on the record. "Canisters" is not quite the right word. The devices penetrate the sea bed, take samples, monitor local geological behaviour and assess the reaction of the devices. This is not a matter covered by the motion, but is part of a research project, aimed 50 years ahead, for high-level waste. Nevertheless, I can give the hon. Gentleman the assurance that no radioactivity is involved.

I shall speak only briefly about that part of the motion which concerns the electricity supply industry, because we have had some excellent speeches on energy. My hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) made an interesting and powerful speech, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North, who is a great expert in these matters. I must disagree with the hon. Member for South Shields on whether nuclear power stations can justify themselves in economic terms. Whatever the origins of the dispute, every nuclear power station has justified itself, and more, in the past year.

I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. Member for South Shields that we must ensure a bright and stable future for coal. Much of the anxiety and conflict of the past year has been about differing interpretations of how to reach that bright secure future. We have no less a commitment to it than have Opposition Members. We believe that what we are trying to do is more practical. Whatever fuel we use, we must pay full attention to the environmental impact of it.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North, will not mind my agreeing with the hon. Member for South Shields, who said that we must not forget the waste problem with nuclear power or, indeed, any energy source. Like others, he has pressed the Government to do more about acid rain. In effect, he is saying that we are not taking into account the environmental effects of coalburn and that we should charge more costs to coal because we are not using the polluter-pays principle properly.

That could equally be argued on the nuclear front. The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland criticised NIREX for having an interest in the generation of waste, as if that were bad. That is a good institutional example of the polluter-pays principle. We can tell the nuclear industry that it is its job to make proposals and to pay for the proper disposal of its waste. That is what is meant by the polluter-pays principle.

That is a powerful and fundamental argument to show why it is right that the executive agency, which bears the costs of disposing of the waste from the nuclear industry, should be part of the industry. The responsibilities should fall on the partners of that industry. It would be wrong to make taxpayers bear that responsibility in the form of a statutory corporation. The interests of taxpayers, of the community and of safety must be met in other ways, through the controls that we place on the executive agency. It is essential that the executive agency should be linked to the industry, because that is an institutional representation of the vital polluter-pays principle.

Mr. Wallace: I wish to ask the Minister, not about that point, but about the previous point. He rightly stated, and the debate has displayed, the links between any fuel policy that we follow and the environmental implications of it. That has been illustrated in many ways. Can the Minister give any hope of a resuscitation of the Commission on Energy and Environment, as recommended by the tenth report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution?

Mr. Waldegrave: I cannot give any hope of that. I wish to seek the indulgence of the House on a matter. I have calculated that I have 78 questions to answer. If new questions come faster than I answer the original questions, we shall get into an infinite regress. My hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Mr. Hordern) has the next debate, to which I shall also reply, and I do not want to waste the speech that I have prepared for it. The punishment for having been up until 6 o'clock this morning at the Council of Ministers in Brussels is to return to find that one has not one but two debates to reply to. When one goes away, one volunteers for work, as hon. Members well know.

It may be helpful if I briefly outline the present position. An overall strategy was described in the White Paper, "Radioactive Waste Management", which was published by the Government in 1982. My Department is responsible for ensuring that a long-term national strategy is developed and implemented, in conjunction with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. Several of my hon. Friends, including my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire, suggested that the Government should reconsider whether the division between the Departments is right, and whether we worry people by making it appear that we are judge and jury in our own case. There is no fundamental difference between the role of the Secretary of State as the ultimate appellate authority on planning and the Department's responsibilities for housing or any other land use.

It is important to recognise that the Secretary of State for the Environment has a vital dual role in a range of different activities. He is responsible for house building and for speeding the provision of houses. He is also responsible for structural plans, which in some cases may not go in the same direction and, above all, for the appellate authority at the top of the planning system.

Mr. Lyell: With respect, my hon. Friend is not responsible for energy policy. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy is the junior Minister responsible for that. While it was skilful to gi example of dual responsibility, nuclear energy is no a case.

Mr. Waldegrave: I certainly would not claim th right hon. Friend has a responsibility for energy pol was saying that there is nothing necessarily illogic suspect in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of having a particular function—in this case the dispo waste — along with his planning functions. He originally given the responsibility, quite explicitly, f disposal of waste jointly with the Secretary of Stat Energy, but with himself in the lead. That was in resp to the Flowers report, as an attempt to ensure that p did not think that it was all sewn up by the energy indu It was an honourable attempt to do that. If it is not ha that effect we shall consider it again, but the ori arguments were quite strong and should not underestimated.

We are also, therefore, responsible for the rigo control of the disposal of nuclear waste to protect public and the environment from any hazards. For purpose we are advised by Her Majesty's Radiochem Inspectorate. I am glad to use that term for the first in this House. The inspectorate has only recently given that title. It deserves it, because it is a strong formidable part of my Department. In many cases responsibility is a joint one with my right hon. Friend Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The nuclear and electricity generating industries h executive and financial responsibility, as I have said, I argue that that is right as an embodiment of the pollu pays principle. I shall try to simplify what is a complica picture, because nuclear wastes vary considerably in t characteristics and therefore in their most appropr method of management.

By far the largest part of the radioactivity is contai in small volumes of heat generating waste which come the first place from the reprocessing of spent reactor fu The policy is to store them in solid form for at least years. I have to tell the hon. Member for Orkney a Shetland that if we were to close down the whole of nuclear industry, including the reprocessing side, would still have an urgent need for a lower a intermediate-level disposal site. Therefore, in terms of difficult decisions that face us, we have no rabbit hole go down; the problem will remain with us.

The policy is to store high-level waste in solid form at least 50 years at Sellafield and Dounreay until the r of heat generation has been substantially reduced natural processes. NIREX is not, therefore, concern with them. With low and intermediate-level waste there no similar advantage from delay. That is why work h proceeded on developing two types of disposal facility such wastes—one deep underground and the other ne the surface.

If I understand my hon. Friend the Member f Bedfordshire, North correctly, he is not so much disputi the content of the strategy as emphasising that there mu be full opportunity for public discussion of such matter I think that that was the main theme and burden of h speech. He was concerned with the technological optio available and the potential sites for such facilities. I assu him once again, as I did at the beginning of my speech that the Government are in absolute agreement with th objective.

I have to say that we do not agree with my hon. Friend about the particular planning route by which to reach a planning inquiry commission, and I shall explain why, but I should like first to say a brief word about the public discussion of the technological options.

The technology was comprehensively reviewed in the Flowers report on "Nuclear Power and the Environment", the sixth report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution, which was published in 1976. One of the recommendations of that report was the creation of a committee to give Ministers the best possible advice on broad issues of policy. As a result, the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee was appointed in 1978. It has had two exceedingly distinguished chairmen: first, Sir Denys Wilkinson, FRS, and, since the beginning of last year, Professor Paul Matthews, FRS, former vice-chancellor of Bath university. The chairman and a majority of the members are independent, and they include trade unionists. For the first time, recently we appointed a trade unionist from outside the industry to join those from inside. The committee contains members from the industry, both management and unions. The committee has provided important advice, which formed the basis of the 1982 White Paper.

What is especially relevant to the debate is that that advice has been set out clearly and publicly in five published reports. They have made more information about radioactive waste more widely available to the public than ever before. The hon. Member for Stockton, South rightly said that there was a certain oddity, in that we concentrate so much on those matters in the nuclear industry. Perhaps we do so because of the information that is so much more widely and easily available than the information about many other exceedingly dangerous and, in some cases—particularly dioxins—equally persistent substances which are not radioactive. That is a paradox. I am not trying to get away from my commitment to make all this information available.

That is only one part of the story. My Department has deliberately adopted the approach of making available the fullest possible information about waste management. In addition to the statistics about the discharge of radioactivity into the environment, there are reports on scores of individual, Department of the Environment funded, research projects in this sector which are freely available in the National Lending Library. There are annual progress reports on the research programme as a whole, and I could, although I shall not, as I see my hon. Friend the Member for Horsham looking at his notes, list the many other publications in this sector from both my Department and other bodies.

All that research and advice can be regarded as contributing to finding what is often called the best practicable environmental option for this type of waste. None the less, my Department is now engaged in a formal study covering all disposal and storage options. I repeat, for the benefit of the hon. Members for Orkney and Shetland and for South Shields, who are interested in this, that we are covering all disposal and storage options at sea or on land to draw the threads together and to establish the best practicable environmental options on a comparative basis.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North said, this work stems from the important and excellent review by Professor Fred Holliday and his team on the disposal of low-level wastes in the north-east Atlantic. That report was jointly commissioned by the Government and the TUC and has been accepted by both. The detailed analysis now being carried out will be completed before the end of the year and will result in a published report.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North mentioned sea dumping. The most striking thing about the Holliday report is the thorough endorsement that it gives to the science of the past. That independent committee, with a well-known and sceptical environmentalist, who I argued strongly should be on the committee if it should have the validity that it sought, has given a clean bill of health to the science of the past. There has been no detectable damage to the environment of the north Atlantic, let alone to people.

The hon. Member for South Shields asked about the retrievability of the drums put into the sea. The irony is that, although some have been retrieved by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food as part of the research programme, if we want to do that, the drums cannot be found unless we deliberately fix radio transmitters to them. The radioactivity in them is not detectable and that gives some sign of the safety margins in that process.

Dr. David Clark: The main recommendation of the Holliday report was that there should be no further dumping at sea until there was an international agreement to do that. Is that the Government's policy?

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. The Government accepted all the recommendations of the Holliday report. That recommendation is not based on any doubts about the science of the past but is about the wider context of sea dumping.

When we are discussing technological options, we have to be aware that the Select Committee on the Environment, under the chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi), has recently embarked on a thorough study of the subject. My Department and other Departments are co-operating fully on the study, and we shall await its conclusions with interest. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has undertaken that we shall not reach final conclusions, following our review of options, until the Select Committee's report is available in the latter part of this year. I hope that I have said enough to convince my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North that extensive public discussion of general policy has not only taken place but will continue to take place.

There are specific proposals for new disposal facilities and opportunities for discussion on them. Any proposal such as this will be judged against principles for the protection of the human environment, which were published in January by the authorising Departments.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North asked for reassurance that, when a site was filled and completed, there would be no radioactivity over the perimeter of the site. That will be the case while the site is a working nuclear site, as it were, and under the control of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, and so on, when the margins of error would be of the order set out in the assessment principles, which my hon. Friend has studied and which, he will agree, are low even in terms of the nuclear industry.

The principles to which I referred are the result of wide consultation. They were published as a consultation paper in October 1983, and 117 organisations and individuals responded to the invitation to comment. A summary of their comments, together with the responses of the authorising Departments, is also available in a report on the consultation exercise, which is in the Library.

The assessment principles relate primarily to the authorisation of a facility under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Planning permission is required, and the Government have said that the necessary regulations will be made so that the facility will be licensed during its operational life by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

That is an impressive range of safeguards for the public for now and for future generations. We have undertaken that any such applications will be the subject of a public inquiry under an outside inspector, and we have said that NIREX will be required to prepare a detailed environmental assessment of any proposal.

I am glad to say that at about 4.30 this morning, in the European Council of Environment Ministers, after eight years the Danes withdrew their constitutional objection to having a directive on environmental impact assessments, so that will now become Community law. We had already said that we would do it voluntarily.

That means that NIREX will be required to prepare a detailed comparison of other sites. But we have gone even further than that. In response to widespread feeling—and in response to what was urged on me by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire; I hope that I am meeting one of his concerns—we thought that it would be wrong for only one site to be considered.

I must rebut strongly the allegations—I cannot call them anything less than that — made by the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Ryman), who unfortunately is not in his place, about the behaviour of the Secretary of State. The hon. Member, as a barrister, should know that he must be careful when accusing the Secretary of State for the Environment of having a closed mind on planning applications. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that he can show that my right hon. Friend has made up his mind about planning applications before they are even put in, under the Wednesbury rules my right hon. Friend is challengeable and is open to having his decisions reversed. The hon. Gentleman said that people did not have confidence in the planning system. I thought as he was talking that that was exactly the way to undermine confidence in the system. He made an unfortunate speech for a distinguished and senior lawyer.

I have discussed the assessment principles. In addition to those, we have the environmental impact assessment and a comparison of sites. We took the view—here I disagree with my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright)—that to subject the inhabitants of wherever it may be—Elstow may be on the short list; three or four may be on the list—to long planning inquiries one after another would be a nightmare.

The inspector at the first inquiry might try to confine matters simply to drilling and investigations, but he would find it difficult to do that. There would be the prospect, if there were two inquiries end to end, of three or four years of such hardship—if Sizewell is anything to judge by — when people would be subjected to great uncertainty and distress.

The special development order procedure allows information to be gathered so that comparisons may be made. Parliament can then debate the matter, a an essential part of the public discussion of t issue. That is a sensible procedure, and I think t the support of hon. Members in saying that.

I said that I would refer briefly to the reason Government do not propose to have a plannin commission. My very well briefed hon. and learn the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire has already some of the arguments, so I can pass over th quickly. All I can correct him on is that the inquiry commission procedure goes back to 19 repeated in the 1971 Act.

The basic problem to which my hon. and learn referred, which previous Ministers in the Depa the Environment could probably confirm—and and learned Friend quoted a previous Labour Sec State on the matter — is that we do not allegedly general decisions taken in the first p planning inquiry could be considered as having c mind of the inspector in the second part of the i

A fundamental problem about the planning commission route is that it has never been used. a difficult and controversial matter as this, I beli it would be dangerous to use it for the first time occasion. However, the issues have already been are being discussed by the Royal Commissi Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Commi a Select Committee of this House. Therefore, I believe that the planning inquiry commission has add. I fear that the single public inquiry, whic compare the short-listed sites, would be a long However, it would not be quite so lengthy as two i held one after the other.

I shall now deal with some of the many questi have been raised. I can say to my hon. Friend the M for Bedfordshire, North that the Atomic Energy A is doing a great deal of work on packaging tech research into containers and the reliability of co That work will be continued. Some of it is funded Department and some by the industry.

The hon. Member for Stockton, South paid tri the campaign in Billingham. I believe that my hon. the Member for Bedfordshire, North said that in environmental terms that was probably the ideal However, we had to take into account the fact t owner of the site did not wish to co-operate. As one hon. Friends said, that would have involved prolonged and difficult compulsory purchase pro and, just as with the two inquiries, a long per uncertainty and distress for the region. Therefore, i not be tolerated.

I join the hon. Member for Stockton, South in tribute to the way in which the campaign was cond I met the campaigners the day after the Brighton bor It was a fraught day. I remember that I travelled w unusually large number of special branch officer came across many chanting people who were stand the side of the road. I said to the special branch of "What about this lot? Are they fierce?" "No", he "they are not fierce at all." So we stopped the c spoke to them. They showed me the utmost courtesy is the way to conduct matters in a free country.

The hon. Member for Stockton, South men people's fears. I have already briefly referred t problem. As the hon. Member said, politicians ha recognise people's fears, and we do. However, whe fears are groundless, we have to try to still them. We are not doing our job if we represent only the fears. We have to try to sort out the justified and the unjustified fears.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire said that only land in public ownership should be used. In the search for sites, those which are not in public ownership will not be automatically ruled out. However, my hon. and learned Friend made the fair point during the discussion on Billingham that one can land oneself in very prolonged and difficult procedures. However, if no site in public ownership can be found anywhere, we shall have to think again. Wherever it is, the site must be safe. That point was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Sir P. Mills), who represents a constituency in a less densely populated part of the country. If it is safe anywhere, it must be safe everywhere. There may be only a few dairy farmers in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), but proper care must be taken for their safety as much as for anyone else's safety.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire referred to the depth of clay and the overriding national interest, as it were, in the supply of clay. That is the type of issue that should be discussed at a public inquiry in the first instance and I know that my hon. Friend will not seek to tempt me into pre-empting its decisions.

My hon. and learned Friend and the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland both mentioned storage. There is bound to be a good deal more storage because of the slow process of all this. The BPEO study will be considering medium-term storage. All storage is medium term, although other countries are investigating storage followed by long-term disposal. We shall try to assess storage options alongside other options.

My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire asked why NIREX had chosen impervious clay when the French had chosen permeable shale. The answer is that we have a better site than they have, although the defence for their choice is that the drainage water from the site goes into the sea and is diluted, so that there is no serious worry. Prima facie, however, an impermeable site seems much better.

The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland referred to the arrogance of the nuclear industry. When I worked in industry I was in a factory which, although not associated with the nuclear industry, was on the same site as part of the National Nuclear Corporation. We should perhaps be careful when talking about people who have worked for many years in an industry which until very recently received great public support and praise. The magnificent official history of the Atomic Energy Authority shows the almost saintly position of the early nuclear power programme and the euphoria surrounding it. In those days Professor Quatermass doing secret things behind a high fence was our idea of a hero of society. That was certainly silly, but it would be equally silly now to cast the nuclear industry in the role of the source of all evil.

I, too, do not envy NIREX. It is easy to blame the messenger when one does not like the message. We should not blame the people involved. I do not seek to defend everything that NIREX has done, but it has an inherently difficult task and one must have some sympathy for it.

The hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland made an interesting and thought-provoking speech and I am sorry to have to criticise it. He said that we should not be reprocessing because it would lead to proliferation. I believe that exactly the opposite is true. The hon. Gentleman may not have noticed, but we have already proliferated. We are a nuclear weapons state, so reprocessing here will not lead to proliferation. If we encourage other countries to have reprocessing facilities the ability to produce enriched uranium will become more widespread. There is thus a strong case for encouraging those without such facilities to have their reprocessing done here.

I have dealt briefly with emplacement in the sea because My hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) apologised for having to leave early for an important constituency engagement. He asked about future disturbance and the social considerations with which the planning inquiry will have to deal. That is the proper place to deal with them. He also asked an intriguing question about where poison gas was stored during and after the last war. I fear that such storage places will not necessarily be relevant to the storage of radioactive waste. Nevertheless, I will look into the matter and write to my hon. Friend.

The hon. Member for South Shields said, engagingly, that he did not understand the meaning of the phrase "half life". I shall have a shot at explaining it to him, which is dangerous because I am in front of an expert. As I remember, this is an asymptotic curve and one can measure the time that it takes for half the energy to be dissipated from a substance, but, as the curve meets the X axis at infinity, one cannot say when it will all have disappeared. Therefore, one measures half the dissipation.

The hon. Member for South Shields rightly said that medical waste also has to be disposed of. He asked a question about Singleton hospital and its waste. I shall write to him on that detailed matter.

Important points were made about Drigg and its relationship to Elstow. It is the intention that Drigg should be reserved in future for Sellafield waste. As soon as another facility is available, other waste will go there. As my right hon. Friend said on 24 January, the new facility will probably consist of concrete-lined trenches up to 60 ft deep, covered by a thick layer of concrete and an amount of earth. That is the concept that we are dealing with, at least in the early stages. Drigg is perfectly satisfactory, but the new facility will be significantly better than Drigg.

The answer to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire is that much of the waste currently going to Drigg comes from Sellafield. That will continue, but the pressure on Drigg will be relieved by the new facility which will take waste from elsewhere.

Mr. Lyell: I had understood that 70 per cent. of all the low-level waste came from Sellafield and that it was proposed to send much of that to Bedfordshire. Is that correct?

Mr. Waldegrave: I will write to my hon. and learned Friend, but I understand that all the Sellafield waste will go to Drigg and that Elstow would take waste from elsewhere.

The hon. Member for South Shields asked a direct and important question about the funding for work on radioactivity at Merlewood and he said that that work, which deals with, among other things, gaseous emissions from Sellafield and is of great importance to my

[Mr. Waldegrave]

Department, might be affected by the reorganisation within the NERC. He asked what would happen to that work. As it is directly funded by my Department, I can give the hon. Gentleman the assurance that it will continue.

I have dealt with the questions of the hon. Member for South Shields about the retrievability of drums on the seabed. I pay tribute to the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Wells, who spoke about the nuclear industry as a whole. As he said, the fast breeder reactor can be a useful eater of waste. One can either breed plutonium for it or tune it to eat plutonium or enriched uranium. In certain circumstances, the fast breeder reactor can make a useful contribution to a waste disposal strategy.

I have made some brief and critical comments about the speech of the hon. Member for Blyth Valley. It is important that, for the sake of the constituents of the Bedfordshire Members who are here in such force, I should stress that no secret decision has been taken and that nobody's mind is closed. These matters of intense importance will be considered with all the rigour and analytical power available to the Government. That means that people will hear more than they ever wanted to hear about the pros and cons of various aspects of the nuclear industry.

I fear that people will also be subjected to all sorts of scares from people who wish the nuclear industry ill, including a small minority among them who wish our country ill. We must be realistic about the motives of some people. The great majority are genuinely concerned, but there are wreckers about. I promise the public that no decision has been made and no secret conspiracies are involved in this matter. I can give them one important assurance. If there were any secret conspiracy, I am sure that hon. Members who have attended this debate in such force would soon find out, and I do not think that it would be worth any Minister trying it on.

Finally, my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West and the hon. Member for South Shields asked about the soil survey. It was set up to conduct its great project, which is getting towards completion. That of course is why my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whose responsibility it is, has had to take the rather harsh decision to limit the resources for it. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West pointed out, if people argue that it is an essential input into decisions in the nuclear industry, for example, it behoves that industry to put its money where its mouth is and to place contracts with the soil survey, which it is free to do.

We have had a very useful, responsible and thoughtful debate, which I hope will have made some contribution to the process of public consultation to which my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North rightly attaches such importance. We shall hear much more of this subject over the coming years, and I hope that all our debates are of the same high quality as this one has been.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House, while congratulating the electricity supply industry on the production of some 18 per cent. of its power from nuclear sources as compared with 48 per cent. in France, and recognising the need following the miners' dispute to have a diversity of fuels available for the manufacture of electricity in the United Kingdom, acknowledges the need to adopt a satisfactory policy for the disposal of nuclear waste to ensure that people and the environment are protected from any hazards to which they may be exposed; expresses the need to hold a full and comprehensive inquiry into the siting of such repositories and into the several options technology has made available to the industry in such a manner that the public may participate and be fully informed of all relevant facts; and asks the Government to consider the prospect of employing the planning machinery contained in sections 47 to 49 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 relating to a planning inquiry commission.

Private Rented Accommodation

1.56 pm

Mr. Peter Hordern (Horsham): I beg to move,

That the Rent Acts be repealed.

In some respects the housing market is working admirably. I refer, of course, to the large number of people who now either own their homes or are in the process of buying them both directly in the private sector and in the public sector by virtue of the right-to-buy legislation carried through by the Government.

However, it has to be said that while that sector of the market has been performing and growing admirably, the other sector, which is the amount of housing stock available for rent, has been under great pressure. I refer especially to that part represented by the private rental market.

The consequences of the decline in the number of houses and flats available for rent has been that there is a severe shortage for young people starting out in life and looking for somewhere to live. There is also a marked shortage for people wanting to move from one place to another, for the very eldery and, most acutely, for the very poor.

It was not always the case. As long ago as 1914, the number of tenancies in private hands amounted to 95 per cent. of the total. Rents were frozen in 1915, and that was when the long decline in the proportion of accommodation available for rent really began. Rents were frozen in 1915 for reasons which must have appeared very good at the time. Rents were rising fast, and those who had to put up with those rising rents were finding life very difficult. In the circumstances at the time, the freezing of rents must have made a lot of sense, but I do not think that those circumstances can be said to apply today.

In other countries, so far from there being a majority of houses owned in the private sector, there is a majority of rented accommodation. There are 9 million dwellings which are owner-occupied, whereas there are 14·5 million which are rented. In this country, there are twice as many owner-occupied houses as there are rented in both the private and the public sectors.

The high figure of rented accommodation has come about in Germany, for example, because in the 1960s new tenancies were allowed to be let at the market rate after many years of rent control. But existing tenancies up to that time were allowed to stand and existing tenants had their rents increased in line with costs and had security of tenure.

Much the same seems to have happened in France. In the 1960s rent control was removed from new tenancies. In Germany, substantial tax advantages were given to encourage higher income individuals to become small landlords. The same has happened in the United States under the tax shelter schemes there. One cannot but help notice the difference between the positions there and here.

In Britain, under the business expansion scheme, rich individuals are encouraged to buy farms and even office blocks, but they are not encouraged by any form of tax shelter to build properties for rent by ordinary people.

Therefore, the first conclusion to which I have come is that private landlords in Britain are treated worse than they are anywhere else.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): What happened in relation to security of tenure in France and Germany?

Mr. Hordern: I have mentioned that. Security of tenure was allowed in those countries, and I shall deal with that later.

Rent control has existed in Britain since 1915. I accept that improvements have been achieved in the Housing Act 1980, in the form of both shorthold and assured tenancies. But if one looks at the small amount of private rented accommodation that is available — now only about 10 per cent. of all rented accommodation — it is clear that there are many bogus lets. There are holiday lets, licences, and what one can only call bogus company lets.

A survey carried out some little time ago among students in Leeds revealed that 60 per cent. of their temporary agreements were in the form of licences. In their evidence to the Select Committee on the Environment, witnesses from Liverpool suggested that 50 per cent. of all new lettings might be in the form of non-exclusive licences. The Small Landlords Association, in its evidence to the Select Committee, said that not one of its members who re-let property ever let it out again under the terms of the Rent Act. The same proportion, about 50 per cent., was found by the GLC when it made a survey.

In contrast to both the owner-occupier and local authority sectors, there is no incentive for the private landlord to invest in his property. Therefore, rent control is not the only reason — although it is certainly the most important — why the supply of rented accommodation has dried up. The lack of incentive for landlords has also exacerbated that effect. The difficulty is that the fair rent regime has done nothing to encourage demand to provide accommodation for rental, although, of course, the demand has always been there.

Therefore, the second conclusion that I reach is that there is a substantial demand for privately-rented accommodation, which, under the present arrangements, there is no prospect of meeting.

It is generally agreed that there is a shortage of housing, and that the quality of our housing stock is not what it should be. There is a substantial incentive for people to become owner-occupiers and there are further substantial subsidies for council house tenants. But the effect of mortgage tax relief has been to increase the price of houses, and the cost of subsidies to councils has restricted the number of council houses that have been built.

Furthermore, the effect of low council house rents is to freeze the population in their present homes. It is not possible for them to move freely from one part of the country to another. It is particularly harsh on those who live in areas of high unemployment, who are encouraged by my right hon. Friends in government to move from those areas to places where work can be found, only to find that there is nowhere for them to live when they get there. It is almost impossible to escape from places like Liverpool to other parts of the country because of the difficulty of finding accommodation to rent. Except at high rents, there is no free unsubsidised market in rents. That accounts for the rapid decline in rented accommodation, which now represents about 10 per cent. of the total.

There is no question but that the present position has been brought about by the Rent Acts. There seem to be two difficulties about the Acts. First, there is not enough rent for landlords to care for their properties and there is not enough property to let. Secondly, we have the problem of no security for the landlord. I do not think that it is possible to interfere with present arrangements and contracts, but if the Rent Acts were repealed for new lettings—as was the position in France and Germany in the 1960s—rents could be de-controlled.

Of course, rents would rise. I know that the Government are conscious of the effect of a rapid rise in rents in the private sector. As it is, some 35 to 40 per cent. of council tenants now receive housing benefit, and the costs of that would also rise. I believe that the costs have already risen from about £278 million in 1979 to £2,780 million in 1985-86. That is a tenfold increase.

What do the Government think will happen if and when the councils are allowed to spend the £5 billion that they have from the sale of their council homes? What is certain is that there will be a big increase in building and a large extra demand for housing benefit. However, if the Rents Acts are repealed, the rent in the landlord's hands will be taxable for income tax, and if the property is let by a company corporation tax will apply. It must be much cheaper for the Government to increase the supply of rented accommodation in the private sector than to have a vast expansion of rented accommodation in the public sector.

I do not think that there would be much effect on the public sector borrowing requirement if the Government were substantially to increase, or to allow an increase in, the amount of property available in the private sector. It would surely be better to encourage more privately rented accommodation and to replace housing benefit with a minimum guaranteed income, but not until the Rent Acts have been repealed. It would also be better to allow the housing market to conform more closely to demand. As the House will know, there is no rent control in the United States and there is a substantial shift of people and work from one part of the country to another—notably from the north to the south. In the United States, people are prepared to build for rent, and in West Germany there are subsidies for landlords to improve their homes. But in the United Kingdom there is no subsidy, and the landlord cannot offset loss of rental income against other income. Therefore, there is positive discrimination against the private landlord in the United Kingdom. There is no incentive whatever to let, and consequently there is no temporary housing market.

For those who cannot afford to buy, or who cannot find council homes, the only alternative is to depend upon their councils—as they do to an increasing extent—for bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Hon. Members should recognise the cost of such accommodation. From the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, I believe that the cost of such board and lodging has increased from £166 million in December 1982 and now, together with the cost of private and voluntary residential care, is about £570 million a year. That figure is expected to increase by 50 per cent. by the end of the year.

It is a rotten kind of market if those who want to move home or those who want to set up home on their own for the first time, and who are unable to afford to buy or to get on a council house list quickly enough, find that the only alternative is bed-and-breakfast accommodation at very great cost to the country. I do not have to remind the House about the recent case of a family staying at the Adelphi hotel in Liverpool.

People are stuck in an institutionalised housing market. There is no attempt to generate competition to give people what they want at a price that they can afford. It is perfectly respectable to rent rather than to buy and, to the extent that people did so, there would be less mortgage tax relief. The Treasury has not sufficiently explored the financial consequences—I believe that they would be beneficial, compared with the present situation—of making possible a substantial increase in rented accommodation.

I believe that there should be security of tenure, provided that the landlord is allowed to charge the economic rent at a time of rent review. Should there be any dispute at that time, there should be the right to go to arbitration.

The repeal of the Rent Acts would do more than any other measure to enable people to move freely about the country. At present, people are tied to their council homes, many of them with little hope of finding jobs. Alternatively, they have to fall back on bed-and-breakfast accommodation if they wish to move.

Repeal would do more than any other measure to boost the construction industry at no cost to the Exchequer. It would also give thousands of young people the opportunity of having a roof over their heads—something that at present they have no prospect of achieving.

I do not ask for any restraint in the building of council houses. I ask only that it should be supplemented in the private sector. The Rent Acts have caused too much misery to too many young people for too long. It is time that they were swept away, to enable thousands of young people to find their first home and have some hope for the future.

2.12 pm

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): The hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Hordern) has made a thoughtful speech. He recognises that owner-occupiers receive a massive subsidy by way of mortgage interest relief—£3·5 billion to £4 billion this year, compared with a sum only one seventh or one eighth as large which goes to council tenants. The hon. Gentleman also conceded that there is, at present, evasion of the Rent Acts on an extraordinary scale by means of licensed and other lettings that leave people with no security, as well as lettings to students, corporate lettings and so on. The hon. Gentleman recognises—as anyone who looks at the problem of rented accommodation must recognise—the problem of lack of mobility in this country. I often feel that those who live in rented accommodation in my constituency are trapped. At the poor end of the market, they cannot buy accommodation, and if they want to move in order to be with relatives, to seek work or to retire, they find themselves in a trap. The arrangements for mobility in local authority accommodation do not work sufficiently well.

The hon. Gentleman recognised the enormous and wasteful cost of bed-and-breakfast accommodation and finally conceded that, under any regime under which the Rent Acts were repealed, there should be security of tenure. One of the extraordinary contradictions of the Conservative Governments in the 1950s was that they repealed security of tenure in 1957 for many Rent Act tenants while in 1954 they gave security of tenure to business tenants.

Any suggestion that the Rent Acts are to be repealed is likely to make hackles rise on the Opposition Benches, but I must concede—although I disagree with him—that the hon. Gentleman spoke thoughtfully and with good intentions. The problem—as the hon. Gentleman had to concede—is that the abolition of the Rent Acts involves the abolition of any form of rent control. That is the nub of the difficulty.

Those who look for rented accommodation are at the lower end of the wage scale. They will tend to take on commitments beyond their means if there is no rent control, or they will not find accommodation. The housing market is not homogeneous, even for owner-occupiers. The poverty, deprivation and lack of capital to carry out repairs among owner-occupiers is rapidly emerging. The English house condition survey showed that 1·1 million homes were unfit and that another 500,000 needed a substantial amount of money spent on them. Many such homes are concentrated not among private landlords, of whom there are few, but poorer owner-occupiers.

Examination of who occupies council estates reveals that Lambeth is not unusual in having about 66 per cent. of its tenants in receipt of housing benefit. We shall not help those who need rented accommodation by abolishing the Rent Acts because it will not result in their finding access to the accommodation that they need. In some parts of the country, of course, there is no acute housing shortage. In those circumstances, the fair rent provisions do not apply as the fair rent is the market rate. The Rent Acts merely remove the scarcity element. Acute shortages of accommodation in city areas will not be solved by abolition of the Rent Acts. Indeed, I believe that abolition would do more harm than good.

I agree that we need much more rented accommodation. That is why we decry the Government's attack on making property available to rent. We do not quarrel quite as much as we used to about the right to buy, but about 800,000 homes out of a stock of about 5 million council dwellings have been lost and the amount of money made available to housing associations has been cut rapidly, again reducing the amount of money available to build new homes to rent.

We should consider carefully some of the hon. Gentleman's suggestions about investment and tax treatment. There is no point in a tax regime that disadvantages the landlord, the tenant and the country. The main thrust must come not from repealing the Rent Acts, which should be strengthened to deal with abuses, but by encouraging greater investment by local authorities and housing associations. Ultimately, the problem of lack of housing to rent is the problem of those who are not rich enough to buy accommodation or who, for various reasons, do not want to buy. Despite some malfunctions, the Rent Acts have served the country well.

2.18 pm

Mr. Peter Lilley (St. Albans): I support my hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Mr. Hordern) and congratulate him on presenting a motion on this important subject with his customary lucidity and eloquence.

I was still in my political pubescence when I was jolted into awareness of the problems caused by rent control by a speech delivered in my constituency by the right hon. Member for South Down (Mr. Powell) with his characteristic flamboyance. He described rent controls as a great evil which was the mother of five other evils. His predictions have been confirmed. Although he seemed characteristically to overstate the case, the evidence shows that he understated the extent of the damage that can be done by rent controls.

The first evil which the right hon. Gentleman described was under-occupation in the rented sector. When children leave home, families do not move to smaller accommodation because they cannot afford to leave a rent-controlled property.

The second evil is the encouragement and artificial inducement that exists for landlords to sell rented property to owner-occupiers, thereby diminishing the stock of property available to rent. Although the Conservative party supports owner-occupation, we do not support the artificial stimulation of it at the expense of the necessary continuation of an adequate rented sector.

The third evil that is the result of rent control is the immobility that it imposes on people. My hon. Friend the Member for Horsham made that the point of his motion. With 3 million unemployed, and with jobs available in some parts, not least in my constituency, those who oppose the abolition or reduction of rent controls must square that with the fact that in so doing they are perpetuating and prolonging unemployment, which is a greater evil than any evils with which rent controls may deal.

The fourth evil still persists and is the continuing disrepair and dilapidation into which private rented accommodation is inclined to fall if landlords cannot charge the market rent.

The fifth evil is the injustice between tenants and non-tenants, and between tenants and landlords. Often a landlord is poorer than the tenant of his controlled property.

Since those days, evidence has accumulated to show that a further two evils exist. The Milner Holland report in 1965 made it clear that because of rent controls landlords have an inducement to harass and winkle out tenants so that they can sell their properties with vacant possession. That is bound to persist so long as rent controls keep rents below the market level.

A further problem caused by rent controls is the discrimination against newcomers to the housing market, including discrimination against immigrants, young people, those who have no capital, and those who have newly formed separate households because of divorce or because they have recently left home. Plenty of evidence is accumulating to show that discrimination is the inevitable consequence of rent controls. A study by Doling shows that, whereas in Birmingham 10 per cent. of those in rented accommodation are immigrants, none was in rented property with registered rents. In other words, they all had to escape into the residual free market which we tenuously allow to exist alongside the regulated sector. That is characteristic of the problems created by rent control.

Wherever a landlord is forced to set his rent below the market level, he will have a queue of applicants and be able to discriminate between them. He will often discriminate against immigrants, the young, families with young children, and so on. We must ensure that that cannot exist.

The problem is especially acute in my constituency, which is comparatively prosperous. For that reason, because of the development of the M25 and the M1, and so on, people try to move in and thus drive up the prices of owner-occupied houses. Local people, and others who would like to move in the area for jobs, and would be prepared to pay a market rent for a room or two, cannot do so, so long as rent controls persist.

Even if we are forced to keep the present structure of rent controls, I hope that we shall ensure that new lettings are exempt from rent controls and that the problem of housing benefit is tackled by not making new lettings eligible for full housing benefit, so that the problem is not impossible to finance.

One reason why we have been so reluctant to move in that direction is that we thought that if we abolished rent controls, even on new lets, landlords would not respond by bringing forward properties because they would be afraid that a Labour Government would reimpose rent controls. That fear has diminished because people no longer take seriously the prospect of a Labour Government, and that threat is consequently not so damaging as previously. The evidence of the British Telecom flotation shows that more than 1 million people are prepared to put their money on the belief that there will never be another Labour Government. I believe that landlords would be prepared to do the same. If we had the courage to tackle the problems, we could overcome the great evils that rent controls have spawned. I hope that the House will support the motion.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. William Waldegrave): I have a very few minutes in which to respond to a compressed but thoughtful and interesting debate, in which big concepts have been clearly put before us.

The Government recognise, as I think my hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Mr. Hordern) knows, a good many of the problems. In particular, we sympathise with the emphasis on mobility in his motion. That is why we have framed our housing policies around a mobility package in both the public and private sectors. There are the right to exchange, the tenants' exchange scheme and the national mobility scheme in the public sector. For owner-occupiers, we are trying to make the process of buying and selling a house less complex and expensive. I know that my hon. Friend supports that effort.

We have introduced a range of low-cost home ownership initiatives, which will help former tenants who want to move and take up a new job, and also a new form of tenure. It will help existing owner-occupiers seeking to overcome differences in housing prices.

I have little argument with the basic analysis of the history, going back to Lloyd George — the wartime increase of rent and mortgage interest, and the war restrictions Act, which in its title so clearly describes the conditions and the unusual origins of that measure. The steady decline in the rented sector since that period is a matter that is not challenged from either side of the House.

I was pleased to see that the Opposition spokesman, the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) wanted to restore the rented sector, although by different means from those favoured by my hon. Friend the Member for Horsham. I think that the difference as usual, between our two parties rests in the fact that the hon. Gentleman wants to expand the public rented sector, while we see needs being more flexibly and economically met by the private rented sector.

The much diminished private rented sector still meets a vital public need, even in its reduced form. Without it, young people and others would be in very great difficulty, even at the level at which it exists today.

The other main aspect of existing Government policy to which I want to draw attention is the package of measures in the Housing Act 1980. In that Act we specifically took action to remove disincentives to letting and thereby to encourage an expansion of the sector. Many of those measures were designed with the needs of the mobile in mind. In particular, we introduced the shorthold scheme, which enables non-resident landlords to let their property in the sure knowledge that they can regain possession on the expiry of a fixed term, which must be not less than one year and not more than five years. The House will know that the Labour party has done its best to undermine the scheme by threatening to repeal the Act —a threat only diminished by the unlikelihood of its ever being in a position to carry it out. None the less people investing their money have to look at even the most unlikely events, and the Labour party's attitude has probably done something to damage the scheme

The Housing Act 1980 also saw the introduction of the assured tenancy scheme, a much needed initiative to encourage the provision of newly built property for private renting, an activity which for too many years has virtually ceased. One hundred and sixty-three landlord bodies have now obtained approval to let on assured tenancies. The schemes they have undertaken, although still only limited in number, have demonstrated without doubt that there is a strong market for good quality housing for rent, and that it can be provided outside the Rent Acts on a basis that is acceptable to both landlord and tenant. I think that the measure has reminded us of that fact.

The Act introduced other changes designed to encourage landlords to make more accommodation available. Unfortunately, time does not enable me to go into them all. Collectively, however, the measures taken in the Housing Act 1980 add up to a package which significantly improved the prospects for private renting. But that is only, perhaps, the beginning of the story. I want to say to my hon. Friends—including my hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley), who also spoke today — that the Government have considerable sympathy with the principle of the views expressed. I do not think that I can do better than to quote my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction, who said at our last party conference:

> "The Rent Acts have injured the very people that they were designed to help. They have contributed to what has been virtually the drying up of private rented accommodation. They have harmed the interests of both landlord and tenant alike."

It is with these considerations in mind that we have engaged in a further review of private rented sector legislation. I do not want to leave anyone with the impression that the Government are about to repeal the Rent Acts, full stop. It is only right that we should assess the impact of our earlier initiatives and consider what more can be done to encourage private landlords to meet the demand for rented accommodation. Those with knowledge of the Rent Acts and related legislation will know that this is an extremely complex, not to say highly controversial, subject. Therefore, I hope that my hon. Friends will be patient when I say that I cannot——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Miss Beverley Channing

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

2.30 pm

Miss Janet Fookes (Plymouth, Drake): I rise to draw the attention of the House to the plight of a young Plymouth girl, Miss Beverley Channing, and, I hope, to illustrate the need for better facilities for girls, or men, who find themselves in similar circumstances. Her plight was recently highlighted by the well-known television programme "That's Life". I gave background information to the programme on the strength of several years' acquaintance with the problem and increasing frustration at the inability to deal with it. It was Lord Elton, in a letter on the subject to me in the autumn of last year, who rightly described the case as one

"which falls so awkwardly between the hospital and prison systems."

I shall briefly outline the circumstances. Beverley Channing is now a young woman in her early 20s, the adopted child of Mr. and Mrs. Channing. It was observed that her behaviour was becoming difficult in her early teens. It may go further back, but it was certainly from adolescence onwards. Most laymen would now describe her behaviour as antisocial; not wicked, but more akin to the uncontrolled naughtiness of a child. Her intelligence quotient is good and goes far beyond that of a child, but she suffers from tantrums, which will sometimes cause her to strike out with her fists. On a number of occasions she has been known to set fire to things, not with the dedicated evil of an arsonist, but more out of what appears to be temper and spite, and in a way which so far has not caused any damage or harm to anyone. She has been known to break windows in the course of this antisocial behaviour, and on occasions her personal habits are unpleasant.

All this behaviour has led to a miserable cycle of appearances before the magistrates courts and periods of imprisonment when the magistrates have not known what else to do with her. As the result of co-operation between various authorities, she was put into a private hospital, St. Andrew's, in Northampton for a time. Unfortunately, although this was done with the best of intentions and was a costly undertaking, her behaviour showed no real signs of improvement. Some feel that her condition deteriorated, but that is a matter of some controversy. There was certainly no marked improvement.

Therefore, she was removed from hospital and she has been a voluntary patient at the local psychiatric hospital, Moorhaven, under the care of one of the consultants, Dr. Poole. On occasions, Beverley walks out of hospital and often sleeps rough. I fear that sometimes she has been taken advantage of by men seeking sexual favours, a most disturbing aspect of the case. Various temporary arrangements have been made for her. At the moment she is going by day to what is called in Plymouth the Monday club, which has no connection with the more famous one, but is intended for the unemployed. She goes to a night shelter. At least, a bed is available for her at a night shelter in Plymouth, though she does not always take advantage of it.

I have the impression that her physical health is now deteriorating, and I feel extremely anxious for her both in the short term and longer term if a better solution is not found. The real problem in a sense is that she does not fit into any category, as Lord Elton wisely observed.

[Miss Janet Fookes]

She has been the subject of diagnosis by no fewer than five psychiatrists. All of them—this is amazing when dealing with experts—agree that she is not suffering from a mental illness in the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983. She cannot, therefore, lawfully be detained under any section of that Act. They agree, however, that she has what they term a personality disorder; I suppose we would call it bad and unstable behaviour. That means that it is difficult, without her co-operation, to make any long-term arrangement for her.

I pay tribute to all those who have tried to help her. I cannot fault any of them. Those in the probation service, magistrates court, police, social services and the psychiatrists have all done their best according to their lights. Indeed, they have bent over backwards to be of assistance. The fact remains that her case is intractable.

It is interesting to note that a recent report by the Select Committee on Social Services entitled "Community Care" pinpointed the general problem. I appreciate that the Committee was speaking of cases much wider than that of Beverley Channing, but its report stated:

> "Twenty-five years after the 1959 Act, informed opinion is slowly returning to the idea that there will always be a substantial number of mentally disabled people who are entitled to some sort of protection and support which may involve their partial withdrawal from the rest of the community."

That sums up Beverley's case.

I should like to see some sort of halfway house, a special type of hostel, geared to the needs of such extremely difficult people where a stable background, but with a degree of compulsion, could be created for them. I would see this compulsion perhaps in the form of a probation order of greater length than one would usually expect, with attached to it a requirement that the person remains in the care of the hostel.

The only alternative which could have merit, if only she could be found, would be one of those special breed of landladies with a kind and caring, yet firm, approach, who would be able to provide for the physical needs of the person and at the same time give support. That would be something on the lines of the fostering of difficult children, which has been pioneered by a few local authorities.

One or the other of those would seem suitable. However, the backing of some compulsion is needed. I do not for a moment suggest that Beverley requires to be locked up in the old sense of the term for an indefinite period. Something in between is needed.

I realise that to suggest a hostel for one would be ludicrous. I understand, however, that there are others of a similar character to Beverley. My hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) has drawn my attention to a case which he believes to be very similar indeed to that of Beverley and which is causing him concern.

I have received three letters following the television programme outlining cases which seem to be very similar. The research section of the programme has told me of at least eight other cases—there are about a dozen more—and has sent me details of those eight. I should point out that Miss Esther Rantzen has told me that the research section has not had a chance to carry out a thorough investigation to find out whether those cases are precisely in parallel, but at least there is a prima facie case that there are other people in a similar position.

Even if there are only a handful of people throughc the country who are in this situation, they pose a probl which causes endless anxiety to the authorities, whetl they be magistrates, social workers, psychiatrists or t like. The impact upon the families of these people can absolutely tragic. One only has to talk to these families read the letters that they have written to understand ve clearly the cost to and, indeed, the ruination of the liv of those who are most closely associated with the people.

I cannot, of course, give details of the other case because they must remain confidential. However, I a sure that arrangements could be made, with the permissic of those concerned, for the details to be sent to my ho Friend if he felt that it would be helpful to have them.

I have sought to point out what I believe to be a mo worrying gap in the provision that we make for a sma group of people. I look to my hon. Friend th Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health an Social Security to provide a constructive and much-neede reply.

2.42 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State fo Health and Social Security (Mr. John Patten): I ca well understand why my hon. Friend the Member fo Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) has raised this issue as th subject of this afternoon's Adjournment debate. Th circumstances surrounding the young woman concerne and her family have been of considerable local interest fo quite a long time. In her turn, I know that my hon. Friend has taken a considerable interest in this case as the Membe of Parliament for the constituency in which this youn woman lives. Both the local interest and the interest of my hon. Friend has been reflected in the BBC televisior programme "That's Life", which was broadcast at the end of February. Everything that my hon. Friend has said this afternoon and the work she has already done on behalf of this young woman shows that my hon. Friend has her interests very much at heart and that she is also concerned about the effects upon her family. Families are very important in cases of this kind.

The individual case has been given a wider context by the publication of the Social Services Committee report on community care for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people. This is certainly not the occasion to try to respond to that very thorough and valuable report. However, I must say in passing that it seems to me that much of the publicity so far has not done that all-party report much justice either.

I do not want to dwell at length on the details of Miss Channing's personal history. My hon. Friend has said most of what needs to be said. I think my hon. Friend is looking to me to comment on services and policies and upon what we might do in the future to try to improve those services and policies. My hon. Friend illustrated two clear ways in which we could properly develop our policies and hence our services. I am grateful to her for doing so. The points that she made were very thought-provoking. I believe that my hon. Friend wants me to deal with them rather than to look in any greater detail at the case history of someone who, thus far, has had more than her fair share of personal problems and who probably deserves as much privacy as she needs increased help.

I am sure that most hon. Members would hate to have their case notes read out in public. My hon. Friend has reminded the House of details which have been public knowledge for many years. However, I wish to direct the attention of the House to a slightly wider way in which the Channing case can be viewed.

Doctors, the media and politicians should pause and consider the extent to which we should reveal personal details of individual patients with mental or physical problems or a combination of both. Important ethical issues have begun to emerge in the past year or two. I refer not so much to this case as to others which, prima facie, seem to involve the revelation of details about patients suffering from kidney failure or allegedly suffering from AIDS. The details have been gratuitously and easily made known to the public in a way that would never have occurred two years ago. We need to think very hard about exactly where the line should be drawn and how to achieve a new consensus about the balance between the patients' interests and needs and the public's right to know. I hope that the debate started by my hon. Friend today will allow us to go some way further towards the achievement of that end.

My caution about publicising case histories does not mean that Miss Channing is someone about whom the DHSS "does not want to know"—far from it. My noble Friend Lord Glenarthur, the Under-Secretary of State, wants to know—and indeed knows—all that he can about every detail of Miss Channing's case. The doctors and health workers in Plymouth want to know everything possible about Miss Channing and her problems, and indeed they do know, as my hon. Friend the Member for Drake has so adequately illustrated.

The trouble is that, in cases of the type to which my hon. Friend has referred, knowledge does not always lead to solution or cure. Whether it be in relation to getting people off heroin or stopping the spread of AIDS, it is easy to say that we need more knowledge but very much harder to find a solution. Nevertheless, we wish to know all that we possibly can about this unfortunate young woman so that we can do all that we can to help her. I believe that we have all the knowledge we need, but finding a solution which takes account of the patient's needs, her civil rights and her right to privacy is very hard.

I enter one caveat. There are people — my hon. Friend is not one of them—who see the link between the services which might be able to provide help and the people who need that help as essentially a matter of locking people up in hospitals until they are "better", but that is certainly not my view. Those who commit offences and are convicted by the courts are, of course, subject to whatever constraints the courts impose on them. That is not for us to discuss or dispute. In addition, the Mental Health Act provides for the detention of patients. In that legislation Parliament went into considerable detail to spell out who could and could not be detained, in what circumstances and subject to what safeguards. I pay tribute again to the Social Services Committee for its very wise comments about the patient's rights. That is the other side of the coin.

I shall reveal nothing new about Miss Channing's case so as to respect her privacy, just as my hon. Friend the Member for Drake has done. It is clear that Miss Channing has had mental and behavioural problems of one kind or another at least since her early teens and my hon. Friend has suggested that the problem may go back even further. It is public knowledge that Miss Channing has had contact with the courts, the probation service, hospitals, community nurses and the generality of the Health Service.

All those services have experienced serious difficulties with her, but they have worked together to try to help her. I am glad that my hon. Friend paid compliments to those people, who work so hard in the NHS, and I am sure that they will be grateful to her. It was in the wake of a collective initiative involving a number of people from different services that Miss Channing spent some time being treated in a private specialist hospital, St. Andrew's, Northampton.

There was a collective review before she left St. Andrew's last year. Professional assessment concluded that she was not then detainable under the Mental Health Act. We must rely on professional and clinical judgment. It is not for me, as a politician, or for anyone else to make ad hoc judgments about these cases. As my hon. Friend said, five specialists agreed that Miss Channing was not detainable. Such unanimity is not always apparent in these assessments.

Without detention, a patient can, of course, be admitted to hospital for treatment if the hospital thinks that it can help and if the patient is willing to let the staff try to help. It is a statement of the obvious to say that none of the treatment provided has had much lasting, positive effect in this case, though that is no criticism of those who have laboured hard and long to secure a better situation for Miss Channing.

Miss Channing is subject to a probation order, but both health and social services are in touch and are helping as best they can. My hon. Friend made some interesting points about the possibility of probation orders being extended and made more prescriptive. We shall have to ponder her ideas. I was also interested in her view that we should turn to some of the old school of landladies to help with such cases. The sort of landladies that my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan), who is my PPS, and I remember from our university days could perhaps have had a formidable and salutary effect in this case.

Miss Channing attends a day centre or probation office and has the support of a trained psychiatric nurse. I wish to put the facts on the record. All the facilities have not helped to solve this young woman's problems, but they are available and are being given freely.

I wish to correct any impression that this is a simple case of someone wanting treatment and being denied it or of wanting a hospital place and being denied it. Social services and NHS support is available when required and the Moorhaven hospital staff, who do excellent work, are ready to try to help again and again, as they have tried on a number of occasions in the past. However, of course, they need the co-operation of Miss Channing, her parents, friends, and those who seek to support her.

Some have suggested in this case and previous similar cases that a special hospital place should be provided. That is a tricky issue, because admission to a special hospital requires both that the potential patient is detainable under the Mental Health Act and that he or she should present a danger which justifies that special security. Those are clear preconditions and we are told by clinical and professional advisers that neither condition is satisfied in Miss Channing's case. I am sure that no one would wish any person who did not satisfy those criteria to be gratuitously locked up.

[Mr. John Patten]

On more general issues of policy, my Department has been taking a special interest in the range of problems and people covered by the general description "hard to place or hard to help", in which category Miss Channing falls, at least for the moment.

Some of the individuals involved in the category of hard-to-place, hard-to-help are mentally ill. Some are mentally handicapped. Some are psychopathic. Some have behaviour disorders. Some seem to have mixed or uncertain characteristics. There is a whole range of problems facing a small group of people who desperately need our help and whom we must strive to help.

I am glad to say that there has been a lot of progress in various ways in the ability and the willingness of the service to help people with difficult problems. We have still some way to go before either systems or science provide us with the answer. However, I can give three assurances.

First, we in the Department and my noble Friend Lord Glenarthur, who has special responsibility for this area of policy, are working for further progress in service development, including bringing together different perceptions of the needs and different experie success or failure in meeting them, as well as re authorities of their existing responsibilities and re —all set against a small number of cases which be dealt with.

Secondly, a range of services and people in the tried over a long period to help Miss Channing and like her. This slow progress has not been due to a of effort or lack of provision. It simply has not w In the real world, things do not always work very Thirdly, those willing to help Miss Channing and like her are in touch with her now. They are willing further initiatives if they have her co-operation o condition becomes such that compulsory detention the Mental Health Act turns out to be appropri clinical and professional advice.

I must thank my hon. Friend for her interest a giving me the chance to explain the difficulties that attempted to outline. I am also grateful for her detail thought-provoking ideas, which I shall take awa discuss with my colleagues.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at three minutes to o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Tea Room

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) when the improvement will take place on the ventilation system in the Members' Tea Room;

(2) what plans he has to improve the general working conditions for staff in the Members' Tea Room.

Mr. Biffen: A refurbishment of the Members' Tea Room, which would include cooling of the counter area and other improvements in working conditions for the staff there, has been requested. The funds available for the parliamentary works programme of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment are limited, and I cannot at the moment say when this scheme will gain a place in the programme.

Transport Select Committee (Costs)

Mr. Clay asked the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed as representing the House of Commons Commission what was the estimated cost of the travelling expenses, staff hours, printing and other services provided for the Transport Committee for its investigation of the financing of public transport up to and including 20 February.

Mr. Beith: The estimated costs of Committee travel in connection with this inquiry are £2,200; of printing £30,900; and of specialist advice £2,300. It is not possible without undue expense to estimate the staff hours devoted to this inquiry, which is only one of several that the Committee has been pursuing for the past year, nor the costs of other services.

Gallery Tickets

Mr. Alton asked the Lord Privy Seal, if he will list the arrangements for allocating all tickets for all galleries, apart from the Press Gallery, listing the offices through which they are distributed.

Mr. Biffen: Members may obtain Admission Orders to the galleries of the House by the following methods:

Gallery	Remarks
1. Strangers Gallery
a. By routine allocation by rota of two orders every nine sitting days, Mondays to Thursdays.	Orders sent to Members by Admission Order office or collected.
b. By application on sitting Mondays to Thursdays for allocated orders returned.	To Admission Order Office.
2. Special Galleries
a. By advance application at Admission Order Office for up to two orders per day (with a maximum of four Orders per week).	Orders sent to Members by Admission Order Office or collected.
b. By advance application for orders to be taken up after 3.00 pm, Mondays to Thursdays and after 10.00 am on Fridays.	Issued by Serjeant at Arms in the Chair, usually on presentation of a green card.
c. From the Serjeant at Arms in the Chair immediately after Prayers	Queue tickets available from Bar Doorkeeper ten minutes before sitting time.
d. From the Serjeant at Arms in the Chair at other times.	Dependent on availability of spaces.
3. Mr. Speaker's Gallery By application to Mr. Speaker's Assistant Secretary (Parliamentary).
4. Serjeant at Arms' Gallery By application to the Serjeant at Arms' office.
5. Distinguished Strangers' Gallery By application to Mr. Speaker's Assistant Secretary (Parliamentary).
6. Commonwealth Gallery By application to the United Kingdom Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.	For Commonwealth visitors only.
7. Ambassadors' Gallery By application from Embassies.	Ambassadors or Chargés d'Affaires only.
8. Diplomatic Gallery On application from Embassies.	Available to Members from Serjeant at Arms in the Chair if not taken up by Embassies.
9. Under the Gallery On application to party Whips.

Members' attention is drawn to the Serjeant at Arms' publication "Admission to the Galleries."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid (Complaints) Tribunals

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General whether there are any plans to transfer the responsibilities of the Legal Aid (Complaints) Tribunals to the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Administration of Justice Bill introduced in another place by the Lord Chancellor provides for the jurisdiction in respect of legal aid complaints presently exercisable by the Legal Aid (Complaints) Tribunals to be exercised instead by a disciplinary tribunal of the Senate of the Inns of Court and the Bar and the Solicitors' Disciplinary Tribunal.

Coal Industry Dispute (Magistrates)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General how many additional stipendiary magistrates have been appointed since the start of the miners' dispute.

The Attorney-General: Thirty additional stipendaries have been appointed by the Lord Chancellor to sit between 3 September and 1 March to try cases resulting from the miners' dispute at Birkenhead, Chesterfield, Doncaster, Peterlee, Seaham, Mansfield, Nottingham, Pontefract, Rotherham, St. Helens and Scunthorpe. The sittings have been continuous at Chesterfield and Rotherham; elsewhere they have been occasional or intermittent. The amount of time sat by individual stipendaries ranges from eight weeks to one day.

Duty Solicitors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Attorney-General, if he will publish in the Official Report, for each regional legal aid area, those magistrates' courts where it has been decided that duty solicitors should be in attendance.

The Attorney-General: It is the intention that arrangements will exist for duty solicitors to be in attendance at the busier courts. These will normally be those where on average 10 or more defendants make a first appearance at each court session otherwise than in connection with motoring offences. Attendance schemes may also be approved in less busy courts where circumstances justify it. Courts where schemes have been, or are about to be, implemented are listed as follows, by legal aid area:

PRIME MINISTER

Hill Farmers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what information the Government have as to whether the compensatory allowances paid to hill farmers have prevented any such farms going out of business.

The Prime Minister: No information is available on this. There is no doubt, however, that compensatory allowances represent a substantial part of net income on hill livestock farms.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what steps the Government are taking to reduce expenditure under the common agricultural policy; and whether she will publish in the Official Report the gross expenditure on agriculture in the United Kingdom each year since 1970, including the costs of administration, together with the receipts from (i) the disposal of surpluses and (ii) cash payments by the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: In 1984 we achieved a very restrictive agricultural prices package and the adoption, by the Council, of conclusions on budgetary discipline which include provisions designed to limit the growth of the Community's 'own resources'. This year we are seeking a similarly restrictive price policy and effective implementation of the budgetary discipline conclusions.

Expenditure on agricultural support in the United Kingdom under national grants and subsidies and since 1972-73 under the CAP—net of proceeds from the sale of intervention stocks—together with receipts from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund is summarised in the White Papers to the annual review of agriculture.

The administration costs of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and the proceeds from sales of stocks are set out in the annual appropriation accounts for the board's notes. The administration costs of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are also set out in the annual appropriation accounts but those for agricultural administration are not shown separately.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the Government will appoint an expert to prepare a report on the operation of the common agricultural policy in the United Kingdom on the lines of that prepared by Professor Silberston on textiles for the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to do so.

Milk Production (Co-responsibility Levy)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the Government will propose the extension of the co-responsibility levy on milk production to hill firms.

The Prime Minister: The co-responsibility levy on milk applies to milk delivered to dairies except in mountain and hill areas listed under the terms of article 3(3) of Directive 75/268/EEC. The levy has not been an effective measure in curtailing the production of milk surpluses and the Government will be arguing for its reduction.

Disabled Persons (Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment)

Mr. Ashley asked the Prime Minister what advice th National Advisory Council on the Employment c Disabled People gave to the Government when it wa consulted on the ratification of International Labou Organisation Convention No. 159 concerning vocationa rehabilitation and employment of disabled people.

The Prime Minister: The advice given to th Government by the National Advisory Council on th Employment of Disabled People on the ratification of th International Labour Organisation's Convention 159 following the council's discussions on 20 January and 2 April 1984, was as follows:

(i) Council has been advised that the Convention require ments as drafted do not appear to be fully compatible wit present United Kingdom law and practice.

(ii) Council notes the expert advice that legal impediment might seem to prevent the United Kingdom Governmen from ratifying the Convention. Council is unhappy abou accepting the reality of these impediments and its general, but not unanimous, view is that they should, if they exist, be removed and that the Convention should then be ratified.

Security Services

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if she will list the powers of Ministers to grant members of the security services express immunity from the criminal law in respect of any activities they may carry out in an official capacity; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No Minister has any such powers.

President Reagan

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with President Reagan.

The Prime Minister: I am hoping to make a statement tomorrow.

Tribunals

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a list of those tribunals which have discretion (a) whether or not to permit an applicant to be represented by a non-lawyer and (b) to permit an applicant to be represented by a non-lawyer.

The Prime Minister: The information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Members' Questions

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether, for the convenience of hon. Members, she will request all Ministers who wish to reply to parliamentary questions by referring to a document deposited in the Library to attach a photostat of the relevant extract from the document to the individual copy of the reply which is sent to the hon. Member.

The Prime Minister: Ministers try to be as helpful as possible, and I hope that, where it is practicable, hon. Members will be provided with relevant extracts from documents in the Library which have been referred to in answers. But it would not be practicable to do this where the answer refers to a document that needs to be seen as a whole.

Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury (Duties)

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister if she will list the Ministerial duties of the Parliamentary Secretary of State to the Treasury; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury advises the Cabinet on parliamentary and other matters and, together with the Leader of the House, is responsible for the management of business in the House of Commons.

Falklands War (Rules of Engagement)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the changes in the rules of engagements in May 1982 allowed for the sinking of the Argentine naval vessels anywhere outside the Argentine territorial waters regardless of their position vis-à-vis the task force.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 21 February 1985, c. 526]: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the change in rules of engagement on 2 May 1982 which permitted HMS Conqueror to attack the General Belgrano. This change in rules of engagement, resulting from the indications of the threat posed by the Argentine navy, permitted attacks on Argentine warships outside the total exclusion zone, as well as within it, within certain geographical limits which, for operational reasons, it is still not in the public interest to disclose. The precise position and course of individual ships was not relevant in the overall assessment of the threat.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Weights and Measures Act 1979

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to bring into effect section 19 of the Weights and Measures Act 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: Initiatives are actively being pursued by both the Department, in reviewing the beer glass regulations; and by the licensed trade, in drawing up proposals for guidelines for voluntary self-regulation. In these circumstances it would be premature to consider implementing Section 19.

Automated Manufacturing Technical Cent Excellence

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for T Industry what steps he is taking to establish an au manufacturing technical centre of excelle Warwickshire.

Mr. Butcher: I explained the position in my the hon. Member for Coventry, North-we Robinson) on 12 December 1984 at column 49 then Austin Rover and Warwick universit announced an advanced technology centre to be the campus. My officials are in discussion wi parties with a view to promoting the adoption o particularly in the automotive industry and its su through the centre.

Development Agencies (Expenditure)

Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for Tr Industry (1) what was the total sum of money spen North-West industrial development associati promotion and marketing for the financial years and 1983-84; and what is the expected spending financial year 1984-85;

(2) what was the total sum of money spent by N England development council on promotion and ma for the financial years 1982-83 and 1983-84; and the expected spending for the financial year 1984

(3) what was the total sum of money spent by and Cornwall development bureau on promoti marketing for the financial years 1982-83 and 19 and what is the expected spending for the financi 1984-85;

(4) what was the total sum of money spent by Midlands industrial development association on pro and marketing for the financial years 1982-8 1983-84; and what is the expected spending financial year 1984-85;

(5) what was the total sum of money spent Yorkshire and Humberside development associat promotion and marketing for the financial years 19 and 1983-84; and what is the expected spending financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Trippier: In the years specified, expendit the five English regional development organisatio inward investment promotion and marketing, exc staff and administration costs, was as follows:

North West Industrial Development Association	118,982	139,953
North of England Development Council	250,150	661,453
Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau	65,264	133,177
West Midlands Industrial Development Association	—	*60,185
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association	146,966	235,044

* West Midlands Industrial Development Association's first half-year of operation.

Car Industry

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the output of the United Kingdom car industry in 1984 compared with that in 1983.

Mr. Channon: The information was published 1 February 1985 issue of British Business (page 2 copy of which is available in the Library.

EC (Clothing, Footwear and Textiles)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the EEC Commission's decision on the clothing, footwear and textile scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply of 20 February to a question by the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) at column 454-55.

White Salt Industry

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the estimated cost of completion of the current inquiry of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the United Kingdom white salt industry;

(2) who is heading the current inquiry by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the United Kingdom white salt industry; and what previous experience he has of this industry;

(3) what is the purpose of the current inquiry of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the United Kingdom white salt industry;

(4) what compensation is made available for expenses incurred by individuals or businesses resulting from inquiries conducted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission;

(5) when he expects the current inquiry into the United Kingdom white salt industry by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to be completed;

(6) if he will list all those firms whose operations have so far been studied in the course of the current Monopolies and Mergers Commission study of the United Kingdom white salt industry.

Mr. Fletcher: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation of the supply of white salt in the United Kingdom results from a reference made by the Director General of Fair Trading under section 50(1) and related provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973. Its purpose is to determine whether a monopoly situation exists, and whether any facts found by the commission operate against the public interest.

The investigation is being conducted by a group of six members of the commission, headed by Mr. D. G. Richards, a deputy chairman of the Commission, who is a former senior partner of a leading firm of chartered accountants and a past president of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. The report is at present due to be delivered by 13 July 1985; the details of the conduct of the investigation are a matter for the Commission who are an independent body.

It is not practicable to allocate costs to particular inquiries but the cost of the commission's programme, often of 10-12 active references at any one time, is estimated at some £2 million for 1984-85. There is no provision for compensation for expenses incurred other than in the restricted circumstances dealt with in section 85 of the Fair Trading Act.

Patent Office

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to the answer of 23 November, Official Report, columns 331-2, how many of the representations received were in favour of changing the status of the Patent Office and how many were of the contrary view.

Mr. Butcher: Sixteen of the representations received were in favour of changing the status of the Patent Office, though ten of these were subject to provisos on implementation. Of the remaining representations, four were unconditionally opposed to changing the status of the Patent Office and thirty were prepared to accept a change of status if this was found to be necessary.

Hall Russell, Shipbuilders

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the companies which have submitted tenders for the purchase of Hall Russell, Shipbuilders, Aberdeen under the Government's privatisation proposals.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

"Scrutinising the Burdens on Industry"

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place a copy of "Scrutinising the Burdens on Industry" in the Library.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on follow-up and publication of the scrutiny of regulatory burdens will be taken as soon as possible.

Blank Video Tapes

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to introduce legislation to impose a levy on blank video tapes.

Mr. Butcher: A decision on whether to introduce such legislation will be taken after consultations have been completed on the Green Paper "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material", Cmnd. 9445, which was published on 19 February 1985.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Scientific Research

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to require all British universities, hospitals or other institutions in which scientific research is carried out to register foreign research contracts relating to (a) chemical warfare, (b) biological warfare and (c) any other military application or potential application with his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Ms. Richards (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Walthamstow can expect a reply to his letter of 25 July 1984 about Ms. Richards of London E.17, and his reminder letters of 12 November 1984 and 17 January 1985.

Mr. Brooke: I replied to the hon. Member on 19 February.

Open University

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why his Department has disputed the expenditure shortfall of £13·5 million predicted by the Open University for the years 1984 to 1986.

Mr. Brooke: When the Open University made public its expenditure reduction target it was not clear how this had been derived. My right hon. Friend, therefore, requested an explanation from the university. That information is afforded in a document jointly agreed between the Department and the university and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the extent to which course materials have been reduced by the Open University during the last two academic years; and which faculties have been thus affected.

Mr. Brooke: The number of full credit equivalent courses available at the Open University in the academic years 1983 and 1984 is given for each faculty:

	1983	1984
Arts	16	16
Social Science	17	17
Education	11	11
Mathematics	9	10
Science	13	13
Technology	12	14
U-area (inter-faculty)	4	4
TOTAL	82	85

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of grant is to be allocated to the Open University for 1985.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend will announce the Open University's grant for the academic year 1985 and the indicated grants for 1986 and 1987 shortly.

Primary Schools (Reading Texts)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources he intends to allocate to local education authorities to enable them to update reading texts in primary schools.

Mr. Dunn: It is for local authorities and schools themselves to determine their provision for books in the light of local circumstances, and to choose which books to purchase. We have made clear our view that this is an area which should be given priority within the resources available. The Government's plans for local authority expenditure on education in 1985-86 provide scope for some improvement in the level of provision per pupil for books, compared to 1982-83, provided costs are contained and feasible savings made elsewhere.

Teachers (Training)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will establish facilities to provide in-service training for teachers lasting at least one school term in every five years of service.

Mr. Dunn: As indicated in the White Paper "Teacher Quality" (Cmnd. 8836), the Government believe that all teachers need from time to time to avail themselves of in-service training. My right hon. Friend, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, is currently considering future arrangements for in-service training in the light of a report on the subject submitted last year by the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers. That report drew attention to the variety of teachers' training needs, the different ways in which those needs might most effectively be met and the arbitrariness of any approach to a desirable level of provision based solely on assumptions about the rate at which teachers might be released from their schools to attend in-service training.

Higher Education Grants

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will introduce legislation to ensure that Ministry of Defence employees and their offspring will not be excluded from receiving higher education grants on the basis of residence abroad during the previous three years;

(2) if (a) Ministry of Defence employees and (b) their offspring on returning to the United Kingdom from abroad are entitled to a higher education grant irrespective of their posting over the previous three years.

Mr. Brooke: No. To be eligible to receive a mandatory award, an applicant must normally have been ordinarily resident in the British islands for the three years preceding the start of his course, but excluding any residence here wholly or mainly for the purposes of receiving full-time education. However, under the provisions of regulation 5(4) of the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1984, an applicant may be treated as ordinarily resident where his local education authority decides that he has suspended his ordinary residence because he, his spouse or his parent or guardian has been temporarily employed abroad. These rules apply to all applicants regardless of the nature of the relevant employment. Eligibility for discretionary awards is a matter for each individual local education authority.

Children (Essential Boarding)

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's understanding of essential boarding need; and to what extent it is being met.

Mr. Dunn: Essential boarding need arises under section 52(1) (a) of the Education Act 1944, which places a duty on a local education authority to arrange for boarding, free of charge, for a pupil whom it considers could not otherwise be provided with an education suitable to his age ability and aptitude or special educational needs. As far as I am aware all local education authorities discharge this duty.

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a breakdown by local education authority of children considered in need of essential boarding.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected.

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied that local authority provision to meet essential boarding need is equitable across the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend's responsibility on this subject extends only to England. A local education authority is under no duty to maintain its own boarding provision. Essential boarding need may be met also by taking up a boarding place in either a school maintained by another authority or an independent school.

Students (Fees)

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recommendations he has issued about fees for home students on courses of further and higher education in the academic year 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph: For the academic year 1985-86 I have recommended the following fee levels for home students and for students from other European Community countries. Fees for 1984-85 are shown in brackets.

Postgraduate courses	1,632	(1,569)
First degree and diploma courses	520	(500)

These recommended fees represent 4 per cent. increase over those for 1984-85.

Other fees for home and European Community students are the responsibility of the local education authorities. I understand that the Council of Local Education Authorities has recommended fees for 1985-86 as follows. Fees for 1984-85 are shown in brackets.

	*Advanced Further Education		Non-Advanced Further Education
	£	£	£	£
Full-time	520	(500)	321	(309)
Sandwich/block release (weekly rate)	14·50	(13·90)	9·00	(8·60)
Part-time per course hour	0·50	(0·47)	0·30	(0·28)
Part-time annual fee for one session per week	£52·00	(50·00)	32·00	(31·00)

* Other than first degree and diploma courses.

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to issue recommendations about fees for students from outside the European Community in 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government's policy is that students who began their courses on or after 1 September 1980 should pay fees that cover the cost of their education. The Government no longer imposes minimum fees on authorities or institutions, which are therefore free to determine the fee to be charged in accordance with the Government's policy, and in the light of their own circumstances.

I understand, however, that the University Grants Committee and the Council of Local Education Authorities have issued recommendations to universities and local education authorities respectively on the minimum fees that should be charged in 1985-86 to students paying the overseas rate of fee who began their courses on or after 1 September 1980. Their recommendations are as follows:

Universities

Such fees as universities consider necessary to meet the cost of the education in question, subject to the following minima. Recommended minima for 1984-85 are shown in brackets.

	1985-86 £	(1984-85) £
Arts courses	3,310	(3,150)
Science courses	4,350	(4,150)
Clinical courses in medicine, dentistry and veterinary science	8,050	(7,650)

Maintained and assisted institutions

Such fees as the local authorities and institutions consider necessary to meet the cost of the education in question, subject to the following minima. Recommended minima for 1984-85 are shown in brackets.

	1985-86 £	(1984-85) £
Advanced courses	3,310	(3,180)
Non-advanced courses	1,820	(1,750)

Any students still on courses that began before 1 September 1980 are still entitled to a subsidised rate of fee. Maximum fees for such students were specified in the Education (Fees and Awards) (Amendment) Regulations 1984. As there will be few, if any, such students left by 1985-86, I have decided not to revise the fee maxima further. They will therefore remain as follows:

Postgraduate courses	2,148
First degree and other advanced courses	1,653
Full-time non-advanced courses	885

Church-aided Schools (Building Programme)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost at current prices, in both capital and revenue terms, if a place in nursery education were to be provided in September 1985 for every child aged three and four years old; and what is his estimate of the cost if that were done for September 1988.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1985, c. 298-99]: It is possible to estimate only to a very approximate order of magnitude, for the reasons given in my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 6 December 1984 at column 94; but the building costs, which would in practice have to be phased over a number of years, would probably be of the order, in aggregate, of £300 million to £400 million; the initial cost of training the extra teaching and nursery staff, which would also have to be phased, would probably be of the order of £100 million to £150 million (the level of continuing costs of training would depend on wastage rates); and the eventual annual recurrent cost (excluding training) would probably be of the order of £300 million to £350 million.

ENERGY

Atomic Energy Act 1954

40. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to amend the Atomic Energy Act 1954 to enable the authority to borrow in the financial markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: As I said in my statement on 11 February, we intend to provide the authority with a capital structure and powers to borrow as required, so as to enable it to operate as a trading fund from April 1986, and will introduce legislation as soon as possible for this purpose.

Renewable Energy (Research and Development)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy what consequences he expects to flow from the proposed 40 per cent. cut in funding on the renewable energy research design and development programme.

Mr. David Hunt: My Advisory Council on Research and Development for Fuel and Power (ACORD) will be considering the renewable technologies at its meeting on 12 March. The council will have before it a review of these technologies which is being prepared by the energy technologys support unit.

Advisory Council on Research and Development

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the current membership of the Advisory Council on Research and Development with details of those who have nominated the members; and how long each member has served on the Advisory Council on Research and Development.

Mr. David Hunt: The current membership of the Advisory Council on Research and Development for Fuel and Power is as follows, with members' dates of appointment being shown in parentheses:

Chairman — Professor Sir Sam Edwards, FRS — chief scientific adviser, Department of Energy (1983).

Mr. J. R. Baker — managing director, mechanical group, Northern Engineering Industries plc (1984).

Mr. R. Bexon—deputy chairman, BP (1984).

Dr. T. Broom — director general of research, Central Electricity Generating Board (1981).

Mr. G. Clerehugh — director of research, British Gas Corporation (1983).

Dr. I. Dunstan — director of standards British Standards Institution (1985).

Professor Sir John Kingman — chairman, Scientific and Engineering Research Council (1981).

Dr. T. Marsham — full-time board member UKAEA and managing director, UKAEA, Risley (1974).

Professor L. Maunder—professor of mechanical engineering University of Newcastle upon Tyne (1981).

Mr. R. W. Orson—board member, The Electricity Council (1976).

Mr. R. Rawlinson — technical director, National Coal Board (1984).

Dr. L. E. J. Roberts — full-time board member UKAEA and director AERE, Harwell (1984).

Professor C. Robinson — professor of economics, University of Surrey (1981).

Dr. H. Rose—group technical director, Foseco Minsep plc (1975).

Dr. R. Telfer — director, Manchester Business School (1981).

Mr. K. Williams — industrial fellow, Churchill College, Cambridge (1982).

Of the above Dr. Broom, Mr. Clerehugh, Sir John Kingman, Dr. Marsham, Mr. Orson, Mr. Rawlinson and Dr. Roberts are nominees of their respective organisations. The remaining eight members are independent members appointed by the Secretary of State for Energy.

The Chief Scientific Adviser to the Cabinet Office, Sir Robin Nicholson, and the Chief Scientist and Engineer, Department of Trade and Industry, Mr. O. Roith, serve on the council as assessors. Sir Robin Nicholson was appointed in 1984. Mr. Roith was appointed in 1981 originally as a full member when employed by BP, becoming an assessor in 1982 following his move to the DTI.

EMPLOYMENT

Illegal Child Employment

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the enforcement by the Health and Safety Executive of legislation relating to children working part-time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Nevertheless, the Health and Safety Commission is reviewing the position.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for 1965, 1970, 1975 and 1980 for the city of Coventry (a) the total number of workers employed, (b) the share of jobs in (i) manufacturing industry, (ii) services and (c) losses or gains in the main sectors of employment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The nearest available information on a consistent basis is from censuses of employment taken annually from 1971 to 1978 and, from 1978, triennially, and is as follows:

Employees in employment in the Coventry jobcentre area

	Total All industries and services (thousands)	Percentage employed in: Manufacturing industries (per cent.)	Service industries (per cent.)

Careers Service

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what qualifications are accepted by his Department as professional qualifications allowing employment as a careers officer; and in what circumstances individuals who do not hold such qualifications are allowed to take up such employment.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Guidance issued to local education authorities under the Employment and Training Act 1973 states that authorities should make arrangements to enable newly recruited careers officers performing vocational guidance functions in schools and colleges to obtain the diploma in careers guidance within a reasonable period of time, unless they either already hold the diploma or an equivalent qualification approved by the Local Government Training Board or have previous service as a careers officer with a local education authority or the Department of Employment before 1 January 1982.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve provision for the in-service training of employment assistants to enable them to gain professional qualifications in careers guidance.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for local education authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are his plans for the future role of the careers service; how these plans will affect the manpower and resource requirements of the Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government will continue vigorously to pursue, in conjunction with local education authorities in England and Wales and education authorities in Scotland, their responsibilities for the effectiveness and efficiency of the careers service.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average case load of an employment assistant employed by the careers service.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not available. Employment assistants carry out a number of tasks which vary from authority to authority and they do not normally have a personal case load of young people.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information he has concerning the number and location of places currently available on block-release courses to enable employment assistants to qualify as careers officers without ceasing their employment;

(2) what information he has concerning the number of employment assistants employed in the careers service in each region who were able to gain professional qualifications in careers advice without terminating their employment in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not readily available.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of employees of careers services who are (a) specialist careers officers, (b) careers officers and (c) employment assistants.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The most recent information is set out in the following table.

	Regular careers service—number in post as at 1 October 1984		Unemployment specialist careers officers and employment assistants funded by the Department of Employment. Number in post as at 18 October 1984

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library the recent Manpower Services Commission memorandum dealing with accidents on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what instructions are given to Manpower Services Commission staff as to the information on the health and safety record of individual schemes and projects on the youth training scheme that may be given to the Commission's area manpower boards when they are considering those schemes and projects for renewal; whether details of particular accidents may be disclosed to area manpower boards in such circumstances; and whether he is satisfied that area manpower boards can adequately fulfil their supervisory function on the basis of the information supplied;

(2) whether he will publish, for the Bradford area of the Manpower Services Commission, accident figures for the youth training scheme in the following form (a) for the area, for each of the last three available months, (b) by travel-to-work area, for the last available month if possible, (c) by parliamentary constituency, for the last available month if possible and (d) by local authority, for the last available month if possible;

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of Manpower Services Commission memoranda 511/3 and 514/3 together with all supplements to these memoranda so far issued; what comparisons can be made between accident figures for the scheme and statistics published for the employed population generally by the Health and Safety Executive; and what instructions are given to Manpower Services Commission staff as to the comparisons that may be made;

(4) if he will publish for each available quarter since the inception of the youth training scheme the incidence rate of major and fatal accidents to trainees;

(5) whether, in circumstances where Manpower Services Commission staff reports to area manpower boards that a youth training scheme trainee has suffered an accident, there are standing instructions as to the form in which such information may be given, and, in particular, whether the information may be given orally or in writing;

(6) what details of severe and fatal accidents on the youth training scheme it is the practice of the Manpower Services Commission (a) to disclose and (b) not to disclose to (i) outside individuals and organisations and (ii) the Commission's area manpower boards; and what the reason is for disclosure or non-disclosure in each instance.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Members as soon as possible.

Skillcentres

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the Manpower Services Commission proposals to close certain skillcentres now that a majority of the Commission no longer supports the report on this subject known as MSC/66/84.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement on 21 February 1985 at column 1234.

Chemical Installations (Safety)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied that a disaster similar to that which occurred in Bhopal could not happen in Scotland; and if he will make a statement as to safety measures undertaken and in force.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Milk Quotas

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cutback in milk production in Northern Ireland since the implementation of milk quotas.

Dr. Boyson: The estimated cutback in the period from 2 April 1984 to 31 January 1985, compared with the same period in 1983-84, is 76·3 million litres (6·5 per cent.).

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the nationalised industries, non-governmental organisations and agencies for which his Department either has responsibility or provides funding, as well as those sections of his Department, which provide services to the general public or to private organisations; and if he will indicate separately those which at present: (a) charge no fees, (b) charge fees which do not fully cover the costs of providing those services, (c) charge fees which exactly cover the costs of providing those services and (d) charge fees which more than cover the costs of providing those services.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1985, c. 582]: There are no nationalised industries in Northern Ireland. Strip Searches

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the complaints procedure within Northern Ireland prisons detailing how complaints arising out of strip searches are processed, with whom the complaint must be lodged; who investigates the complaint; what evidence is taken into consideration; what right of representation the complainant has; and who or what authority decides whether the complaint is upheld and whether action should be taken against a member of staff.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 541]: Prisoners may make complaints about any matter relating to their treatment in prison to the governor, a member of the board of visitors, an officer of the Prison Department visiting the prison or by petition to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. It is for the governor to instigate an investigation which would normally be conducted by a senior member of management. If this investigation indicates that there has been a breach of discipline by a member of staff, a disciplinary charge would be laid under the code of discipline for prison officers. In more serious cases it would be referred to the Royal Ulster constabulary.

An adjudication of a charge under the code of discipline is conducted by the governor who in certain circumstances must refer the matter to the Northern Ireland Office for determination. All available evidence, including written statements and medical evidence, if appropriate, would be considered at the adjudication. The complainant does not have the right to be represented at the adjudication.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Officers (Deaths)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of those police officers killed on duty in England and Wales since 1965; what was the method of killing in each case; whether drugs or alcohol were a known feature in the behaviour of the assailant or assailants; what was the number of cases in which a suspect or suspects were subsequently (a) arrested and (b) brought to trial; and, in each case, where a conviction was secured, what was the nature of the sentence imposed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information is given in the following table. Information on whether drugs or alcohol were a known feature in the behaviour of the suspects of these homicides could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Detention Orders

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people served with detention orders during 1983 and 1984 under paragraph 2, schedule 3, to the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested for 1983 and for the first nine months of 1984 was published in table 14 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics — Third Quarter, 1984" (Issue 27/84). Figures for the fourth quarter of 1984 will be published during the first half of March.

Deportation

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide a table indicating the total number of people served with notice of intention to deport during 1984 and 1983 by nationality and category.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested for 1983 is given in the following table. Figures for 1984 are not yet complete but I will provide them as soon as possible.

* Section of the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were served with notice of intention to deport during 1984; and how many of these were at the same time served with detention orders.

Mr. Waddington: The currently available information relates to the first nine months of 1984, when 1,846 notices of intention to deport were served. The total number of person served with detention orders in the same period was published in table 13 of the quarterly Home Office statistical Bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics — Third Quarter, 1984" (Issue 27/84); s orders are almost always served at the same time notice of intention to deport.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Ho Department how many persons were recommended deportation with no custodial sentence during 1984, a of those, in how many cases the court directed release subject to conditions and (b) without conditions.

Mr. Waddington: The currently available information relates to the first nine months of 1984, when of the total of 303 such persons, the courts directed release of 87 subject to conditions and of 137 without conditions.

Immigration Statistics

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under Immigration Act powers for a period of more than two months on completion of a custodial sentence during 1984.

Mr. Waddington: Forty-one persons who completed a custodial sentence in 1984 were so detained under deportation powers. I regret that similar information relating to illegal entrants is not available.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of persons treated as illegal entrants who were granted temporary admission and release during 1984; and how many of these subsequently absconded.

Mr. Waddington: The numbers of persons against whom action as illegal entrants was commenced and who were temporarily released in the first three quarters of 1984 is given in table 13 of the quarterly Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third Quarter, 1984" (Issue 27/84). Figures for the fourth quarter of 1984 will be published during the first half of March. Information about absconding is not readily available for the first part of 1984; I will reply as soon as possible giving such figures as can be supplied.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of passengers granted temporary admission upon entry to the United Kingdom during 1984; and how many of these subsequently absconded.

Mr. Waddington: Eight thousand five hundred and twenty-seven of whom 187 are known subsequently to have absconded.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per day of detaining a person under Immigration Act powers in; (a) prison department establishments and (b) immigration service detention accommodation.

Mr. Waddington: The total cost per day of detaining a person under Immigration Act powers in prison department establishments is estimated at £34. The cost of Immigration Service detention centres is estimated at £115.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide, for the latest convenient date, a table indicating the number of persons detained in prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers by category;

(2) if he will provide, for the latest convenient date, a table indicating the period of time spent in prison department establishments by persons detained under the Immigration Act powers, showing the number detained for one, two, three, four, five and six months, respectively.

Mr. Waddington: On 15 February 1985, 151 persons were so detained: 101 were detained under deportation powers, 44 as illegal entrants and 6 were passengers who had been refused leave to enter.

The information requested about the period of detention is as follows:

These figures do not include persons detained in Queen's Building, Heathrow. The statistics at this unit are kept in a different way and the information requested cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. In 1984, 4,879 persons were detained there for some period, not necessarily overnight.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average length of detention for those received into Prison Department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1984;

(2) what was the total number of persons received into Prison Department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1984 by (i) individual prison establishments and (ii) nationality.

Mr. Waddington: Information for 1984 will not become available until the summer. No information on nationality is available.

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of S Home Department how many inmates of Her prisons are suffering, or have suffered from immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present no diagn of AIDS among inmates, nor have there been.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Department if Her Majesty's Government wi their practice that any certificates signed by Minister for the purposes of seeking exemption 27 of the Data Protection Act are automatically and subject to renewal on that Minister ceasi office.

Mr. Waddington: It is for a Minister of t (who must be a member of the Cabinet, the General or the Lord Advocate) to determine wh require to be exempt for the purpose of saf national security. The need for and scope of exemption will be kept under review.

A certificate is required only if any questi whether data are properly exempt under section such question arises the need for a certificate carefully considered at the time by the ap minister.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for t Department whether he is made aware of any c signed by another Cabinet Minister for the pu seeking exemption via section 27 of the Data P Act.

Mr. Waddington: Section 27 of the Data P Act 1984 provides that it will be for a Cabinet or the Attorney-General, or the Lord Adv determine in any particular case whether data are to be exempt for the purpose of safeguarding security, and to sign a certificate to that effect. hon. and learned Friend has no overall responsi such matters and would not, as a matter of co aware of such determinations or certificates.

Mr. Cohen: asked the Secretary of State for t Department whether the Registrar is made awar certificate signed by a Cabinet Minister for the pu seeking exemption via section 27 of the Data P Act.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to I gave to a similar question from the hon. Me Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 17 December at colum

Prisons (Strip Searches)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for th Department (1) how many strip searches have tak in prisons in Great Britain in each of the past fiv how many prisoners have been subjected to this se and how many of these were remand prisoners;

(2) what guidelines are issued to prison staff Britain regarding strip searches;

(3) what sanction there is against a member o staff who breaches the guidelines on strip searchi many complaints arising out of strip searches ha made against prison staff in each of the past five years; and how many staff members have been reprimanded as a result of conduct during a strip search;

(4) if he has received any medical reports suggesting that prisoners have received physical, mental or nervous illness as a result of strip searching;

(5) at what level of authority individual strip searches are ordered or authorised; and whether such searches are ever conducted on a random basis.

Mr. Mellor: The following information relates to prison department establishments in England and Wales. Responsibility for establishments in Scotland rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

General provisions on searching are contained in rule 39 of the prison rules 1964 and rule 43 of both the youth custody centre rules 1983 and the detention centre rules 1983. These rules make it clear that prisoners (including remand prisoners) are to be searched on reception into a prison department establishment and subsequently as the governor thinks necessary.

Standing instructions provide that the search on reception should be a strip search, that strip searches should be carried out during routine cell searching, and that special strip searches when there is reason to suspect that a particular prisoner has prohibited articles on his person should be authorised by the governor, deputy governor or chief officer. The instructions also give detailed guidance about the way in which searches should be conducted. Information is not maintained about the number of strip searches carried out.

Prison officers are subject to a code of discipline that applies to all their conduct on duty and which provides for disciplinary sanctions ranging up to dismissal in very serious cases. Records are not kept centrally about the number, the grounds, or the outcome of complaints made against prison staff.

The Department has received no representations from prison medical officers that strip searches have been injurious to health.

Interception of Communications (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library his correspondence with the hon. Member for Bolsover concerning interception of communications of Mr. and Mrs. T. Wallis of Old School House, Clopton, Molesworth.

Mr. Brittan: I have arranged for a copy of the hon. Member's letter of 14 February, and of my reply of 22 February, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Faris Azzou

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to complete his review of the case of Mr. Faris Azzou and his United Kingdom residential permit.

Mr. Waddington: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

Home Office (Incident)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the numbe of people arrested near the Home Office on Wednesday 2(February and the number who have been charged; an with what offences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissione of Police of the Metropolis that eight people were arreste near the Home Office on Wednesday 20 February. All o them were released without charge after being cautioned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons Treaty (Verification)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals have now been tabled by Her Majesty's Government at the conference on disarmament at Geneva in respect of verification provisions under a chemical weapons treaty; what has been the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic's response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham).

China (Chemical and Biological Weapons)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any indication of China's capacity in respect of chemical and biological weapons.

Mr. Luce: China is a party to the 1972 biological weapons convention which prohibits the development, production, stockpiling and acquisition or retention of biological and toxin weapons. On its accession to the BWC on 15 November 1984, China stated that it has not produced or possessed such weapons and will never do so in future.

China is also a party to the 1925 Geneva protocol banning the use of chemical weapons. China participates actively in the current negotiations at the Geneva conference on disarmament on a total world-wide ban of the development, manufacture and stock-piling of chemical weapons. We are not aware of any public statement by China about the possession of such weapons.

Chemical Weapons (Ban Treaty)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account he has taken of the Soviet Union's concern about the effect of the chemical and biological weapon capability of China on the achievement of a global chemical weapons ban treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him earlier.

At the Geneva conference on disarmament, the consistent objective of our proposals on banning chemical weapons has been to assure full compliance. If the Soviet Union were to agree to an effective verification regime to ensure the banning of chemical weapons, the threat of or use of such weapons by signatories to the proposed treaty would be permanently removed.

Nigeria

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the application of human rights in Nigeria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Representations received have been few and concern individuals detained for an excessive period without being charged or brought to trial. Particular concern has been expressed about the case of Professor Ishaya Audu, the former Nigerian Minister of External Affairs. There have been encouraging recent developments: 250 persons detained without charge were released on 1 October 1984 and a further 144 on 1 January 1985.

Disarmament Conference, Geneva

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress of the discussions at the conference on disarmament in Geneva; and what action has been taken on the paper tabled on 12 July 1984 by the United Kingdom on verification on the non-diversion of certain civil chemicals into military stockpiles.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Derbyshire West (Mr. Parris) on 20 February at column 475.

The working paper, tabled by the United Kingdom on 12 July 1984 on the monitoring of the manufacture by the civil chemical industry of certain hazardous chemicals to ensure their wholly innocent end use, has been widely welcomed at Geneva by all delegations including those of the socialist group. As part of our efforts to make progress on outstanding verification issues in 1985, I intend to introduce during my visit to the conference on disarmament on 12 March further proposals on how the monitoring arrangements envisaged in the earlier working paper should be applied in practice.

Ascension Island (Wild Cats)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to control or eradicate the wild cat population on Ascension Island.

Mr. Renton: The Cats (Ascension) Ordinance 1984 was introduced primarily to control the number of cats imported or brought to the island. A pest control officer has been appointed.

The United States base on Ascension is at present operating a control programme. The RAF is considering similar action.

Tristan da Cunha (Crayfish)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many inspections are made on crayfish catches at Tristan da Cunha; and if he will give details of the last occasion when a contravention of the regulations occurred.

Mr. Renton: The catches of all crayfish vessels are inspected by the Tristan fisheries officer prior to departure from Tristan da Cunha. Catches of island-based boats are also inspected each fishing day. The last contravention occurred on 4 January 1984, when undersized fish were found on the MV Tristania.

Decade for Women

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how delegation Her Majesty's Government intend to se United Nations decade for women convention at what is the maximum numbr of people Her M Government are entitled to send; and if he will statement.

Mr. Renton: The composition of our delega not yet been finally decided. It is likely to be simil of our delegations to the two previous world con of the United Nations decade for women, thou may be some reduction in the number of su officials. There is at present no formal limit to th delegations nominated by participating countries.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for and Commonwealth Affairs (1) why Her M Government did not answer questions 3.2-3.3.3 of D of part I of the United Nations end of decade for questionnaire;

(2) if he will now answer questions 3.2-3.3.3 of D of the United Nations end of decade for questionnaire; if he will publish his answers; and i make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We were unable to submit our re questions 3.2-3.3.3 with our replies to the rest questionnaire in February 1984 because some ad research was needed to answer an earlier questio section. A reply was, however, sent in July 1984.
arranged for a copy of our reply to section 3 to be in the Library of the House.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

India

48. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of St Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the p level of British aid to India for 1985 and respectively.

Mr. Raison: For the current financial year I gross aid to be about £135 million, including £25 provided under the aid and trade provision. The Est for 1985-86 which will shortly be laid before Parl will indicate the extent of our commitments for tha

Ethiopia

49. Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of Sta
Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list t given by each of the European Economic Comm countries to the Ethiopian famine relief for 1984; information he has as to the amount of aid given same period by each of the countries in the middle and what discussions he has had with the Governme oil-producing countries in the middle east concerni current level of aid to Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: Bilateral aid committed by Eur Community members for Ethiopian famine relief in totalled approximately £82 million: the breakdo figures is as follows. I do not have comprehe information for assistance provided by Middle countries. I have had no bilateral discussions with middle east Governments concerning the current level of aid to Ethiopia.

Bilateral commitments made by the Community to Ethiopian famine relief in 1984

Member country	Commitments £ million*
Belgium	No bilateral assistance
Denmark	1·59 (DKR 22 million)
Federal Republic of Germany	27·73 (DM 105·114 million)
France	5·41 (Francs 63 million)
Greece	1·20 (DRS172 million)
Republic of Ireland	0·77 (IR£·9 million)
Italy	23·91 (Lira 56 billion)
Luxembourg	No bilateral assistance
The Netherlands	8·82 (Guilders 37·7 million)
United Kingdom	13·180

*Figures for disbursements in 1984 are not available.

51. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: Very many Ethiopians remain at risk and their number is being reassessed by the UN co-ordinator. Mr. Jansson told me on 12 February that grain supply shipments were secure until the end of May. Beyond that he expects another 600,000 tonnes to meet most needs until the end of the year.

Bangladesh

50. Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help has been provided by Her Majesty's Government to Bangladesh to combat the effects of floods.

Mr. Raison: Immediately after last summer's floods we provided disaster relief of £190,000 through the voluntary agencies. We agreed on 31 January to provide an additional £4 million for the purchase of wheat in support of the vulnerable group feeding programme, and expect to spend some £¼ million in support of rehabilitation work by non-governmental organisations.

Pakistan

52. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is being given by Her Majesty's Government to promote food production in Pakistan.

Mr. Raison: About 55 per cent. of our aid programme for Pakistan is devoted to the agricultural sector which benefits both food and non-food crops, like cotton. Our main concern has been with irrigation, drainage and salinity control, which directly affects the productivity of the land.

Sub-Saharan Africa

53. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now make further resources available to make possible a British contribution to the special fund for sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Raison: Her Majesty's Government have undertaken to earmark, for use in close support of the bank's special facility, disbursements of £15 million a year of bilateral aid in each of five years.

Telecommunications Projects

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution United Kingdom aid makes to telecommunications projects; and if he will review policy in the light of the report of the Independent Commission for Worldwide Telecommunications Development.

Mr. Raison: Precise figures of aid to telecommunications are not available, but during the period 1978 to 1982 £30·8 million in capital aid was provided for the whole field of communications. Aid funds are also used for technical cooperation and training scholarships in telecommunications and for the United Kingdom's share of multilateral aid, a portion of which goes to telecommunications.

The Overseas Development Administration is always ready to consider requests from aid recipient countries for assistance in telecommunications. The Government are examining the report of the Independent Commission for Worldwide Telecommunications Development.

St. Helena (Brewery)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any plans to brew lager beer on St. Helena.

Mr. Raison: The future of the St. Helena brewery is under review. The possibility of switching to lager production is one option which will be examined.

Sudan

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to the Sudan by the Minister for Overseas Development; and if he will evaluate the present and long term needs of that country in relation to British aid.

Mr. Raison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give an itemised list of British aid to Sudan over the last five years with a breakdown between capital and other projects; and between current and projected infrastructure projects.

Mr. Raison: The breakdown of British aid to Sudan over the last five years is as follows:

	1980 £000	1981 £000	1982 £000	1983 £000	1984 £000
ODA project aid	6,689	24,716	31,077	17,891	13,634
Programme aid	7,950	2,515	2,197	5,797	4,007
Other non-project aid	511	917	836	3,733	4,182
CDC project loans	729	29	180	53	176
Total financial aid	16,048	28,254	34,290	27,474	21,999
Personnel overseas	1,601	1,920	1,775	1,783	1,744
Students and trainees	832	757	1,129	1,004	1,094
Other TC	4,095	1,807	2,224	1,932	2,589
Total TC	6,528	4,484	5,128	4,720	5,427
Total aid	22,576	32,738	39,418	32,194	27,427

	1980 £000	1981 £000	1982 £000	1983 £000	1984 £000
Expenditure on ongoing infrastructure projects over the last four years has been:	—	19,486	28,662	15,368	10,920

It is not possible to give figures for projected infrastructure projects.

WALES

Ministers (Overnight Stays)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many overnight stays he and each of his Ministers made in Wales during the month of January.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I and my ministerial colleagues spend as much time in the Principality as we can, both on our public and private affairs.

Welsh Plant Breeding Station

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received since 1 January concerning future cutbacks at the Welsh plant breeding station at Aberystwyth arising from the Government's most recent reduction in the three year budget for agricultural research and advisory services.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have received two letters which express concern about the future of the Welsh plant breeding station.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the major schemes, expected to cost more than £350,000, included in the capital programme of the Welsh water authority since 1 January 1983.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to permit the Welsh water authority to allow balances from over-achievement of its financial targets to be carried forward for application in future years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh water authority will be able to utilise its balances in 1985-86, as set out in the Water Authorities (Return on Assets) Order 1985, SI 1985 No. 78.

M4 (Safety Barrier)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what length of barrier was replaced on the M4 in Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of his Department's staff are (a) engaged in local government matters, (b) local government finance including rate support grants, capital controls, accounts, statistics and other aspects of finance; and what proportion of his staff engaged in activities in (b) are full-time.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: It is difficult in many cases to draw a precise line between staff who are concerned with local government matters to a significant degree and those whose involvement is minor. The following table shows the numbers of posts in some of the parts of my Department most concerned with local government matters:

	Number
Transport, highways and planning group	252½
Economic and regional policy group	65
Education group (including HMI)	111½
Housing, architects and surveyors, local authority social services and social work services divisions	82
Finance (local government) division	14½
Water and environmental protection division	6½

The main group of posts concerned with the matters listed at (b) are the 14½ posts in finance (local government) division, but other staff including statisticians and research officers are also involved to some extent.

Fourteen of the members of finance (local government) division are full-time and one is part-time.

SCOTLAND

Measles

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish children have been immunised against measles by school age.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. By the end of 1983 (the latest year for which complete figures are available) 56·5 per cent. of the number of children born in 1978 had been immunised against measles. The corresponding figure for children born in 1979 and immunised by the end of 1984 is estimated to be 60 per cent.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of measles have been registered in Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. John MacKay: Notifications of measles in each of the past 10 years are as follows:

	Number
1975	5,619
1976	12,436
1977	8,626
1978	8,953
1979	10,234
1980	6,646
1981	4,698
1982	10,581
1983	6,193
1984	*4,919

* Provisional.

Hypothermia

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many causes of death in Scotland, in each of the past 10 years, have been ascribed or partly ascribed to hypothermia.

Mr. John MacKay: There have been some changes in recording practice over the years; so far as possible, the figures given below are consistent with current recording practice.

Deaths with any mention of hypothermia as a cause Scotland, 1975-1984

	Number
1975	150
1976	228
1977	158
1978	205
1979	259
1980	199
1981	254
1982	196
1983	179
1984	*174

* Provisional.

Doctors

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of practising doctors per 1,000 population in Scotland and in each of the other European Economic Community countries and in the United States of America and Canada.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest available information on a broadly comparable basis is that published by the World Health Organisation in its 1983 volume of statistics. The figures quoted relate to 1980-81 or the nearest available year and, for some countries, may include dentists as well as doctors. The details are as follows:

	Number of physicians per 1,000 population
Scotland	1·82
Belgium	2·60
France	1·72
Federal Republic of Germany	2·27
Luxembourg	1·36
Netherlands	1·85
Greece	2·55
Italy	2·89
Denmark	2·07
Republic of Ireland	1·29
United Kingdom: England and Wales	1·41
United Kingdom: Northern Ireland	1·67
United States of America	1·82
Canada	1·82

Agricultural Advisory Service

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what the proposed reduction in the central Government funding to the Agricultural Advisory Service in Scotland will be in 1987-88, compared with the previous three years; and what effects the reduction will have on the level of service and advice given by the organisation.

Mr. John MacKay: Planned expenditure for the agricultural advisory services in Scotland in the years in questions are as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	7·540
1985-86	7·771
1986-87	7·986

The reduction in funding in 1987-88, which parallels a similar reduction in the funding of the agricultural advisory service provided in England and Wales, reflects the Government's aim that the industry should make a greater financial contribution towards the cost of the advisory services from which it benefits.

The effects of the reduction will depend on the outcome of current discussions with the Scottish agricultural colleges, which provide the advisory services in Scotland, and on the extent to which those who use these services are prepared to contribute towards their cost. I am confident, however, that the colleges will continue to provide a satisfactory level of service to farmers in Scotland.

AIDS

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any people have died in Scotland from acquired immune deficiency syndrome; if any new cases have been reported; and what steps have been taken to provide resources to deal with the disease.

Mr. John MacKay: To date, four Scottish cases of AIDS have been reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit; two of these patients have died, one in 1982, the other in 1984. In addition, a patient ordinarily resident in England died in Scotland in 1984. Existing resources should enable the appropriate authorities to deal adequately with this disease.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the nationalised industries, non-governmental organisations and agencies for which his Department either has responsibility or provides funding, as well as those sections of his Department which provide services to the general public or to private organisations; and if he will indicate separately those which at present: (a) charge no fees, (b) charge fees which do not fully cover the costs of providing those services, (c) charge fees which exactly cover the costs of providing those services and (d) charge fees which more than cover the costs of providing those services.

Mr. Younger [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1985, c. 583]: The information is provided in the list. In view of the large number of services for which I am responsible either directly or through other bodies I have, in the interests of cost, restricted my answer for the most part to those services which cost more than £100,000 to provide and, for nationalised industries and the larger non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs), have provided only a general description of the substantial range of specific services available. I have excluded voluntary bodies in the social work field, List D schools and grant-aided residential special schools since the services which they provide are not in general available to the public on direct application.

TRANSPORT

London Regional Transport

7. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the projected financial surplus for London Regional Transport at the end of 1984-85.

Mr. Ridley: I gave full details of LRT's expected cash surplus, and the way it is to be applied by LRT, during the passage through this House of the London Regional Transport (Amendment) Bill on 19 and 20 February.

Compensation

13. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the procedures and level of compensation paid to owners of property taken for road building or improvements.

Mrs. Chalker: I am aware of the recommendations about procedures and compensation made by the EDC in its report on major road construction. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and Environment have already announced that they expect to respond to that report by the spring.

British Rail (Catering)

14. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the privatisation of catering facilities on British Rail.

Mr. Ridley: I warmly welcome BR's decision to make competition for the provision of train and station catering the priority area for the application of its new criteria for the supply of support services. This is very good news for the consumer. I hope that many private catering firms will put proposals to BR.

Transport Bill

15. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Leicester city council concerning the recently published Transport Bill.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a written representation from Leicester city council about the White Paper "Buses" and a response to my Department's consultation paper on the structure of district council bus operations.

16. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what improvement in off-peak bus services he expects as a result of the Transport Bill becoming law.

Mr. David Mitchell: Many off peak services are profitable or potentially profitable and on those I expect deregulation to lead to better services and lower fares. Where the market does not provide services without subsidy, competitive tendering by local authorities will achieve better value for money.

36. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from organisations representing bus users in rural areas following the publication of the Transport Bill.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received over 8,000 representations since the publication of the White Paper last July. A substantial proportion of the responses have been from representative bodies and individuals in rural areas.

Local Government Bill

17. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received concerning the impact of the Local Government Bill on the use of section 20 grants.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since I answered a similar question from the hon. Member on 3 December, at column 39, I have received a small number of further letters from hon. Members and others about this subject.

Disabled People

18. Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having, and with what organisations, to ensure that disabled people can have effective mobility on public transport.

Mrs. Chalker: The transport needs of disabled people are a continuing priority for my Department. In addition to regular contact with my own panel of advisers on disability, I am in frequent touch with transport operators and authorities, and with disability organisations on this subject.

M40 Extension

19. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the present situation with regard to proposals to construct the M40 extension.

Mrs. Chalker: The order for the M40 extension of the M40 between Ardley and Warwick which was made last December is the subject of proceedings in the High Court, further progress on this section has to await the outcome of those proceedings.

On other parts of the route, the further consultations on a proposed modification to the short length between Ardley and Wendlebury are now complete. I shall announce a decision shortly; and for the section between Warwick and the M42 at Umberslade, draft side roads and compulsory purchase order are to be published in a few weeks.

Bus Services (Deregulation)

20. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had on the expected effect of deregulation of bus services in metropolitan areas; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 1 February at column 339. Since then I have received several hundred further letters from members of the public in the metropolitan areas, many of them based on false assumptions concerning the Government's proposals.

Stansted-Heathrow Inquiries

21. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to indicate when a decision will be reach on the Stansted-Heathrow terminal five planning inquiries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Transport will announce their decisions as soon as possible, after careful consideration of the inspector's report and all the evidence before us.

A312 Hampton Hill

22. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect he expects the completion of the M25 between Reigate via the Leatherhead interchange to Wisley on the A3 to have on the level of traffic on the A312 at Hampton Hill.

Mrs. Chalker: Traffic forecasts prepared in 1978 pointed to a 10-15 per cent. reduction on the A312 at Hampton Hill following completion of the M25. Recent counts taken on the A309 just south of Hampton Court bridge indicate a 12 per cent. traffic reduction since the M25 opened between Chertsey and Wisley, which suggests that the 1978 forecasts may prove to be on the conservative side once further sections open. My hon. Friend's long-standing support for the M25 is proving to be well justified.

London Regional Transport (Amendment) Bill

23. Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the London Regional Transport (Amendment) Bill.

Mrs. Chalker: I have received three letters from members of the public one from London borough of Lambeth concerning the LRT (Amendment) Bill and my officials have met officers of the GLC to discuss technical issues arising from this piece of legislation.

Bus Services (Expansion)

24. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what expansion in bus services he expects from the passing of the Transport Bill into law.

Mr. David Mitchell: I expect more services and more passengers on the profitable routes. I also expect deregulation to sustain and stimulate services on many routes which are now only marginally profitable or loss making. Where the market does not provide services competitive tendering for subsidy will enable authorities to achieve better value for money.

Buses

25. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations on bus substitution he has received since the publication of the White Paper "Buses".

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend announced proposals for legislation on bus substitution services on 21 June 1984. Since then, we have received about 20 representations specifically related to the bus substitution proposals. There are also references to those proposals in a few of the representations we have received on the Buses White Paper.

M11 (Acoustic Fencing)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many metres of acoustic fencing have been erected along the M11 since its opening; and how many more are to be erected during the current year.

Mrs. Chalker: A total of 1,633 metres of acoustic fencing has been added to the 3,862 metres provided as part of the original motorway construction. There are no plans to erect any more.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the coal strike has had on British Rail's markets.

Mr. David Mitchell: BR estimate that to 16 February 1985 the coal strike has reduced their rail freight volume by over 71 million tonnes representing reduced freight receipts of £230 million.

"Stay Low" Campaign

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of the "Stay Low" Christmas drink-drive campaign; and when the research regarding the outcome of this campaign is scheduled for publication.

Mrs. Chalker: The total cost of this campaign including research was £1·22 million. A full assessment on the effects of the campaign requires analysis of accident and casualty figures as well as the results of our attitude research among the 16 to 19-year-old target audience. This information should be available in the spring.

Traffic Statistics

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average annual daily flow of motor vehicles, showing heavy goods vehicles as a separate category, on the Ashford bypass section of the A20 and the Newmarket bypass section of the M11.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Average Annual Daily Flow 1983

	All motor vehicles	Heavy goods vehicles
Ashford bypass (M20 section junctions 9-10)	9,000	900

	All motor vehicles	Heavy goods vehicles
Newmarket bypass (A45)	26,000	5,900

The heavy goods vehicle category includes all commercial vehicles of more than 30 cwt. unladen weight.

Pensions (Free Travel)

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those local authorities which currently grant free travel to pensioners.

Mr. David Mitchell: Concessionary fare schemes are for individual local authorities to decide and they are not required to send the Department details of the provision they make.

Wheel Clamps

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has reached a decision on the future of the experimental use of wheel clamps in central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Following my consultation with those concerned last year, I received many useful comments on the wheel clamp scheme. There was general support for continuing the scheme in central London for at least a further period in order to establish how longlasting the effects will be. I have therefore today laid before the House an order continuing the use of wheel clamps in central London for a further two years. This will enable the effects of the system to be further assessed. It will continue to be the practice to tow away vehicles dangerously or obstructively parked rather than to clamp them.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Braking Systems)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the benefits of anti-lock braking systems in reducing accidents involving heavy goods vehicles; and if he intends to introduce regulations requiring their fitment to such vehicles.

Mr. Chalker: Anti-lock braking systems are now being fitted to the majority of new heavy trailers, and this should result in a reduction in certain types of accident involving heavy articulated vehicles. Legal requirements for vehicle braking systems are laid down in a European Community directive which at present does not specify anti-lock. Changes to the directive are under discussion which may lead to more widespread use of anti-lock and requirements that it should be fitted to certain categories of heavy vehicle.

Helicopters

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what allowance is made for the higher levels of noise and vibration experienced in helicopters as opposed to fixed wing aircraft in establishing satisfactory flight-time limitation regulations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for regulating the flying and duty hours performed by helicopter pilots, advised by a panel which includes independent experts. No allowance is made for the greater noise and vibration characteristic of helicopters in the present flight time limitation regulations. However, the CAA is currently reviewing the causes (including noise and vibration) of fatigue in helicopter pilots, and whether any change to the flight time limitations is called for.

Dangerous Substances

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities and what expenditure has been provided in each year since 1981, by his Department, to ensure that drivers of vehicles carrying dangerous substances are trained in accordance with regulation 21 of the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 (S.I., 1981, No. 1059).

Mr. Ridley: The regulation places the responsibility for ensuring that drivers are adequately trained on the operators of vehicles.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) drivers, (b) operators of vehicles and (c) operators of tank containers have been prosecuted under the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 (S.I., 1981, No. 1059) in each year since its implementation.

Mr. Ridley: I understand that there was one successful prosecution in 1983 and two in 1984 by the Factory Inspectorate for offences by vehicle operators in premises for which they are the enforcement authority. There is no central record of prosecutions by other enforcement authorities.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff have been employed by Her Majesty's Government to enforce the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 (S.I., 1981, No. 1059) in each year since its implementation.

Mr. Ridley: The regulations are made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and enforcement in premises to which the Act applies is the responsibility of either the Health and Safety Executive or the local authority as specified in the Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1977. Enforcement on the road is the responsibility of chief officers of police. All HSE inspectors can enforce the regulations in premises for which HSE is the enforcing authority.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the penalties applying to the driver, the operator of the vehicle, and the operator of the tank container, respectively, for breach of each of the regulations described in the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 (S.I., 1981, No. 1059).

Mr. Ridley: I understand that the penalties for any offence under the Regulations are the same as for any regulations made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. By virtue of section 33(3) of that Act and the Criminal Penalties (Increases) Order 1984, the maximum fine that may be imposed following conviction in a magistrates court is £2,000 but following conviction on indictment there can be an unlimited fine.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the amendments to the labelling requirements for lorries carrying dangerous substances to be enforced from 1 May to be published; and if he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Ridley: All the amendments to the European agreement concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods (known as the "ADR" agreement) that come into effect on 1 May were published by the Stationery Office in January.

Safety Barriers

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of accidents involving deaths and involving injury to maintenance workers engaged in servicing and repairing safety barriers on United Kingdom roads for each year for the past five years.

Mrs. Chalker: This information is not collected on accident report forms, so I regret that the required figures are not available.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the report of the Anglo-French study group on the Channel tunnel as soon as he receives it.

Mr. Ridley: The remit of the Anglo-French study group is to advise Ministers on guidelines for prospective promoters. When its report is submitted I will need to consider the draft guidelines with my French counterpart. I will of course ensure that the agreed guidelines are made available to hon. Members; I can not say now precisely when and how.

35. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government that any Channel tunnel should be financed entirely from private funds without any aid or guarantees from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The answer to the first part of my hon. Friend's question is yes: this applies to any form of fixed link. As to the second part of the question, I will make a statement at the appropriate time.

National Travel Survey

Sir Philip Goodhart asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether data concerning the mileage driven by drivers over 65 years of age will be collected as part of the 1985-86 national travel survey.

Mrs. Chalker: The 1985-86 national travel survey will be able to provide an estimate of weekly mileage driven by drivers over 65 years of age.

Drivers (Accident Statistics)

Sir Philip Goodhart asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will now publish in the Official Report a table showing the rate of drivers' involvement in accidents, per 1,000 licence holders, for drivers in the 17 to 19, 20 to 24, 25 to 28, 29 to 34, 35 to 54, 55 to 64, 65 to 69, and over 70 years age groups;

(2) what is the number of car driving licence holders in the age groups 65 to 69, 70 to 74, 75 to 79, and over 80 years, and the number of drivers in these age groups who were involved in accidents in 1983.

Mrs. Chalker: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Privatisation

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current estimated savings by his Department for 1984-85 as a result of privatisation schemes.

Mr. Ridley: There have been no privatisation schemes (other than in relation to nationalised industries) as such in my Department in 1984-85. However, contracting out of some functions—notably vehicle relicensing work to the Post Office — will save my Department approximately £10·5 million in 1984-85. We are pursuing other opportunities for contracting out.

First Class Passengers (Dining Facilities)

26. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has discussed the British Rail plan, allowing only first class passengers to use dining cars, with the chairman of British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: These are entirely matters of day-to-day management for British Rail. However, I understand that dining cars are at present open to all ticket holders except on eight trains a day where demand exceeds seat availability and priority is given to first class passengers. For the longer-term I understand that BR is thinking of replacing dining cars with at-seat trolley services. These would start, at first experimentally, on the west coast main line later this year, serving meals at seats in most first class coaches, and drinks and cold food to other coaches. Buffet cars would continue to serve hot food.

London to Norwich Line

27. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will discuss investment in the London to Norwich line.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I have no plans to discuss this matter with the chairman at present. Electrification of the line is proceeding.

Road Safety

28. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further proposals he has to improve road safety.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall be considering carefully the scope for further action in the light of the recently published report of the Transport Committee and, in due course, of the Government's own review of road safety policy currently in hand.

Airport Inquiries (Report)

29. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on the report of the inspector on the airport inquiries 1981 to 1983.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames).

Local Government Reform

30. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect he expects the abolition of the metropolitan counties to have on the uptake of section 20 grants.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Wigan (Mr. Stott).

Dartford Tunnel

31. Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received concerning the pressure of traffic flows in the Dartford tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Since I replied to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 19 June 1984 at column 93, I have received 14 letters from hon. Members. In addition, letters have also been received from eight members of the public, the chairman of the Dartford tunnel joint committee and the clerk to the Essex county council. Traffic flows at the tunnel were discussed when I visited the tunnel on 15 August 1984, when I received a deputation led by my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 20 November 1984, and when officials from my Department met the county surveyors of Kent and Essex together with officials of the tunnel joint committee on 4 February 1985.

Conditions can be expected to improve when new toll booths come into operation later this year and again when work to improve the approach roads is completed in Spring 1987. I am, however, very conscious of the role of the tunnel as a crucial link in the M25. Consultants have therefore been retained to investigate traffic flows so that we may prepare to take any necessary decisions in good time.

Airline Passengers (Statistics)

32. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the projected growth in scheduled airline passengers for flights within the United Kingdom for 1985 over 1984.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department does not produce short-term forecasts for passenger traffic. However, the Department's latest long-term forecasts assume that domestic passenger movements will increase by between 2·4 and 5 per cent. per annum in the period 1982 to 1990. (table 2, Air Traffic Forecasts for the United Kingdom 1984). A copy of these forecasts is in the Library of the House.

Handicapped People (LRT)

33. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of London Regional Transport, he will discuss the provision of facilities by the board for the handicapped.

Mrs. Chalker: Transport provision for disabled people was among the matters under discussion when I last met the chairman of LRT, and I expect it to be a frequent item for discussion at future meetings.

London Regional Transport (Board Membership)

34. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether any of the current members of the board of London Regional Transport were nominated by or on behalf of any London borough.

Mrs. Chalker: No. The London Regional Transport Act requires my right hon. Friend to appoint members of the board of London Regional Transport from among persons who appear to him to have had wide experience of, and shown capability in, Transport, industrial commercial or financial matters, administration, applied science, or the organisation of workers.

Articulated Lorries

37. Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the number of road accidents caused by the jack-knifing of articulated lorries, he will introduce legislation to make the fitment of anti-jack-knifing mechanisms mandatory.

Mrs. Chalker: Jack-knifing is a form of braking instability which occurs in about 3 per cent. of heavy goods vehicle injury accidents. To overcome it, efforts have been concentrated on setting a braking stability performance standard.

Such a standard is included in the EC braking directives which became mandatory in the United Kingdom for all new vehicles from 1 October 1982. The practical effect is that articulated goods vehicles have to be fitted with anti jack-knifing mechanisms such as load sensing brake valves of wheel anti-lock devices.

M25 (Epping Forest)

38. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps were taken to inform those affected in the Epping Forest district of Essex of their right to claim compensation on account of the M25 and the procedure for so doing.

Mrs. Chalker: Public notices, display advertisements and information from the Department's press releases appeared in local newspapers in March 1984 and again on 7 and 8 February 1985 advising those affected about their rights to claim compensation and the procedure for doing so. Explanatory booklets have been sent to all those residents who have written to my Department.

My hon. Friend will be interested to know that we have already received more than 200 claims for this section of motorway.

Through Booking Facilities

39. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, before privatising any more publicly owned assets in the transport sector, he will make it a condition of the contract that through booking facilities must be maintained.

Mr. Ridley: No. It would be a matter for the commercial judgment of the transport operators concerned, taking full account of the wishes of their customers.

CIVIL SERVICE

Staff Statistics

Mr. Fisher asked the Minister for the Civil Service what information he has as to how many civil servants have left the Civil Service for jobs in the private sector in each of the last ten years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the figures for the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 (a) for the cost of the Civil Service and (b) the average cost for each civil servant; and if he will break down the average cost for each civil servant into pay, national insurance, superannuation, and other costs, such as office space, heating, lighting, car allowance, travel allowance, telephone, and so on.

Mr. Hayhoe: In my answers of 18 January 1982, at column 79, and 19 November 1982 at column 296 I provided my hon. Friend with figures for 1980-81 and 1981-82. Figures for the 1979-80 financial year are not available in the form requested. The figures for 1982-83 and 1983-84 are shown below, but figures on the same basis for 1984-85 are not yet available.

The averages can be derived from departmental running costs of £15,197 million in 1982-83 — [Vol. 47, c. 76-78]—and £16,050 million in 1983-84—[Vol. 68, c. 271-273]. The staff totals used to calculate the averages are:

	1 April 1983	1 April 1984
Civil Service (excluding trading funds)	623,000	599,400
Armed Forces	320,600	325,900
Northern Ireland Civil Service	25,800	25,100

As I explained in providing the 1981-82 figures, information on Civil Service and Armed Forces is not held seperately.

	1982-83 £
Wages and salaries	10,757
Personnel overheads	847
Accommodation and rents	2,480
Office services	725
Other services	867
TOTAL	15,676

Public Services

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor Exchequer how many people were working in the N Health Service, local government and the Civil Se the years 1970, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 an what was the total public expenditure on these serv each of those years; and if he will publish these co numbers both as a total and broken down between th factors.

Mr. Peter Rees: I draw the attention of my hon. to the written answers given to him on 31 Jan columns 312 and 313 and 11 January 1985 at colum Public expenditure figures for 1979-80 to date ar in the White Paper, "The Government's Expe Plans, 1985-86 to 1987-88" (Cmnd 9428). Figu 1970 are not available on the same definitions. sector employment figures are published annu "Economic Trends" and its annual supplement.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor Exchequer what has been the vehicle excise duty private motor cars and (b) commercial vehicles in the last 10 years; and what has been the total revenu each source in each of those years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have as soon as possible.

Fuel Duty

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor Exchequer what has been the duty on (a) petrol diesel per gallon in each of the last 10 years; and w been the total annual revenue from each source in those years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is as follows:

Year	Date of change	Duty (pence per gallon) Petrol	Diesel	Revenue (£ million) Petrol
1974-75		22·5	22·5	1,101
1975-76		22·5	22·5	1,102
1976-77	9 April 1976	30·0	30·0	1,517
	29 March 1977	35·0	35·0
1977-78	8 August 1977	30·0	35·0	1,666
1978-79		30·0	35·0	1,654
1979-80	12 June 1979	36·8	41·8	1.978
	26 March 1980	45·5	45·5
1980-81	10 March 1981	62·8	62·8	2,619
1981-82	2 July 1981	62·8	54·1	3,555
	9 March 1982	70·6	60·2
1982-83	15 March 1983	74·1	62·8	4,044
1983-84	13 March 1984	78·0	65·8	4,340

Value Added Tax

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the value added tax on a gallon of (a) petrol and (b) diesel in each of the last 10 years; and what has been the total revenue from each source in each of those years.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will specify how the imposition, rate and revenue from value added tax in the United Kingdom differs from each of the other members of the European Community;

(2) if he will list all the representations received against any further extension of value added tax on (a) books, (b) newspapers and periodicals and (c) newspaper advertising.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Extra-Statutory Concessions

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish a list of extra-statutory concessions which he has introduced since May 1979;

(2) whether he will consolidate all Her Majesty's Customs and Excise extra-statutory concessions into one publication, specifying in each case the fiscal year in which each concession was introduced;

(3) whether he will consolidate all Inland Revenue extra-statutory concessions into one publication, specifying in each case the fiscal year in which each concession was introduced.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Lump Sum Pensions (Taxation)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the representations received against taxing lump sum pensions.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Revenue Statistics

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated yield from all sources of taxation, including excise and other duties in each of the last six fiscal years revalued at current prices.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Married Couples (Taxation)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many couples have elected for separate taxation and assessment in each of the years since this option was introduced.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many companies have paid corporation tax of over (a) £100,000, (b) £500,000, (c) £1 million and (d) £5 million in each of the last five fiscal years;

(2) what percentage of (a) gross trading profits and (b) net trading profits was paid by all industries in corporation tax for each of the last 10 years;

(3) what percentage of net trading profits was paid in corporation tax by (a) agriculture, (b) energy and water supply, (c) extraction and chemicals, (d) metal goods and engineering and (e) other manufacturing industries in the last fiscal year for which statistics are available;

(4) what percentage of net trading profits was paid in corporation tax by (a) construction, (b) distribution and repairs, (c) hotels and catering, (d) transport and communications, (e) banking, finance and insurance, (f) business services, (g) other services and (h) overseas industries in the last fiscal year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

North Sea Oil (Revenue)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the revenue from North sea oil operations in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Gross Domestic Product (Taxation)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing the total tax taken as a proportion of gross domestic product in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Inflation

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

European Community (Own Resources)

Mr. William Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Commission has requested overdraft facilities on its own resources (No. 1) account in the United Kingdom and other member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Article 12(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77 of 19 December 1977 empowers the Commission, in certain circumstances, to draw in excess of the total assets in its accounts in member states. The facility can be used only to meet legitimate expenditure commitments within the appropriations in the Budget, or as at present, within the provisional twelfths regime. Repayment of any overdraft will be made by deduction from the next available own resources payment into the EEC No. 1 account. Use of this facility thus does not add to the total amount that the Community is already authorised to spend in 1985.

The Commission has informed member states that it now needs to use this facility. The Government have satisfied themselves that use of the facility would comply with the provisions of Community and United Kingdom law and that the necessary payments are an obligation to be met by a direct charge on the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972.

Private Health Insurance (Tax Allowance)

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much income tax yield was forgone as a result of private health insurance tax offset allowance in the 1982-83 and 1983-84 tax years; and if he will give an estimate for 1984-85;

(2) if he will estimate income tax yields in 1985-86 if the private health insurance tax allowance (a) remains at its present level, (b) is index-linked, (c) is increased by 50 per cent. and (d) is increased by 100 per cent.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 21 February 1985, c. 571]: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the £8,500 earnings threshold below which employees are not generally taxable on benefits in kind provided by reason of their employment. These rules have applied since 1982-83 to private health care insurance. The revenue cost in respect of employees below the limit is estimated at £4 million for 1982-83 and £5 million for 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Income tax is chargeable on the benefit of medical insurance provided by the employer for directors and those employees above the threshold. For 1985-86 the yield, corresponding to various levels of the earnings threshold is estimated as follows:

	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)
Earnings threshold (£ per year)	8,500	8,900	12,750	17,000
Yield (£ million)	20	20	17	14

Income Tax

Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor Exchequer by how much the estimated full-year income tax would be reduced if the tax thresho married man in a one-earner household were r equal the normal supplementary benefit m assuming two school-age children.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 19 Februar c. 434]: If the non-aged married man's tax allowa 1985-86 was set at the current level of the supple benefit ordinary scale rate for a married man w children (one under 11 and one aged 11 to 15), th revenue cost on top of statutory indexation would b £1 billion in a full year. If the other main allowanc raised in ine with the married man's allowan additional cost (on top of indexation) wo approximately £870 million.

ENVIRONMENT

Nottingham (Grants)

Mr. Bradon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State Environment (1) what grants, inclusive of special have been approved for the City of Nottingham in th 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985;

(2) what grants, inclusive of special grants, ha approved for the Nottinghamshire county council years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information i in the table. The figures for specific grants includ programme grants and derelict land grant, whic previously been interpreted as "special grants".

* The rate support grant system changed in 1981-82. Figures for earlier years are not on a comparable basis. The figures for 1979-80 and include the needs and resources elements for the county council, and additionally the domestic element for the city council. Thereafter they co grant for both councils and additionally domestic rate relief grant for the city council. The figures up to 1981-82 are final entitlements. Those for to 1984-85 are latest estimates after holdback. The figures for 1985-86 are estimates assuming that the authorities spend at target.

† Grants under the urban programme and derelict land grant are included in these figures which are derived from the authorities' outturn data. E are not available for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

‡ Estimates are not available for 1985-86.

‖ Estimates are not available for 1984-85 or 1985-86.

¶ The figures for 1979-80 to 1981-82 cover rent and rate rebates grants paid by the DOE. In 1982-83 some payments of rent and rate rebat were also made by the DHSS. The figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 cover housing benefits grants paid by DHSS and are provisional.

Local Authority Staff (Pay)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 30 January, Official Report, column 175-76, if he will give details of the aggregate pay bill for local government white collar and manual employees, including teachers, lecturers, police and firemen, for each of the years 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available estimates are:

Total employee costs—Local Authorities in England

	£ million
1978-79	9,100
1979-80	10,800
1980-81	13,300
1981-82	14,800
1982-83	15,800
1983-84	16,900

Note:
Total employee costs include wages and salaries, employers contributions to national insurance and superannuation, cash allowances and compensation for loss of office.

Olympic Games

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had about holding the 1992 Olympic Games in the United Kingdom; and if he has offered any financial resources.

Mr. Macfarlane: Bids for staging the Olympic Games are the responsibility of the British Olympic Association and interested cities. In a recent meeting I asked BOA officers for their assessment of the future prospects of staging the Games in this country; I understand they are currently considering whether or not a bid could be developed for 1992 or a subsequent year. No offer of financial resources has been made.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he intends to consult relevant bodies about the level of commercial sponsorship that would be appropriate if the Olympics Games are held in London in 1992;

(2) which sporting organisations, which local authorities and which of the local authority associations he intends to consult concerning the proposal to hold the Olympic Games in London in 1992.

Mr. Macfarlane: Any consultations about staging the Olympic Games in this country in 1992 or subsequent years would be for the British Olympic Association and the city concerned.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) today.

Water Authorities (Capital Programme)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the major schemes, expected to cost more than £350,000, included in the capital programme of each of the English water authorities since 1 January 1983.

Mr. Macfarlane: The hon. Member should write to the chairman of each authority for this information as full details are not kept centrally.

Defective Houses (Mortgages)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he now expects agreement to be concluded between his Department the National House Building Council and the building societies on repair schemes for houses designated under the Housing Defects Act which will guarantee future mortgageability.

Mr. Gow: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 20 February at column 485.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding his decision to reduce the amount of capital receipts which local authorities can spend.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Members for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) and Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 6 February 1985 at column 618.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of the moneys which they have been entitled to spend under: (a) section 137 and (b) section 142 of the Local Government Act 1972 have been spent in each of the last six years by (i) the Greater London council, (ii) each of the London borough councils, (iii) the Common Council of the City of London, (iv) each of the metropolitan county councils and (v) each of the metropolitan district councils;

(2) what are the sums which (a) the Greater London council, (b) each of the London borough councils, (c) the Common Council of the City of London, (d) each of the metropolitan county councils and (e) each of the metropolitan district councils have been entitled to spend under (i) section 137 and (ii) section 142 of the Local Government Act 1972 during each of the last six years.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Map Amendment Orders

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of how many definitive map amendment order objections have been received, since the Wildlife and Countryside Act came into force; how many are still outstanding; and what is the currently envisaged timetable for dealing with outstanding cases.

Mr. Waldegrave: Twenty three opposed definitive map modification orders have been submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by county surveying authorities since the Wildlife and Countryside Act came into force. 18 are outstanding at the present time.

The outstanding orders are in varying stages of processing, and in several cases the local inquiry has been arranged. One of the decision letters will be issued shortly, and the remainder will be issued as quickly as possible.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of Exchequer contributions towards expenditure on home improvement grants paid by Southampton city council for each of the last 10 years.

Sir George Young: Southampton city council's entitlement to Exchequer contribution towards their expenditure on home improvement grants from 1975-76 onwards was:

(£000 cash)

Year	Amount
1975-76	233·5
1976-77	305·5
1977-78	325·1

1983-84	*1098·5
1984-85	*1322·8

* Provisional figures subject to adjustment when audited final claims are received.

Mortgages

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has, in respect of each local authority, and for each year since 1979, regarding (a) the number of mortgages granted, (b) the number of mortgages in respect of which payments have been rescheduled and (c) the number of cases in which an authority has repossessed a property on which it had advanced a mortgage.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1985, c. 332]: I have today placed in the Library tables showing figures for financial years from 197 1983-84, for each English local authority, of (i) mo granted to purchasers of council dwellings (info available only from 1980-81), (ii) other mortgages to private persons purchasing or improving dwellin (iii) dwellings mortgaged to the authorities whi repossessed. No figures on the re-schedul repayments on mortgages are available to the Depa

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Services if he will publish in the Official Report showing the present pay scales for all grades of together with the comparable value at today's price scales in being in each year since 1975.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The hon. Member has as his base year 1975 which was exceptional and w therefore frequently used by those trying to u increase in nursing salaries. The Government accept that nursing pay should be based on historica still less at levels set in any one year. So I would u hon. Member not to attach excessive significance figures he seeks.

However the table shows, for all the main nursi grades, the basic salary maxima for the years 1 1984, revalued at December 1984 prices. It exclu new management grades established for the restructuring of the National Health Service. The also exclude the effect of the reduction in nurses' w hours in 1980/81, equivalent to a further increase per cent. on basic pay.

Pensions

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates have been made of the effects of changes to the state earnings-related pensions scheme on those already covered by the scheme.

Mr. Whitney: The future of the state earnings-r pensions scheme is being considered in the context social security reviews. Any changes proposed obviously need to take account of the effects on already covered by the scheme, but final decisions not yet been taken.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services who will appoint the United Kingdom representatives to the World Health Organisation's planned meeting of experts scheduled for October 1985 in Nairobi, Kenya; and when the appointments will be made.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The World Health Organisation is covening, and is deciding who should be invited to, the conference of experts on the rational use of drugs, expected to be held in Nairobi later this year. The timing of the issue of invitations is a matter for the World Health Organisation.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the article, "Prescribing: the Power to Set Limits", by J. M. Harding and others in the British Medical Journal of 9 February, a copy of which he has received.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The article referred to by my hon. Friend concludes that generic prescribing and a limited list of drugs may improve the quality of prescribing and be the only way to curb prescribing costs. We fully agree with these conclusions.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department will undertake a nationwide public information campaign, including local and national newspaper advertisements, to ensure that patients are aware that the revised limited list proposals meet all their clinical needs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. A nationwide publicity campaign will be undertaken. We are currently considering what form this should take.

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue guidance to public services and voluntary organisations about the transmission of acquired immune deficiency syndrome by saliva where resuscitation is a possibility.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: While there is limited scientific evidence to show that the AIDS-associated virus HTLVIII exists in saliva, no case has ever been reported in this country or abroad where AIDS has been transmitted in this way.

Nevertheless we are liaising closely with the central departments responsible for the emergency services and the prison service, to assist them in reviewing existing procedures for resuscitation. The prison medical service will shortly be issuing guidelines for use by prison health professionals and prison officers dealing with AIDS patients. We are also in touch with voluntary organisations providing first aid services and will be advising them of precautions their staff might take.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that from now on no one receiving a transfusion of blood supplied by the National Health Service will be at risk of contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome therefrom;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to provide for criminal sanctions against persons who supply blood to the Blood Transfusion Service knowing or believing that they are suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The National Health Service does not use imported blood obtained from paid donors. In this country we have an entirely voluntary system of blood collection. There is no financial or other incentive for our voluntary donors to put others at risk. Legislation is therefore not needed to deter those at high risk from AIDS from giving blood. The Government have taken steps to make it absolutely clear to such donors and potential donors that they should not give blood.

There is only a very remote chance of contracting AIDS from ordinary blood transfusions given in hospitals. Nevertheless, in addition we hope that screening tests to detect the presence in blood of antibodies to the AIDS related virus will be available for general use later this year. We shall thoroughly evaluate the tests on offer to see which is the most suitable for use in the National Health Service. In anticipation of these developments we have advised regional health authorities to set aside funds in 1985-86 to enable blood transfusion centres to test all blood donations as soon as possible. Testing all donations will reduce the risk still further.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to offer compensation to persons who contract acquired immune deficiency syndrome as a result of receiving contaminated blood supplied by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is only a very remote chance of contracting AIDS from ordinary blood transfusions. There has never been a general state scheme to compensate those who suffer the unavoidable adverse effects which can unhappily arise from many medical procedures.

Depo-Provera

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the contra-indications associated wih the drug Depo-Provera; if these contra-indications are widely known to doctors and prescribing chemists; if the contra-indications are clearly indicated when prescriptions are handed over to patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The company has prepared a data sheet giving details of the contra-indications to, and the known side effects of, Depo-Provera which is available to all doctors. The chief medical officers of the United Kingdom have written to doctors about the possible side effects associated with Depo-Provera and the need for doctors to counsel patients before a decision is reached by the patient about treatment with Depo-Provera. In their letters, chief medical officers have also drawn attention to the information leaflet which has been prepared by the company for doctors to give to patients. The purpose of the leaflet, copies of which are included in the company's prescribing packs for doctors, is to help patients to decide whether they wish to be treated with Depo-Provera. The leaflet and cassette tapes of its text, are available in a number of languages.

I have arranged for copies of the CMO letter from our Department, and copies of doctor's prescribing packs, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up a fund to compensate any patient who suffers injury as a result of the contra-indications of Depo-Provera.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. It would be for the courts to determine the outcome of any claim for compensation made on the grounds that Depo-Provera, properly used, had been the cause of injury to a patient.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he now has pursuant to the answer of 13 November 1984, Official Report, column 220, on the policy of the Food and Drugs Administration of the United States of America towards the drug Depo-Provera; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that the United States Food and Drugs Administration (FDA) are still considering this matter.

We have asked the Committee on Safety of Medicines for its advice on the report of the public board of inquiry set up by the FDA. As with all medicinal products marketed in the United Kingdom, the safety of Depo-Provera is kept under constant review.

Cadmium Intake (Cigarettes)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for a reply to be sent to the letter sent to the Minister of Health on 4 January by the hon. Member for Gower regarding the relationship between cadmium intake and the smoking of non-filter cigarettes.

Mr. John Patten: I wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 20 February.

Drugs

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 13 February, Official Report, columns 215-16, if he will publish in the Official Report for each of the past five years those drugs which the World Health Organisation has informed his Department of major changes to warnings in their use, distinguishing between (a) where no changes to the United Kingdom data sheets have resulted and (b) where changes to the United Kingdom data sheets have resulted;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 13 February, Official Report, columns 215-16, if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the drugs that are currently being considered by the licensing authority following information received by his Department from the World Health Organisation of major changes to warnings in their use;

(3) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 13 February, Official Report, columns 215-16, if he will arrange for his Department to collect records of variations between United Kingdom data sheets and broadly similar documents in other countries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Manchester (Home Heating)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the estates in the Manchester area with heating systems which have been designated as disproportionately expensive to run since his answer of 18 June 1984, Official Report, columns 56-7; how many homes in the area have now been designated; and what has been the total cost since this matter was first raised with his Department by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe.

Mr. Whitney: Fourteen certificates designating heating systems as being disproportionately expensive to run under paragraph 6 of schedule 4 of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 have been issued for the Greater Manchester area since 18 June 1984. Each certificate may cover the heating system or systems on one, part of, or more than one estate. I shall write to the right hon. Member giving details of the estates concerned.

Designation under paragraph 6 of Schedule 4 applies to heating systems. Information on the numbers of homes containing all the designated heating systems in the Greater Manchester area is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A total of 74 certificates of designation have been issued for the Greater Manchester area since the current arrangements were introduced in 1982. The total cost of estate rate heating additions in the area would depend on the number of supplementary benefit claimants with heating systems affected, the size of the homes, the length of time on benefit and underlying entitlement to other heating additions. This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Diarrhoea

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate a publicity campaign to promote the role of hand washing in reducing the incidence of diarrhoea.

Mr. John Patten: The Health Education Council already promotes the importance of hand washing in preventing the dissemination of various diarrhoeal diseases by way of a range of leaflets and posters. I shall arrange for examples to be sent to the hon. Member.

Children in Care

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of children taken into care in 1982, 1983 and 1984 for each county in England.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of children admitted to the care of each of the metropolitan and non-metropolitan counties in England during the years ended 31 March 1982, 1983 and, where available 1984, is as follows:

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra payments have been made due to cold weather each week during the current year by his Department's local offices in Walsall road and Soho road, Birmingham; and what has been the average payment and the average fuel bill on which the payment has been made.

Mr. Whitney: Local social security offices have been asked in paragraph 7451 of the S Manual (a copy of which is in the Library) to keep a record of the number of payments made under Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulation 26 and of the amounts paid. The total number of payments made so far at the local offices in Walsall Road, Perry Barr, and Soho Road, Handsworth is 322. The average payment made so far this winter in these two offices is £2·07. Since the majority of claimants who pay for fuel quarterly will not yet have had a bill for a period including the weeks in which the trigger points set by the chief adjudication officer (set out in appendix 19 of the S Manual) were reached, and since the payment made depends on the average temperature over the period of the claimant's bill, it is too early to say how many payments will be made in total by these two offices this winer or what the average payment will be. The remaining information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if it has been decided to allow the single fuel payment for severe weather to be paid for the week ended 24 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I understand that the chief adjudication officer has not yet received the necessary information from the Meteorological Office. I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been spent in the current winter in advertising the availability of (a) weekly heating additions and (b) exceptionally severe weather allowances.

Mr. Whitney: No money has been spent on press or television advertising. In order to supplement the impact of Ministerial statements and national and local press releases, £8,000 has been spent on leaflet printing and posters were already in place in local DHSS offices for use whenever appropriate.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many supplementary benefit claimants who were eligible for exceptionally severe weather payments in 1982, 1983 and 1984 claimed the benefit.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to him on 18 January at column 261.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit claimants he estimates now are eligible for exceptionally severe weather payments as a result of the announcements he has made under the degree days formula in January and February.

Mr. Whitney: It is too early to say how many claimants will be found to be eligible for payments under Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulation 26. Claimants are asked to claim the payments to which they are entitled when they receive their fuel bills: the majority of those who pay for fuel quarterly will not yet have had a bill for a period including a week in which the 'trigger point" set by the chief adjudication officer for the area was reached.

Private Contractors

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish the approved list of private contractors for catering, cleaning and laundry services of the 14 regional health authorities;

(2) if he will publish the names of those private contractors for catering, cleaning and laundry services who have been dropped from the approved list of regional health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally.

Office of the Chief Scientist

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received the report of the review, headed by Mr. Tim Nodder, into the work of the Office of the Chief Scientist.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We expect to receive the report shortly.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of redundancy money so far paid out by district health authorities to staff in catering, cleaning and laundry services whose work has been taken over by private contractors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have not collected centrally information about redundancy payments made by health authorities since March 1981, when responsibility for recovering redundancy rebates from the Department of Employment was devolved to health authorities.

Drug Manufacturers (Inducements)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of inducements offered by drugs manufacturers to general practitioners and dispensing doctors on the level of prescribing of particular drugs under the National Health Service; and if he will quantify that cost;

(2) what information he has as to inducements offered by drugs wholesalers and manufacturers; what other methods are used by drugs wholesalers and manufacturers to persuade general practitioners and dispensing doctors to prescribe particular drugs on the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much he estimates drugs manufacturers spend on general practitioners in persuading them to prescribe particular drugs on the National Health Service; and what information he has as to the manner in which such money is spent;

(4) what arrangements he has to claw back excess discounts on National Health Service prescribed drugs received by dispensing doctors; and if he will make a statement;

(5) pursuant to his reply of 19 February, Official Report, column 447, whether there is any evidence to suggest that discounts offered to dispensing doctors by drugs wholesalers and manufacturers result in the unnecessary prescription of particular drugs on the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement;

(6) pursuant to his reply of 19 February, Official Report, column 447, in what manner and by what system dispensing doctors receive additional income from the varying levels of discount on the drug cost offered to them by wholesalers and manufacturers; to whom, and by whom, the discounted price is paid; to whom, and by whom, the full price is paid; and if he will make a statement;

(7) pursuant to his reply of 19 February, Official Report, column 447, whether additional income is received by doctors from the varying levels of dicount on the drug cost offered to them by wholesalers and manufacturers in relation to drugs contained in the provisional limited list which he announced on 8 November 1984; and if he will quantify that income;

(8) pursuant to his reply of 19 February, Official Report, column 447, what is the average amount of additional income which each dispensing doctor receives from the varying levels of discount on the drug cost offered to them by wholesalers and manufacturers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1982, the latest year for which complete returns are available, companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme with sales exceeding £2 million declared sales promotion expenditure amounting to £155 million (UK), not all of which was accepted as an admissable expense in the pricing of NHS medicines. About 46 per cent. was spent on representatives, 21 per cent. on advertising, 11 per cent. on literature and the remainder on administrative and other expenses. The companies also spent some £12 million on "information" items such as data sheets, material for medical symposia and samples. They were not allowed under the scheme to reflect any expenditure on gifts and similar inducements in the prices of NHS medicines and we have no information about expenditure on such matters.

General medical practitioners' remuneration arrangements are designed to pay them on average the net income which the Government (having regard to the Review Body's recommendations) have decided is due to them and the expenses actually incurred providing general medical services. We carried out an inquiry in 1983 which established that dispensing doctors obtained discounts. As the reimbursement which they then received for the cost of the drugs which they dispensed was not adjusted to take account of discounts, a disproportionate share of the expenses incurred by general medical practitioners was paid to dispensing doctors. With the profession's agreement, from 1 July 1984 the reimbursement prices paid to dispensing doctors were adjusted to take some account of the discounts the inquiry had revealed. Discount will be completely offset from 1 April 1985 when the full discount adjustment comes into effect.

No information is available about the discount obtained in relation to specific drugs. We have no evidence to suggest that the availability of discounts results in the unnecessary prescription of any drug.

In 1983-84, the last year before discount was taken into account, it is estimated that dispensing doctors in Great Britain received on average additional income from discounts of about £1,200.

State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the likely sum that would be paid to (a) those on average income, (b) those on three quarters average income and (c) those on half average income, assuming the current level of annual increases in earnings and prices as the state earnings-related pension scheme to those who have remained contracted-in since the scheme started in 1985, 1990, 1995, 2000 and 2010, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Offices, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the possible closure of his Department's offices in Liverpool; how many have been concerned with the office in Parthenon drive; what his reponse has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The only representation we have received about the possible closure of any of the Department's offices in Liverpool is a letter of 14 February from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby. We will reply to the letter on completion of our inquiries.

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his latest estimate for the amounts of money that go unclaimed in (a) supplementary benefit, (b) heating additions, (c) family income supplement, (d) housing benefit, (e) single payments and (f) supplementary pension; and whether he will give estimates for (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales;

(2) what is his latest estimate for the proportion of eligible claimants who do not claim the following benefits (a) supplementary benefit, (b) heating additions, (c) family income supplement, (d) housing benefit, (e) single payments and (f) supplementary pension; and whether he will give estimates for (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that not all the information requested is available. There are no reliable estimates about unclaimed heating additions or single payments. No estimates are available about unclaimed housing benefit: the latest information relates to rent and rate rebates and rent allowances in England and Wales. An estimate of the amount of unclaimed supplementary benefit in Scotland is available, but generally it is only possible to make reliable estimates of take-up of benefits for Great Britain as a whole. The latest information is given in the table.

Year and Benefit	Annual amount of unclaimed benefit £ million	Proportion of eligible claimants not claiming benefit Per cent.
1981
Supplementary benefit	*760	29
1981/82

* includes (i) £50 million in Scotland, and (ii) amount of unclaimed supplementary pension.
† Not known.
‡ in England and Wales.

Heating Allowances

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why £20 million of the money allocated for special heating allowances has not been taken up in Scotland.

Mr. Whitney: Money is not specifically allocated for heating additions payable to people living in Scotland. There are no reliable estimates of the number of people in Scotland who do not get heating additions to which they are entitled. The Government continue to promote take-up of supplementary benefit generally. Claim forms are given to all retirement pensioners and widows and to all unemployed and all sickness benefit claimants. The Department also co-operates as fully as possible at local level with responsible take-up campaigns mounted by local authorities. Staff are trained to be alert to entitlement to heating additions and postal claim forms used by unemployed people have specific questions intended to establish entitlement. Heating additions are also referred to in a number of leaflets published by DHSS, in particular "Help with Heating Costs" (SB17), copies of which are available from local social security offices.

Drug Prescriptions

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish reasoned observations on the current procedures for containing the cost of drug prescriptions in Norway, Australia, Canada and West Germany.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Such matters are the responsibilities of the Governments of the countries concerned.

Social Service Inspectorate

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether agreement has yet been reached on the establishment of a social service inspectorate.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In April 1983, my right hon. Friend, sent to the chairmen of all social services committees a consultative document proposing development of our Department's social work service—which already exercises inspectorial functions—explicitly into an inspectorate for the local authority social services. In the light of a wide range of helpful comments on the consultative document, the Government have now reached agreement in principle with the local authority associations on the way forward. We have agreed the following joint statement on the arrangements now proposed.

"The inspectorate will assist local authorities to obtain value for money through the efficient and economic use of available resources. Its aim will be to help to secure the most effective use of professional and other resources, normally by identifying good practice and spreading knowledge about it.

Inspections will be of 3 main types:—

(a) initiated by Ministers and the Department in exercise of the Secretary of State's formal powers of inspection;

(b) undertaken outside formal powers, related to issues of general concern and covering a number of local authorities, by agreement with the authorities concerned and in accordance with a programme agreed by the local authority associations; and

(c) undertaken outside formal powers, but at the request of, or in agreement with, an individual local authority and in relation to specific services or activities of that authority.

Reports written as a result of formal inspections will be made in the first instance to the Secretary of State, but all other reports will be made concurrently to the authorities concerned for their social services committees to see. Reports will normally be documents of public access.

Formally, the existing statutory powers of inspection (which are considered sufficient for the purposes of the new Inspectorate) are vested in the Secretary of State, and he will be the Minister responsible for the Inspectorate's management and actions. In practice, however, the programme of work of the Inspectorate outside formal powers will be a joint concern of central and local government. This will be reflected in a Steering Group of representatives of the Department and the local authority associations, with the following terms of reference:

"To consider the proposals of the Social Services Inspectorate for inspections of local authority personal social services (other than those to be made under statutory powers, or in relation to specific services or activities of an individual authority at the request of or in agreement with that authority); to agree annually a programme of such inspections; and to review from time to time the scope for future work of the Inspectorate."

The staff of the Social Services inspectorate will consist of members of the existing Social Work Service, supplemented by staff from relevant disciplines on attachment from local authorities and other organisations, including experts in appropriate branches of management and in performance measurement. The Inspectorate will aim to complement, not compete with, the work of the Audit Commission and will continue existing collaboration with Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Schools, the Probation Inspectorate and the Health Advisory Service."

The new inspectorate will come into operation on 1 April 1985. I should like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the help which we have had from the local authority associations in the consideration of these arrangements.

Nurse Practitioners

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list his powers in relation to the operation of nurse practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Nurse practitioner is not a category of health care professional recognised by the National Health Service.

Sister Burke-Masters

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received a request to give Sister Burke-Masters a limited licence to prescribe drugs; if he will take steps to enable her to reopen her surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. We are considering t implications of this request. The provision of nursing ca by Sister Burke-Masters to persons attending the S George's men's care unit is a matter for those responsib for that unit.

Rent and Rate Rebates

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Soci Services if he will estimate the cost to public funds including water rates in the rate rebate scheme.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 10 Decemb 1984, c. 375]: The estimated net benefit cost of includir water rates in the current rate rebate scheme is about £7 million. It has been assumed that water rates would b added to domestic rates for benefit calculation purpose The needs allowances currently include an eleme reflecting 40 per cent. of domestic rates and 100 per cen of domestic water and sewerage charges. It has therefo been assumed that the needs allowances would be reduce to take only 40 per cent. of average water rates in account.

Pensioners

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Soci Services if he will list in the Official Report the numbe of pensioners who have other incomes apart from stat benefit, earned or unearned incomes, within the followin categories: (a) nil, (b) up to £250 per year, (c) up to £50 per year, (d) up to £750 per year, (e) up to £1,000 per yea and (f) up to £1,250 per year.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 11 February 1985 c. 75]: The distribution of the amount of income apa from state social security benefits is shown in the table The estimates are based on family expenditure survey dat for 1981 with the money values uprated by the genera retail price index to December 1984 equivalents. Th estimates include both single and married pensione families but exclude pensioners living in institutions suc as residential homes, or hospitals, and people over pensio age with no state social security benefit.

Notes: * Equivalent benefits are widows' benefit, invalidity benefit, industrial or war disablement benefit and supplementary pension.
† Estimates are rounded to the nearest 50,000; sub-totals do therefore not sum.

UN Decade for Women

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the research he has commissioned on the subject of women's health subsequent to Her Majesty's Government's reply to the United Nations end of decade for women questionnaire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1985, c. 167]: Our Department has commissioned the following research relating to women's health:

Psychological morbidity associated with screening for breast cancer.
An economic evaluation of the early detection of breast cancer.
A study of chlamydia trachomatis in the female genital tract.
An overview of research on the provision and utilisation of the child health services.
An evaluation of respite care for children in England and Wales.
The development of methods of evaluation of the preventative child health services.
A study of the rubella immunisation state of females, especially those first found susceptible during a pregnancy.
Infections in hospital nurses.

A study on attitudes to pregnancy has been extended of a further three years and two other items have been started which are closely related to the health of women:

An assessment of home care of the dying.
A study of patterns of long stay care for people with severe dementia.

However, these studies which we have commissioned are only a small proportion of the total of medical research financed by the Government. The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department of Education and Science, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. Details of its research can be found in the copy of the council's handbook for 1984-85, which is available in the Library of the House.

NHS (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the amount of money he expects to receive from the National Health Service trust funds to pay for administrative costs during 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 588.]: No estimate can be made of the sums involved because these costs have not been consistently identified or recovered to date. This lack of information should be rectified in the future following the issue of a recent health circular, HC(85)6, which requires health authorities to identify and charge to the trust funds any expenses incurred in administering the trusts. This common practice is sanctioned by section 30(2) of the Trustee Act 1925. The costs so charged will be reimbursed to the health authority.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for each of the last five years, how much the Department has spent on maintaining electric-powered wheelchairs for (a) indoor use and (b) outdoor use; and what is the average cost for each type of electric-powered wheelchair;

(2) for each of the last five years, how many people have been issued with electric-powered indoor wheelchairs; how many of these have also been issued with an outdoor attendant-controlled electric wheelchair; and what is the cost of supplying indoor electric-powered wheelchairs;

(3) for each of the last five years (a) how much has been spent on the wheelchair services, (b) how many attendant-controlled electric powered wheelchairs have been (i) issued and (ii) bought as new by his Department and (c) what is the cost of providing attendant-controlled electric-powered wheelchairs;

(4) for each of the last five years how many people have applied for (a) an indoor electric-powered wheelchair and (b) an outdoor electric-powered wheelchair and had their application refused in each case;

(5) how many representations he has received on the need to provide occupant-controlled electric-powered wheelchairs that have either indoor and outdoor use or outdoor use only.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 588.]: The following information relates to the provision of wheelchairs through artificial limb and appliance centres in England.

Annual expenditure on the wheelchair service, excluding service on-costs and not adjusted for inflation, was:

	£ million
1979-80	13·42
1980-81	18·27
1981-82	18·28
1982-83	20·07
1983-84	21·90

Expenditure in 1983-84 costed on a commercial basis to include service on-costs was £32·25 million.

The following table summarises the information requested on electric-powered indoor wheelchairs:

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Number issued†	3,010	3,723	4,130	4,982	5,322

Average cost of maintenance per wheelchair on issue* (£)	94·70	167·60	168·70	223·40	237·50

The following table summarises the information requested on electric outdoor attendant controlled wheelchairs:

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-8
Number issued†	3,709	3,732	4,015	4,166	4,84
Number bought as new	956	478	60	Nil	N
Total cost of purchases* (£ million)	0·48	0·24	0·03	Nil	N
Total cost of maintenance * (£ million)	0·48	0·58	0·59	0·74	0·9
Average cost of maintenance per wheelchair on issue* (£)	54·20	76·20	76·70	101·80	125·9

* Excludes service on-costs. Costs not adjusted for inflation.
† Includes issues from stock.

The full cost of supplying a wheelchair of a particular kind cannot at present be isolated.

Figures relating to the dual provision of electric indoor wheelchairs and electric attendant-controlled outdoor wheelchairs could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Figures relating to the number of people found ineligible for either type of powered wheelchair are not available.

We have received over 40 separate representations about the provision of occupant-controlled powered indoor/outdoor and/or powered outdoor wheelchairs, including a petition signed by over 7,000 people, in the last six months.

DEFENCE

Departmental Reorganisation

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the outcome of the reorganisation of his Department which took place in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The new organisation has not yet been in operation for two months; it is therefore too early to draw firm conclusions as to its success, but experience so far gives every ground for optimism.

China

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet his counterpart in the Government of the People's Republic of China to discuss military co-operation.

Mr. Heseltine: I have nothing to add to my reply to my hon. Friend's question on 29 January at column 155.

Falkland Islands

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is likely to be possible to provide a television service for the Falkland Islands garrison.

Mr. Stanley: I am glad to announce that we have authorised the provision of a TV service operating from the Mount Pleasant airfield site in the Falkland Islands. Orders for the necessary equipment have already been placed by the Services Sound and Vision Corporation and it is planned to bring the service into operation in mid-1986. The service will be a blend of taped current BBC and ITV programmes.

I am sure that this will be a very welcome addition to the recreational facilities available to those members of the armed forces serving in the Falklands.

Information Technology Systems (Director-General)

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State fo Defence what are the terms of reference for th appointment of the director-general of Informatio Technology Systems, the salary range, job specificatio and level of appointment within the Civil Service.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence is looking fo candidates to fill an important new post to lead and co ordinate the development of a corporate strategy fo information technology in the Department and throughou the armed forces. Candidates are being sought from bot the public sector and, with the help of an executive searc firm, the private sector. The post will be at the level o grade 3 (under-secretary) at a salary of £30,800 p including London weighting. I have placed a copy of th full job specification in the Library.

Weather Forecasts

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Defenc what representations he has received regarding th accuracy of weather forecasts in recent months; and if h will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: One formal representation has been received The ability of the Meteorological Office to provide a good indication of the changes in the character of th weather for periods up to six days has improved markedl in recent years as a result of the continuing developmen of numerical methods of weather prediction that exploi the capabilities of the most advanced computers and th weather observations made from satellites. Work currentl in progress at the Meteorological Office is expected t allow greater detail to be provided with greater accuracy on a more local basis in the short period weather forecasts.

Clean Industrial Services Ltd.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State fo Defence whether Clean Industrial has consulted him ove its policy of dismissing cleaners engaged at hi Department's buildings.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Cleaners (Security Clearance)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State fo Defence if his Department has refused security clearance to any cleaners employed in his Department's buildings.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Beryllium Leak (ROF, Cardiff)

Mr. Allan Rogers asked the Secretary of State fo Defence if he will make a statement on the Beryllium dus leak at the royal ordnance factory, Cardiff.

Mr. Lee: There has been no leak of Beryllium from the royal ordnance factory, Cardiff, into the outside environment. However, routine monitoring in a Beryllium workshop revealed that higher than normal levels of airborne Beryllium were present in a small area of the facility on 26 January and some parts of the working area were found to be contaminated by Beryllium powder. Immediate corrective action was taken. The Beryllium facility was closed to normal operations while investigation and decontamination were put in hand. No member of staff has shown symptoms of any harmful effects.

Beryllium is a non-radioactive but toxic material. It is used by ROF Cardiff under procedures designed to ensure that no one is exposed to dangerous levels of Beryllium powder. These procedures reflect the advice of the Health and Safety Executive as well as the Ministry's own expertise in handling the material. The area affected is within a purpose-built, self-contained facility so designed and constructed that it is kept under negative air pressure to prevent leakage to the outside environment. Air is exhausted from the building only after passing through banks of filters. The output is monitored and results for the period in question were not abnormal and were within normal limits. Neither on this nor on any other occasion has Beryllium been emitted to the outside environment in excess of permitted levels.

RAF Fairford

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the role in NATO of the tanker aircraft based at RAF Fairford;

(2) whether the United States tanker aircraft based at RAF Fairford have any role outside NATO;

(3) what is the NATO command to which the United States tanker aircraft based at Fairford are assigned and under which they carry out NATO exercises.

Mr. Lee: The KC135 tanker aircraft based at RAF Fairford support NATO forces within Europe, but formally remain part of the United States Strategic Air Command. Subject to the normal process of consultation, any role they might have in support of United States requirements outside the NATO area is a matter for the United States Government.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether United States B-52 aircraft capable of firing air-launched cruise missiles have visited RAF Fairford.

Mr. Lee: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 18 June 1984.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the $7·4 million to be spent by the United States Air Force on a dental clinic at RAF Fairford will be spent in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: The Property Services Agency is managing the design and future construction of a medical/dental clinic at RAF Fairford, and will be following normal Her Majesty's Government tendering and contractual procedures. It is too early to say which contracts, if any, will be placed with United Kingdom firms.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria were used to choose RAF Fairford as the site for the bi-annual air fare and display.

Mr. Lee: Now that Greenham common has become fully operational it can no longer offer accommodation on base to support the international air tattoo. It was therefore agree that the 1985 tattoo should be held at RAF Fairford, which has both the necessary facilities and a level of operational activity more compatible with the activities of the tattoo. The RAF benevolent fund has not yet made any proposals for tattoos beyond 1985.

Fairford Air Display

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any nation will be refused permission to display military equipment at the Fairford air display because of its record on human rights.

Mr. Lee: Participation in the 1985 international air tattoo at RAF Fairford is a matter for the organisers of the event.

Wintex 85 and Operation Brave Defender

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether members of the United States of America National Guard will take part in Wintex 85 and Operation Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: Members of the US National Guard will not take part in Exercise Brave Defender, nor in that part of Wintex-Cimex 85 which is played in the United Kingdom.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give his latest estimate of the total cost of Exercise Brave Defender.

Mr. Stanley: Those additional defence costs which are directly attributable to the exercise, and these exclude such items as normal pay and allowances, are currently estimated to amount to some £3 million.

Nuclear Weapon Capability

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements Her Majesty's Government intend to make to ensure the maintenance of their nuclear weapon capability when all nuclear weapon testing is banned by international agreement.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the answer by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Butler) on 6 February 1985 at column 593.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Production (Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing all expenditure from public funds on agriculture, including the cost of administration, which is not covered by table 29 of the annual review White Paper (Cmnd. 9423); and if he will identify separately the principal items.

Mr. Jopling: The main categories of expenditure on agriculture are set out in the Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88 (Cmnd. 9428 Part 3 Programme 3) published on 22 January. Details of expenditure on individual schemes and services, and costs of administration, are contained in the annual Supply Estimates and Appropriation Accounts.

EC (Dairy Quotas)

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made since November 1984 in the implementation of dairy quotas by member states of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Payments of the first instalments of supplementary levy were due to be made on 15 November 1984. It became clear, however, that certain member states were not yet ready to charge the levy and as a result the Commission deferred the first collection date for one month. At the December meeting of the Agriculture Council nine member states (with Denmark abstaining) adopted a statement noting that there were still technical and administrative difficulties concerning the application of the system in certain member states and inviting the Commission to allow postponement of the first payment of levy until the end of the marketing year.

The Commission did not make any proposals to this effect. The United Kingdom and certain other member states therefore decided to suspend action on the collection of the levy until all member states were conforming to the requirements and collection could proceed in parallel. The Commission withheld from the December advances to member states for agricultural expenditure amounts equivalent to their estimated levy liability. They also withheld 12½ per cent. of milk sector advances in January for those member states which had failed to collect levy due in December and, in addition, issued letters initiating infringement proceedings against those member states. The Commission have also initiated infringement proceedings against Italy for her failure to make the required implementing arrangements and against Denmark concerning its arrangements for operating the supplementary levy through a single purchasing agency for milk.

At the January meeting of the Agriculture Council, the Commissioner presented a package of proposals for amendments to the supplementary levy which was designed to overcome some of the problems experienced by member states in implementing the quota system. These included, inter alia, proposals which would permit greater flexibility between direct sales and wholesale quotas and a proposal which, for 1984-85 would permit transfer of unused quota between regions and thereby reduce the amounts of levy due. These proposals were debated in the House on Wednesday 20 February and are due to be considered by the Agriculture Council on 25-26 February. The Commission has also provided for a delay of 20 days in collection of the levy for the third quarter which was due in mid-February.

The Government remain fully committed to the supplementary levy arrangements. We welcome the Commission's proposals which will help member states to overcome various difficulties in implementing the levy and permit some easing of its impact in the first year. We shall, however, continue to insist, as we have done from the outset, that the levy must be fully and effectively implemented by all member states.

Horticultural Production

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Ministe Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will pu in the Official Report a table showing the growth volume of production since 1980 in the case of veget fruit and non-edible horticultural products, respecti

Green Pound

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Ministe Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will pu in the Official Report a table showing each change i level of the green pound since 1 January 1973, increase in common agricultural policy prices at the a price fixing, and each change in the reference price o agricultural unit of account against the market rate o European unit of account-European currency unit.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Her (Mr. Shepherd) on 28 March 1984 at column 22 changes to the green pound and to the hon. Membe Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) o February 1985 at columns 65-68 on changes to prices. As I told the hon. Member in my reply o February 1985 at column 583 information on each ch in the market value of the European currency unit ag the relevant agricultural accounting unit is not re available and could only be produced at disproportio cost.

Agricultural Wages

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will pu in the Official Report a table showing for the years to 1984 the earnings index for the agricultural wo covered by table 21 of Cmnd. 9423, deflated by the ch in the taxes and prices index plus the change in nati insurance contributions; and if he will also provid index for the hourly as well as weekly earnings toge with figures showing the change in output per head.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested on earnings of agricultural workers in the United Kingdo shown in the table. An index of labour productivitiy b on gross product at constant prices per whole- equivalent worker appears at table 24 of the An Review of Agriculture 1984 (Cmnd. 9423). meaningful attribution of productivity amongst diffe sectors of the labour force can be made.

(c) Deflated by the retail price index.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is carrying out or is aware of, apart from the Boxworth experiment, into the effects of pesticides on (a) moths and butterflies, (b) flowering plants, (c) birds and (d) beneficial insects that may be exposed to pesticides in hedgerows or other habitats contaminated by spray or vapour drift.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 580]: A great deal of relevant research, in particular surveillance, is summarised in a paper, published in 1983, entitled The Environmental Cost of Pesticide Usage in the United Kingdom. Much of this work is still continuing. I am placing copies in the Library of the House.

Additionally, the Agriculture and Food Research Council's weed research organisation is studying the effects of pesticides and cultural techniques on the flora of field boundaries and is investigating the susceptibility of a range of flowering plants to herbicides. The Game Conservancy is investigating the effects of pesticides on beneficial insects and birds and the environmental value of unsprayed headlands in cereal crops.

My Department is investigating the effects of pesticides on bird behaviour and is funding a field study of the effects of insecticide use in forestry on bird populations. Agrochemical companies do a considerable amount of work on the effects of their products on beneficial insects in cereals and other crops. Certain universities also contribute to the work on beneficial insects.

WALES

Milk Quotas

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that official figures are available by county of the allocation of both primary quotas and secondary quotas, and the transfer of quotas, and to inform farmers who may be involved in his quota schemes that information concerning their individual allocation may be used in this manner, or published in a way which could identify individual farm statistics.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Details of quota allocations and transfers are contained in a register maintained by the milk marketing boards. Access to this information is limited to people with an interest in the holding. It may be possible, in due course, to publish a geographical breakdown depending upon the limits of confidentiality and cost.

Oxygen Concentrators

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress on the inroduction of oxygen concentrators in the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Arrangements are being made to provide oxygen concentrators in place of cylinders for patients requiring large quantities of oxygen. It is anticipated that concentrators will be available on the prescription of general medical practitioners by mid to late summer.

M4 (Damage)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the damage to the eastern lane of the M4 caused by heavy lorries carrying coal and iron ore to Llanwern since 6 March 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Evidence of a deterioration in the state of the carriageway pavements along the M4 affected by the lorry convoys between Port Talbot and Llanwern was discerned before this additional traffic occurred. Any increase in traffic, particularly heavy goods vehicles, reduces the life of the carriageway pavement but it is not possible to isolate the effect of any particular group of vehicles.

Road Construction (EC Funds)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether any funds allocated under the EEC regional fund for the construction of roads in Wales have been or are to be lost as a result of the decisions made by his Department not to meet any share of the capital expenditure necessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: I assume the hon. Gentleman's question relates to the revised capital allocation and transport supplementary grant arrangements inroduced in 1985-86, under which transport supplementary grant is payable only on schemes with a capital cost of £5 million or more. These arrangements will have no effect whatsoever on a local highway authority's eligibility for European regional development fund grant.

Intex 85

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what contribution his Department will make to the exercise Intex 85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: None.

Hospital and Community Health Services (Resources)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached decisions about the allocation of resources for hospital and community health services in Wales in 1985-86.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Yes. I will provide a cash increase over provision in 1984-85 of 6·3 per cent. This cash increase includes an allowance of 4 per cent. for price movements and 3 per cent. for pay. The balance over and above these allowances represents growth of 3·1 per cent. which is £19·1 million in cash terms. This is on top of the recurring revenue growth provided for health authorities in Wales of 12·8 per cent. comparing 1979-80 with the resources available in the current year.

Of the £19·1 million growth moneys, £13·044 million will be devoted to centrally funded developments. These include some £9 million for the commissioning of major hospital developments at Bridgend, Morriston and Wrexham; over £2 million for further development in regional services, including the new renal dialysis facilities in Swansea, Carmarthen and Bangor and the continuing expansion of the bone marrow transplantation programme; nearly £800,000 for continued consultant expansion in shortage specialties, and £1·5 million to develop for the services for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people and to combat the misuse of drugs.

The balance of £6·057 million (or 1 per cent.) will be made available to health authorities for discretionary use, on the basis of a minimum of 0·75 per cent. discretionary growth for all authorities with the balance of 0·25 per cent. allocated to those authorities indicated by the revenue allocation formula to be relatively underfunded. There is to be a major review of the formula in the current year to form the basis for allocations in 1986-87 and, against this background, I regard the proposed level of provision for revenue equalisation as appropriate towards my programme to remove the major inequalities in the relative funding of authorities.

The revenue resources available for individual authorities in 1985-86 will be as shown in the table. These allocations do not take into account further sums which will be made available following decisions on centrally funded developments for the coming year. These will be announced shortly.

I am glad that we have been able to make available these additional resources for the NHS in Wales. This demonstrates yet again this Government's commitment to a developing NHS which meets the needs of the people of Wales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Apiculture

Mr. Murphy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy towards apiculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government's policy towards apiculture is aimed at maintaining the health of the bee population. To meet this objective the Government provide a wide range of assistance to bee-keepers on disease and other matters and operate health controls on imports.

Agricultural Production (Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report the total spent in the United Kingdom under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guidance section of the European Economic Community budget in 1983 and in 1984; and if he will give particulars of the amounts spent on (a) limiting production and (b) increasing production.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 584]: Total payments in the United Kingdom from the guidance section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund in 1983 and 1984 were £88·2 million and £68·1 million, respectively. The only Community scheme operated in this country which is specifically intended to limit production is the non-marketing of milk premium scheme. EAGGF expenditure in the United Kingdom on this scheme in 1983 and 1984 was £14·4 million and £12·9 million, respectively, of which 40 per cent. was funded from the guidance section. The Community's agricultural structures policy is directed not to increasing production but to assisting the modernisation of farms, the continuation of farming in less-favoured areas and the improvement of marketing and processing of agricultural products.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the agricultural products regulated under the common agricultural policy the amount of levy payable in the United Kingdom on importation from third countries, the amount of customs duty, the intervention or th price, the target price and the United Kingdom price and the world price.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 21 F 1985, c. 583]: Detailed information about interv threshold and target prices was set out in table 2 right hon. Friend's reply of 4 December 1984 at 105. Full information about customs duties is conta the United Kingdom "Tariff and Overseas Classification," a copy of which is in the Library House. The remainder of the information requeste out for the main products in tables 1 and 2. The prices" shown in table 1 are generally the lowe prices at the Community frontier underlyi commission's calculaton of the variable import le remind the hon. Member that these are the lowes recorded and it is highly likely that on average prices would have to be paid if larger quantities be purchased on world markets. The "world prices" do not necessarily relate to the same quality or prese of product for which United Kingdom market pri set out in table 2.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Local Authorities (Emergency Planning)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available information and guidance on the likely scenarios involving conventional attack and nuclear attack, respectively, in order that local authorities may fully investigate the potential conflict in terms of emergency planning, referred to in ES1/1984 "Planning Assumptions."

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is no conflict between the planning functions for conventional and nuclear war that can be resolved by further guidance. The circular merely points out that, in dealing with the effects of conventional war, civil defence organisers "would also be concerned with preparations against the possibility of nuclear attack, and this could impose an additional and sometimes conflicting burden".

Any such conflicts could be resolved only by those directly concerned in the light of local circumstances.

Nuclear Attack

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available information on the likely scale of a nuclear attack on the United Kingdom; and whether previous estimates of 200 megatons are still used as a guideline.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As I said in a reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 6 December at columns 279-80, it is impossible to predict with any certainty the size of a nuclear attack, the targets it would include, or its effects. They would depend on the political and strategic intentions of an enemy at the time. The Government's policy of deterrence aims to prevent an attack of any sort happening.

Concessionary Television Licence

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will set out, for the last year for which figures are available (a) the total sum collected in England and Wales from the 5p concessionary television licence and (b) the estimated cost of this collection in salaries, overheads, postage and so on to his Department;

(2) if he will give the total number of man-days expended in his Department on the collection and handling of the 5p concessionary television licence, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We estimate that the total cost of administering the concessionary licence scheme in 1984 was about £155,000 and the revenue from fees was some £29,000. About 3,300 man-days were spent on this work at the national TV licence records office and in the Department.

Police (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the annual pay increments which have been allocated rank by rank to police officers in each year since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Following are the salary scales:

Racial Harassment

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to raise the level of publicity in respect of the prevention of racial harassment in conjunction with the Greater London council and the Metropolitan police in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We will continue to take every opportunity to express publicly the Government's concern about racial harassment, and the need for all concerned to co-operate to reduce this evil. We particularly welcome the recent announcement by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that effective action against racial attacks is to be one of six operational priorities for 1985.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to establish special advisory centres in the inner and east London areas for citizens from ethnic minority groups who are the victims of racial assaults.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Advisory centres of this kind are most likely to be effective when organised locally to meet local needs. I understand that there already exists in inner and east London victim support schemes, law centres, citizens advice bureaux and local community groups to which the victims of crime can turn to for assistance.

Communicntions (Surveillance)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether his current arrangements for interception of communications extend to the surveillance of data stored on, and transmitted to and from, computers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list his powers to authorise the surveillance of data bases and communications other than via the post and telephone communications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: My powers to authorise under warrant the interception of communications extend only to the postal and public telecommunications systems, but cover any form of communication in those systems, including the transmission through them of computer data. I have no such powers to authorise access to data stored on computers or to other forms of data base.

Syrian Embassy Officials (Car Bomb Deaths)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any person or persons was ever charged in relation to the death by a car bomb in London of two Syrian embassy officials on 31 December 1977; and whether Metropolitan police inquiries into those deaths have been concluded.

Mr. Brittan: Police inquiries into this incident have been concluded. There have been no charges. No third party is thought to have been involved in this incident.

Intex 85

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will explain the purpose of the exercise Intex 85 and its relationship to Wintex-Cimex 85.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Intex 85 is an international exercise intended primarily for national warning and monitoring organisations. There is no connection with Wintex-Cimex 85.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner Cities

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals the Government have to improve the co-ordination and effectiveness of their programmes for the inner city areas; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Government are making a very substantial contribution to help improve economic and social conditions in deprived urban areas. They are determined to improve both the cost-effectiveness of the various departmental spending programmes and the co-ordination of Departments' efforts. Therefore, the Government are setting up five teams to be called city action teams which will comprise the regional directors of the Departments of Environment and Trade and Industry, and Employment-Manpower Services Commission. One team will serve the three London inner city partnership areas (Hackney, Islington and Lambeth) and there will be separate teams for the partnership areas of Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester-Salford, and Newcastle-Gateshead.

The three Departments will share the leadership of the teams to reflect the joint commitment of Departments to improve the delivery of urban policy. The Department of the Environment will lead two of the teams, the Department of Trade and Industry two and Employment-MSC one. The extension of the teams' work to other urban areas will be considered as experience develops. Further details of the teams and their leadership will be announced shortly.

The task of each team will be to secure improved co-operation between Departments in developing and implementing their policies and programmes reflecting the local circumstances in the partnership areas. They will work closely with the local authorities and the private and voluntary sectors. They will build on and strengthen the existing working arrangements, for example between Government Departments and the local authorities through present partnership links. Within the framework of departmental policies the teams will establish priorities relevant to the needs of each area; they will establish joint arrangements for co-ordinating departmental programmes; they will monitor systematically the output from local programmes and projects; they will develop opportunities for joint funding between departmental programmes; and they will provide a point of contact for external sources of finance.

The scale of existing financial resources being provided for the partnership areas through many Government programmes is substantial in recognition of the many special problems which they face as a result of long-term structural, economic and social change. In 1984-85 the partnership areas are expected to receive over £130 million through the urban programme; the MSC expects to spend of the order of £100 million on employment and training measures; and DTI expects to spend some £35 million on assistance to industry. The review of the regional policy map last November brought two more partnership areas within the scope of regional assistance to industry. These resources, and the measures announced today, will help to ensure maximum opportunity for all concerned to release the skills, energy and physical resources in our cities.

Complementary to the initiative for city action teams, but serving a separately defined purpose, I propose to establish a new unit within my Department to be called the Urban Housing Renewal Unit and be headed by an assistant secretary. Its task will be to advise local authorities on ways of promoting on council estates a greater degree of private investment, a wider variety of tenure and more effective and efficient management. For this purpose it will draw on the expertise of the priority estates project and of the Department's housing services adviser and will bring in expertise from the private sector. Its activities will not be restricted to the partnership areas.

Domestic Rate Revaluation

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue the consultation paper on domestic rate revaluation proposed in Cmnd. 9008.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government on 28 November, at column 506.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will disregard local authority money devoted to meeting the costs of children's school meals and housing benefits awarded to families in regions affected by the coal dispute when calculating penalty levels for overspending.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend will consider the representations to this effect which he has received.

Thames Water Authority (Chairman)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he was aware of the prior interest of the present chairman of the Thames water authority in the Perry Oaks sludge works when he appointed him as chairman of the authority.

Mr. Gow: The chairman of the Thames water authority had no interest in the Perry Oaks sludge treatment works before his present appointment.

Water Authorities (Chairmen)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guideline he uses in choosing chairmen of water authorities; and whether candidates can be excluded from consideration by virtue of policies towards property of those authorities held by applicants in previous roles.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friend appoints chairmen who possess the personal and professional qualities which will enable them to lead successfully an executive board of a major commercial enterprise in the public sector.

Water Metering (Advisory Committee)

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what terms of reference he has given to the advisory committee on universal water metering.

Mr. Gow: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave my hon Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) on 19 November 1984, at column 31.

Mr. Kenneth Highfield (Appeal)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the appeal lodged by Mr. Kenneth Highfield of Anchor House, Stafford Street, Stone, Staffordshire, against the decision by the Stafford borough council, application No. 16777 of 12 December 1984 in respect of signs to be erected at Anchor House, 19 Stafford Street, Stone, will be heard.

Mr. MacFarlane: There is not expected to be a hearing for this appeal, because Mr. Highfield's agent has asked for it to be decided by means of written representations and an inspection of the site. As soon as the parties have completed their respective representations, the site inspection will take place, and my right hon. Friend's decision will be issued as quickly as possible.

Rent Act 1977

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Pocock v. Steel, he proposes to seek to amend the wording of case 11 of schedule 15 to the Rent Act 1977, to enable householders who have let their homes whilst living abroad on business to recover possession on their return to the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on Wednesday 20 February, at column 489.

Capital Allocations (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the capital allocations for the city of Manchester for the four main expenditure blocks, education, housing (housing investment programme), social services and the other services blocks for 1985-86 compare, in money and real terms, with those for 1984-85; and if he will give the percentage change in value in each case.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is as follows:

City of Manchester: capital allocations

	1984-85 £000	1985-86 £000	Per cent. change in money terms	Per cent. change in real terms*
Education	6,997	7,450	+6·5	+1·9
Housing	40,499	36,050	−11·0	−14·8
Personal Social Services	1,163	371	−68·1	−69·5
Other services	2,930	2,344	−20·0	−23·4
Total	51,589	46,215	−10·4	−14·3

* The changes in real terms assume a 4½ per cent. increase in the GDP deflator in 1985-86 (as stated in the 1984 Autumn Statement).

The allocations for 1985-86 will be increased by 5 per cent. across all service blocks if the city of Manchester complies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's request for restraint on capital expenditure in 1984-85.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any studies have been brought to his attention which indicate that fluoride when added to the water supplies has a corrosive or degenerative effect on the vessels through which it passes.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. Fluoridation schemes have been in operation in various parts of the country for up to 30 years and there is no evidence that the addition of fluoride at a concentration of one part per million has had any effect on the corrosive properties of the water. An American water works association manual on fluoridation states that there has been no reported instance of pipeline corrosion in the United States traceable to the fluoride content of water.

Housing (Statistics)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of the number and percentage of houses in Coventry, the west midlands and nationally which require repairs costing more than £2,500;

(2) what is his estimate of the number and percentage of houses in Coventry, the west midlands and nationally which (a) lack basic amenities, such as hot and cold running water, (b) suffer from dampness, (c) suffer from poor drainage, and (d) suffer from inadequate daylight.

Sir George Young: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Local authorities' 1984 housing investment programme returns included, for 1 April, their estimates of defective dwellings in their areas: the figures provided by Coventry and estimates for the West Midlands region and for England, including allowance for any missing returns, are as follows:

	Coventry	West Midlands region	England
Substandard dwellings:
unfit;	918	98,900	594,000
fit but lacking one or more basic amenities	5,879	78,900	637,000
Non-substandard dwellings in need of renovation†	14,091	275,500	2,282,000

* A dwelling is deemed to be unfit if it is not reasonably suitable for occupation because it is so far defective in one or more specified matters which include repair, freedom from damp, natural lighting and drainage and sanitary conveniences.

† Requiring repairs of more than £3,000 (£4,200 in Greater London) at 1984 prices.

Numbers reported by local authorities are not necessary comparable, as their criteria differ and in total they are not consistent with estimates from the English house condition survey of 1981.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Leeward Islands Air Transport

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he asked the European Commission to give its reasons for rejecting the request of Leeward Islands Air Transport for support in purchasing Super 748s; when he expects to receive a reply; if he will ask the European Court to examine the Commission's reasons for its decision; and if he will publish the Commission's reply in the Official Report.

Mr. Raison: Our permanent representative to the European Communities wrote to the Commission on 20 December. The Commission replied on 22 February, and we are now considering what further steps we might take. The text of its reply is as follows:

"Dear Sir Michael,

Thank you for your letter of 20 December 1984 in which you raise the question of the selection of replacement aircraft for LIAT under the EDF financed project.

I entirely share your view as regards the importance of maintaining harmonious relations between the Community and the Caribbean States on the eve of the Lomé III programming exercise. It is precisely for this reason that in recent months the Commission has gone to great lengths to explain its position, and the reasons for this position, through meetings with LIAT/CDB, press conferences and press releases.

The Commission's conclusions are based on a series of economic and financial analyses carried out by its services, assisted by independent experts. The technical aspects of the project, in particular the question of the possible risks of new technology, have been subject to similar in-depth examination. In connection with the meetings between LIAT/CDB and the Commission services, hearings were arranged with the British and French manufacturers.

The rules and principles, as laid down in the Lomé Convention, which have governed the Commission's handling of the LIAT project, are identical to those applied to other EDF projects in the past. Strict adherence to these rules has made it possible for the Commission to maintain a high degree of objectivity and integrity even in complicated and difficult cases, and in the face of pressure from private and public quarters.

The disparity to which you refer between the Commission's conclusions and those of LIAT/CDB are to be attributed to the fact that a scrupulous examination of the LIAT/CDB figures, calculations and assumptions, carried out by the Commission services and its experts, revealed errors and discrepancies which generally favoured BA 748s. I would, however, like to point out that even when applying a number of decisive assumptions (e.g. the anticipated rate of increase in the number of passengers), which are considered by the Commission services to be unrealistic, the French/Italian ATR 42 emerged as the economically most advantageous choice, albeit with a smaller margin. When applying more realistic assumptions, the advantage of the ATR 42 became pronounced.

The LIAT case is not the only one in which the Commission's conclusions differ from those of the recipient country or regional organisation. You will recall the Amarti Diversion project in Ethiopia, when the Commission, contrary to the initial opinion of the recipient government, maintained that the offer made by the British contractor was the economically most advantageous solution.

I think you will agree that any deviation from the rules and procedures applied by the Commission in such cases would constitute a serious risk of damaging the credibility of the Commission and expose it to severe criticism from the Community and its ACP partners."

Save the Children Fund

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list Her Majesty's Government's contributions to the funding of the Save the Children Fund in each of the last six years to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Raison: The following Government Departments have made contributions to the Save the Children Fund over the past six years.

The Overseas Development Administration, for specific overseas projects and for refugee and disaster relief:

1978-79	170,000
1979-80	320,000
1980-81	420,000
1981-82	420,000
1982-83	650,000
1983-84	1,000,000

The Department of Health and Social Security, for a variety of projects in England:

1979-80	43,125
1980-81	91,250
1981-82	269,625
1982-83	164,900
1983-84	346,306

The Home Office, towards the cost of receiving Vietnamese refugees: £1,608,232 between July 1979 and June 1982.

The following Government Departments in Northern Ireland—Department of Education, the Department of Health and Social Security, the Department of Economic Development and the Northern Ireland Office.

For the work of the Save the Children Fund in Northern Ireland:

1979-80	31,246
1980-81	31,900
1981-82	59,769
1982-83	70,698
1983-84	187,810

The Scottish Education Department, Social Work Services Group—for the work of Save the Children Fund in Scotland:

1979-80	231
1980-81	324
1981-82	234

SCOTLAND

Hypothermia

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State fo Scotland how many people died from hypothermia i Scotland in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The provisional figure for death in Scotland in 1984 with any mention of hypothermia a a cause is 174. There were 51 deaths in which hypothermi was the underlying cause; in the remaining 123 cases hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate bu was not considered to be the underlying cause of death.

Pharmacists (Drugs)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotlan what consultation procedures he proposes to have wit retail pharmacists in Scotland over their curren stockholdings of drugs which will no longer be availabl on the National Health Service.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall be meeting representative of pharmacists in Scotland on Wednesday 27 February fo further discussions on the implications of limiting th range of products available under the NHS.

Schools (Micro-computers)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State fo Scotland if he has any plans to revoke the decision t exclude special schools from his scheme to introduce micro-computers into schools.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

The only direct financial support provided by centra Government to help schools buy micro-computers has been provided through three schemes run by the Department of Trade and Industry, the last of which finished in December 1984. Special schools were eligible to apply for support under all these schemes, on the same basis as any other school, and many have done so. There is no question, therefore, of special schools being excluded from Government support.

In addition, an extensive pack of software, designed fo use in special education, is being made available free of charge to local education authorities throughout the United Kingdom for distribution to special schools and units. This pack is being provided by joint funding arrangements between my Department and the United Kingdom education departments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

MBFR Talks

67. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 20 February at column 475 to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman).

El Salvador (Personnel Training)

68. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has offered to the Government of El Salvador for the training of military personnel.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) on 15 February at column 302.

Arms Exports

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will restrict the value of United Kingdom arms exports to the Third world to below the level of United Kingdom development assistance to the Third world.

Mr. Luce: There is no link between arms exports and levels of development assistance.

All arms sales are subject to export licence control. It would not be sensible to deny to our customers the arms they judge necessary to be able to defend themselves. They are sovereign states with the right of self defence under article 51 of the UN charter and the right to decide their own expenditure priorities.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on international negotiations to limit the supply of arms to the Third world.

Mr. Luce: We support the conclusions of the United Nations study on all aspects of the conventional arms race and conventional disarmament. The study proposed that "major suppliers and recipients engage in consultations to explore possible bases for reaching agreements to restrain the transfer of arms;"

and that

"any such arrangement would need to be accompanied by wider supplier/recipient negotiations, perhaps on a regional basis."

Arms Transfers

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international negotiations on conventional arms transfers have taken place in the past decade; and with what results.

Mr. Luce: In 1977 and 1978 conventional arms transfer talks were held between the United States and the Soviet Union, without a successful outcome. In 1981 the United Nations General Assembly mandated a group of experts to study, on behalf of the United Nations Secretary-General,

"All aspects of the Conventional Arms Race and Conventional Disarmament."

A United Kingdom expert participated in this study.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the members of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council and of its subsidiary bodies; whether they receive any remuneration for these duties; and what qualifications they have for being appointed to this body or its subsidiaries.

Mr. Renton: The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council was established to provide a flexible framework for meetings at Prime Ministerial, Ministerial and official level. The steering committee and the co-ordinating committee of the council are chaired by senior United Kingdom officials and their counterparts in the Republic of Ireland. The council is not permanently staffed but draws on the expertise of officials as appropriate to the subjects under discussion. As these discussions form part of their duties officials receive no additional remuneration.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the recent meetings between members of his Department and the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Ireland within the framework of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council.

Mr. Renton: Officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office attended the last meeting of the co-ordinating committee of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council which took place on 14 September 1984 at which officials from the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Irish Republic were also present. Discussions at the meeting mainly concerned preparations for the Anglo-Irish summit which was held on 19 November 1984. There are regular meetings between officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth office and those of the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Irish Republic on a wide range of matters of mutual concern.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Scientific Research

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to achieve the Government's general aim to maintain and enhance the quality of public funded scientific research and its appropriateness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend intends to achieve the Government's general aim to maintain and enhance the quality of public-funded scientific research and its appropriateness by:

greater concentration and selectivity of research activities better management, yielding greater value for money increased flexibility, enabling faster response to new scientific opportunities closer and better working with industry.

The Government's expenditure plans, as set out in Cmnd. 9428, provide for additional provision of £18 million over the next three years to re-equip selected university research departments to the highest standards. The plans also provide for an additional £27 million for the research councils and other science Vote-funded bodies to help to increase their flexibility; and to allow them to finance more top quality research proposals and to acquire and exploit more fully major equipment and facilities. The research councils have agreed to prepare corporate plans this year which will involve systematic review of their priorities, programmes and management. I am having regular meetings with the heads of the research councils individually to discuss these plans; measures to secure better value for money and the operation of the peer review system. My right hon. Friend is trying to bring the research laboratory and industry closer together encouraging academic researchers to undertake contract work for industry and by giving them greater incentive to exploit the commercial potential of their inventions.

Human Embryos (Research)

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which headings on pages 88 and 89 of the 1983-84 annual report of the Medical Research Council relate to or involve (1) research upon human embryos, (2) research into genetic disorders of (i) human beings, (ii) animals, (3) research into genetic manipulation of (iii) human beings, (iv) animals and (4) research into (a) the prevention, (b) the detection and (c) the cure of (x) infertility of male human beings and also of female human beings and (y) congenital defects of human beings, (5) research upon human embryos for the purposes of each of the matters set out in (4) above and (6) research other than on human embryos for the purposes of each of the matters set out in (4) above; and if he will specify each such heading, provide a comprehensive breakdown of the expenditure incurred by the Medical Research Council in respect of (1) to (5) above and of the research involved and how it has been incurred and to whom such payments have been made.

Mr. Brooke: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Many details of research supported by the Medical Research Council are contained in the council's handbook for 1984-85, copies of which are in the Library.

Further Education (Local Authority Expenditure)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the level of local authority current spending on the maintained sector of advanced further education for each year since 1978-79 in constant 1983-84 prices, excluding adjustments made to take account of the loss of fee income from the reduction in tuition fees for home students in that year.

Sir Keith Joseph: The following table shows local authority expenditure on advanced further education, net of all income, in each financial year since 1978-79, adjusted for the reduction in the home undergraduate tuition fee in 1982-83 and its freezing in 1983-84:

Financial year	*£ million 1983-84 real terms
1978-79	572
1979-80	566
1980-81	556
1981-82	560
1982-83	563
†1983-84	553
‡1984-85	525

* Real terms expenditure has been obtained by using the Gross Domestic Product (Market Prices) Deflator.
† Provisional.
‡ Estimated.

The net figures, however, give a misleading impression of the trend in expenditure since the rapid growth in student numbers over the period (some 30 per cent.) led to increasing fee income. The best indication of the movement of expenditure is given by spending gross of income. This was in each year as follows:

Financial year	£ million 1983-84 real terms
1978-79	744
1979-80	732
1980-81	749
1981-82	786
1982-83	802
†1984-85	778

* Provisional.
† Estimated.

Lecturers (Pay)

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State Education and Science if he will publish the cost of salaries of university lecturers and express them as proportion of total expenditure in universities each y since 1978-79.

Mr. Brooke: The cost of salaries of clinical and no clinical academic staff paid from general univers expenditure (that is all recurrent expenditure excludi research grants and contracts and expenditure on oth services rendered to outside bodies) is as follows:

Academic year	Salaries of clinical and non-clinical academic staff £ million	Percentage of general expenditure
1979-80	402	38·1
1980-81	512	39·0
1981-82	537	37·8
1982-83	549	35·8

During this period the scope of general expenditu increased, primarily to include a higher proportion capital provision, the funding of student unions a additional provision for redundancy and early retireme compensation.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Hordern asked the Secretary of State f Education and Science if he will publish the cost teachers' salaries in each year since 1978-79 and t proportion they were to total expenditure on education each year.

Mr. Dunn: The expenditure since 1979 by loc education authorities in England on the salaries of scho teachers as a proportion of thier total net expenditure schools is as follows:—

	Expenditure on teachers' salaries (£ million cash) (a)*	Total net Expenditure on Schools (£ million cash) (b)	Column (a) percentage Column (per cen
1978-79	2,709	4,553	59
1979-80	3,066	5,205	58
1980-81	3,880	6,371	60
1981-82	4,302	6,972	61
1982-83	4,550	7,374	61
1983-84†	4,760	7,676	62

* Expenditure on teachers' salaries includes employers' contributi towards national insurance and superannuation.
† The 1983-84 figures are provisional, pending the receipt from local education authorities of expenditure data for that year.

Research Councils (Expenditure)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the annual expenditure by each of the research councils, expressed both in real and current terms, for each year since 1978-79; and what is the projected expenditure on a similar basis for the next three years.

Mr. Brooke: The following tables show the information requested. The cash terms figures (table 1) represent actual expenditures for the years up to 1983-84, the planned cash provisions for 1984-85 and 1985-86 (subject, in the case of 1985-86, to parliamentary approval of the Supply Estimates in due course), and the amounts provisionally recommended by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils for 1986-87 and 1987-88. Final advice on the distribution of the science budget in 1986-87 will be given to my right hon. Friend in late 1985, and for 1987-88 in late 1986.

The cost terms figures (table 2) have been derived from the figures in table 1 by applying the GDP deflator, using 1983-84 as the base year.

Special Residential Schools (Recruitment Procedures)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he intends to issue to special residential schools accommodating young children with learning difficulties in respect of recruitment procedures relating to children of secondary age grouping.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to issue general guidance. If the hon. Lady knows of any particular school which is experiencing difficulties, and would write to me with the details, I shall see whether I can help to resolve them.

Buildings (Safety Hazards)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he intends to issue to universities, polytechnics and colleges of further and higher education in respect of overcrowding in buildings, lecture rooms and laboratories in connection with safety hazards.

Mr. Brooke: None. University, polytechnic and college authorities, in common with employers in general, have duties under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 towards the safety both of their employees and of others who use their premises; and they are aware of this. Publications from the Department give guidance on achieving good practice in the provision and use of teaching accommodation.

School Conversion and Building Projects

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, region by region, the number of school conversion or building projects in which his Department's architects have been involved since 1981.

Mr. Dunn: Statutory approvals of particulars of individual school building projects, whether for new provision or at existing schools, were given as listed below under section 14(1) of the Education Act 1980 or under regulations in force at the time. The Department's architects are normally involved in the consideration of all such proposals.

Region	Number of Projects
	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
East Anglia	14	15	31
Eastern	10	33	26
Greater London	21	73	64
Midlands	26	48	70
Northern	19	62	52
North Midlands	30	30	44
North Western	47	95	103
South Eastern	19	41	62
Southern	20	19	45
South Western	30	46	56
Yorkshire and Humberside	25	49	45

In addition, since 1981, architects engaged in development work in the Department's architects and building group have been involved with local authorities on school building projects as follows:

Region	Number of projects
East Anglia	1
Eastern	1
Greater London	—
Midlands	1
Northern	1
North Midlands	7
North Western	1
South Eastern	—
Southern	2
South Western	—
Yorkshire and Humberside	—

Arts Teaching

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assistance he proposes to give to the school curriculum development committee in promoting arts teaching in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The school curriculum development committee, which is funded jointly by the Department and the local authority associations, has recently announced that it is to spend £300,000 on a new curriculum development project to give practical support to primary and secondary schools in developing effective curricula in the arts for all pupils.

Electrical and Mechanical Engineering Graduates

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of graduates of electrical and mechanical engineering in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The number of university and CNAA first degree graduates of electrical and mechanical engineering in Great Britain were as follows:

	Number
1979	5,308
1980	5,434
1982	6,043

The number of CNAA first degree graduates in 1983 is not yet available. The number of university first degree graduates in 1983 was 4,359 compared with 4,159 in 1982.

Sex Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Educati and Science what assessment he has made of t implications of the judgment in the Court of Appeal in t Gillick case for the circumstances in which schools m provide sex education and the nature of the educati which may be provided; if he has given any guidance local education authorities on this matter; and if he w make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department of Health and Soci Security is appealing to the House of Lords against t judgments of the Court of Appeal in this case. Pending t outcome of this appeal, it would not be appropriate for m right hon. Friend to comment on the matter: it is for loc education authorities and schools, which are responsib for the provision of sex education, to assess the extent which the Court of Appeal's judgments have implicatio for that provision. The Court of Appeal's decision w brought to the attention of local authorities's and others b a circular issued by the DHSS on 21 December 1984.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Educati and Science if he will make a statement on the visit of t Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Memb for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke to Liverpool.

Mr. Brooke: The visit, which was confined Liverpool Polytechnic and made at the invitation of i rector, was part of a regular series of visits by me to high education institutions. It enabled me to see at first ha some of the excellent work of the polytechnic.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sedition and Conspiracy

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General o how many occasions in the last 30 years he or the Direct of Public Prosecutions has authorised the initiation proceedings for (a) sedition and (b) conspiracy, dividi this category by type of offence; and if he will make statement.

The Attorney-General: In 1973 the Director of Publ Prosecutions instituted proceedings against three perso for offences which included seditious conspiracy a uttering seditious words but the count of the indictme alleging seditious conspiracy was allowed to lie on the fi and not tried. The DPP has instituted no other proceedin for sedition in the past 30 years. The information soug in relation to prosecutions for conspiracy is not availab for the full period and to the extent that it is available cou be collated only at disproportionate expense.

Criminal Prosecutions

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General i pursuant to the Answer of 19 November, Official Repor column 57, he will publish in the Official Report h guidelines for the initiation of criminal prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to m answer to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gort

(Mr. Kaufman) on 18 February 1985 at, at column 326. The guidelines referred to therein are those referred to in my hon. Friend's question.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make it his policy to set the grant to the British Overseas Trade Board at a level that provides the same purchasing power in future years as the £27·5 million provided in 1984-85;

(2) what is his policy towards the British Overseas Trade Board and its funding.

Mr. Channon: My right hon. Friend values the work of the British Overseas Trade Board (though its activities, like those of all parts of his Department, are of course kept under continuing review). But it cannot be totally exempt from measures to restrain public expenditure. Its budget of £27·5 million for 1984-85 is expected to be broadly maintained in cash terms over the next three years.

Exports (Promotion)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with measures taken by his Department and other Government agencies to promote British exports.

Mr. Channon: Yes. Through the British Overseas Trade Board the Government provide a wide range of services for exporters.

International Telecommunications Union

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who represents the United Kingdom on the International Telecommunications Union; and what information he has about forthcoming meetings of that body.

Mr. Butcher: The Department of Trade and Industry represents the United Kingdom at all major meetings of the International Telecommunication Union, including the plenipotentiary conference, the administrative council, administrative radio conferences, the plenary assembly of the International Radio Consultative Committee and, generally, the plenary assembly of the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee. Further information on the arrangements for United Kingdom representation at the ITU and other international telecommunication organisations is contained in a paper on this subject placed in the Library of the House on 26 July 1984.

ITU meetings scheduled for 1985 include the administrative council in July and a world administrative radio conference in August. Meetings of CCIR and CCITT study groups take place regularly throughout the year.

In addition, I understand that the recent report of the Independent Commission for World-Wide Telecommunications Development is likely to be discussed at the administrative council in July and possibly at other meetings to be arranged for that purpose.

Hertfordshire

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance is available to industry from his Department in the Welwyn Hatfield constituency and in the county of Hertfordshire.

Mr. Trippier: Information on assistance available to industry from my Department is contained in the booklet "How to Make Your Business Grow", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) on what grounds the proposed clothing, footwear and textiles scheme for technological investment in the United Kingdom clothing, footwear and textile industries has been disallowed by the European Economic Community;

(2) if he will outline the major proposals of the clothing, footwear and textile scheme for investment in the United Kingdom clothing, footwear and textile industries; and which of its provisions were objected to by the European Economic Community;

(3) what has been the total amount of Government investment in each of the following industries in the latest year for which figures are available; and what rate per 1,000 employees in each of the following industries this figure represents (a) the coal mining industry, (b) the steel industry, (c) motor vehicle manufacture, (d) the computer manufacturing industry and (e) the clothing, footwear and textile industry;

(4) what plans he now has for Government investment in the United Kingdom clothing, footwear and textile industries;

(5) what information he has concerning the current annual levels of Government investment in the textile industries of each of the member countries of the European Economic Community;

(6) what reasons the European Commission gave to his Department for its refusal to approve the implementation of the clothing, footwear and textiles (CLOFT) scheme for investment in the United Kingdom; if he has any alternative proposals for investment assistance in these industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the United Kingdom's crude trade balance in yarns, fabrics and garments, respectively, in the years from 1979 to 1984;

(2) what was the United Kingdom's crude trade balance in textiles and clothing and the overall trade balance in manufactures with Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea and Macao in 1979 to 1984;

(3) what was the United Kingdom's crude trade balance in textiles and clothing and the overall trade balance in manufactures with the Association of South East Asian Nation countries in the years 1979 to 1984;

(4) in how many multi-fibre arrangement product categories multi-fibre arrangement suppliers increased their utilisation of their quotas to the United Kingdom by 10 per cent. or more in 1983 compared with 1982, and in 1984 compared with 1983;

(5) how many times the anti-surge mechanism in the multi-fibre arrangement bilateral agreements was used in 1983 and 1984; and on how many occasions other EEC member states utilised the anti-surge mechanism in the same period;

(6) in which multi-fibre arrangement group I product categories, the individual quotas to the United Kingdom for Macao, Taiwan and South Korea, respectively, exceeded 1 per cent. of total United Kingdom imports of the product concerned in 1980;

(7) in which multi-fibre arrangement group I product categories, the quotas to the United Kingdom of the non-dominant multi-fibre arrangement suppliers exceeded 2·5 per cent. of the United Kingdom's total imports of the products concerned in 1980;

(8) what were the levels of the voluntary export restraints from Portugal and Spain to the United Kingdom of textile and clothing products for 1983 and 1984; and what were the actual levels of exports to t Kingdom from these sources in each produc concerned in these years;

(9) what have been the levels of United exports and imports of yarns, fabrics and respectively, and the resulting crude trade ba Spain, Portugal, Turkey, Cyprus, Malta, Egypt and Tunisia in 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Memb as possible.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Industry if he will publish in the Offici information on those cases where the basket ext used by the United Kingdom in 1983 and 1984 to new quotas on textile and clothing products ind the countries involved, (b) the products involv trigger level for imports in each case, (d) the quo and (e) actual levels of imports into the United of the products concerned in 1983 and 1984.

Notes:

1. Imports may exceed the quota level in a given year for a variety of reasons. In the case of newly-introduced quotas the most likely explanatio is our obligation under GATT to admit goods in transit to the United Kingdom at the time a quota was introduced even if the quota level is thereb exceeded.

2. Strictly speaking, the quota on Chinese category 23 products was agreed in the course of negotiations for a new EC-China textiles agreemen but the trigger level had been exceeded.

TRANSPORT

New Vessels

69. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that the flow of orders for new vessels by British shipowners remains adequate to meet possible future Ministry of Defence requirements in a time of emergency.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am confident that the merchant fleet is capable of meeting existing defence needs. Its future potential in this area is the subject of the joint review now being undertaken by my Department and the Ministry of Defence.

Concessionary Fares Schemes

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those authorities which are not co-operating with his plans to allow all operators of local bus services to have the right to participate in concessionary fares schemes where they are provided by the council.

Mr. David Mitchell: There is no requirement on authorities to inform the Department about the conditions under which operators are admitted to their concessionary fares schemes.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many serious and how many fatal injuries have been caused as a result of accidents involving motor cycles in each of the last three years; what action is being taken to reduce these accidents; and if, following the recommendations in the report of the Transport Committee on "Road Safety", he is considering limiting the engine sizes of motor cycles for younger riders.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

	Fatalities	Serious injuries
1981	1,304	20,553
1982	1,267	20,608
1983	1,073	17,715

Figures for 1984 are not yet available.

The Transport Act 1981 contained a number of measures designed to improve the safety of motor cyclists, including a reduction in the maximum size of the learner machine. I have already said that I shall be reviewing the operation of these measures. I shall give my views on the Transport Committee's recommendations on motor cycling when I make my overall response to the Committee's report.

Safety Barriers

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current total length of central safety barriers installed on motorways, trunk roads and other roads in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: The total length of central reserve safety fencing installed on motorways in England is 1,440 miles. On trunk roads in England it is approximately 220 miles. Trunk roads and motorways in Scotland and Wale are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends th Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. I have n detailed knowledge of the provision of safety fences o other roads which are dealt with by the local highwa authorities.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State fo Transport what are the parameters for the design of roa safety crash barriers.

Mrs. Chalker: Safety fences are designed to contai and safely re-direct vehicles weighing 1·5 tonne travelling at 70 mph impacting at an angle of 20 degrees

Crossover Accidents

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State fo Transport if he will give a breakdown of the number o crossover accidents by road type and list the number o fatalities for the past five years.

Mrs. Chalker: The data requested are given in th table, An article on this subject appears in "Roa Accidents Great Britain 1983"—pages 30-31—a copy o which is in the Library.

Crossover accidents and casualties by road class Great Britain 1979-83

Road Maintenance Budget

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State fo Transport what rise in the non-motorway trunk roa maintenance budget would be required to prevent a increase in the blacklog of reconstruction work on th roads, as referred to in the public expenditure Whit Paper, Cmnd. 9428.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1985-86, about £30 million.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State fo Transport by what means London Regional Transpo auditors will certify expenditure totalling £37 million i relation to unfunded liabilities of London Regional Transport, Official Report, 19 February, column 945, as being due for payment prior to 31 March.

Mrs. Chalker: These liabilities will appear in LRT's accounts for 1984-85, according to LRT's latest forcasts. The accounts will be certified by LRT's independent auditors in the normal way. The liabilities represent future charges on the business, for which it is standard accounting practice to make provision, which will have accrued by the end of this financial year as a result of past transactions or management decisions.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the five categories which make up the total of £37 million of accrued unfunded liabilities of London Regional Transport for the current year, Official Report, 19 February, column 945, the principal expenditure, together with the reasons why they require payment prior to 31 March.

Mrs. Chalker: The items are as follows:

£21 million	provision for voluntary severance payments.
£ 6 million	provision for outstanding insurance claims.
£ 4 million	provision arising from abortive work on the Jubilee Line.
£ 5 million	provision for unpaid development land tax.
£ 1 million	provision for land compensation claims.
£37 million

The liabilities are as assessed in LRT's latest business forecasts, which may be subject to change. They do not fall to be paid in 1984-85 but will have accrued by the end of the financial year as a result of past transactions or management decisions. It is standard commercial accounting practice to make provision for liabilities.

Bus Operators (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Transport who are the 32 bus operators in Birmingham mentioned by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport, the hon. Member for Hampshire, North-West (Mr. Mitchell), during the debate on Second Reading of the Transport Bill, Official Report, 12 February, column 256.

Mr. David Mitchell: I regret that I was mistaken when, during the debate on Second Reading of the Transport Bill, I referred to the Birmingham area in order to illustrate that concessionary fare schemes involving a large number of operators could work without using tokens. I should have referred to Derbyshire, where some 28 operators participate in a pass-based scheme. I have written to the hon. Member for Wigan (Mr. Stott) to apologise for this error.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Youth Training

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list projects by name and indicate the number of trainees in each youth training programme and action for community employment scheme, together with the amount of public money advanced annually to each scheme operating in Antrim town which is funded by the Department of Economic Development.

Dr. Boyson: The following organisations are sponsoring projects in Antrim town:

Mr. Thomas Power

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement detailing the total period of time for which Thomas Power has been held on remand, the number of court appearances he has made, the various charges he has faced or is facing, the charges he faced which have been dismissed, the dates on which these various charges were made or dismissed and the various dates on which Mr. Power was arrested;

(2) if he will make a statement outlining why Thomas Power has been held on remand over such a long period of time.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1985, c. 503-504]: The trial of Thomas Power for murder and other serious offences is presently proceeding at Belfast Crown court, and it would not be proper for Ministers to make any statement relating to the circumstances of this case or to any previous charges or court proceedings involving Mr. Power.

Emergency Provisions (Arrests)

Mr. Kevin McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people were detained in the most recent full calendar year under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978; and how many were charged with scheduled offences under that Act and other Acts;

(2) in respect of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978, for the most recent full calendar year, what was the yearly total of arrests made under the Act; and how many persons arrested under the Act were detained for the following periods (a) up to 12 hours, (b) 12 to 24 hours, (c) 24 to 36 hours, (d) 36 to 48 hours, (e) 48 to 60 hours and (f) 60 to 72 hours, indicating those numbers (i) not ultimately charged under the Act and released, (ii) those charged under the Act and (iii) those charged with an offence but not under the Act, indicating which offences, and (iv) those charged under the Act but not initially detained under the Act.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 1985, c. 712]: One thousand three hundred and twenty six arrests were carried out by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and 241 by members of the armed forces under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 in 1984.

Figures are not available showing whether those arrested by members of the armed forces were released or handed over to the Royal Ulster Constabulary. In the latter instance, such persons may subsequently have been rearrested by the police, and would therefore appear in both sets of figures.

Of those arrests carried out by the Royal Ulster Constabulary, in 1,103 of the cases the persons concerned were released without charge; in four cases persons were subsequently charged with offences under the Act only; in 10 cases persons were charged with offences under the Act as well as with other offences; and in 209 other cases persons were charged with offences under other legislation; 198 of the cases involved persons charged with scheduled offences, though details of the offences are not readily available. No-one was charged with an offence under the Act after arrest under other provisions.

Information on the length of time individuals were held under the Act could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been killed by terrorist actions in Northern Ireland in each year since 1 January 1970.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 19 February 1985, c. 450]: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of deaths
1970	20
1971	131
1972	401
1973	219
1974	203
1975	241
1976	283
1977	105
1978	71
1979	112
1980	69
1981	84
1982	85
1984	53

The figures for 1979 to 1983 differ from those I gave the hon. Gentleman on 15 December 1983, at columns 493-95 in that deaths caused by the security forces in incidents initiated by terrorist action are not included.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Terrorists (Evidence)

Mr. McNamara asked the Attorney-General what is the total cost to the taxpayer of arrangements made to protect converted terrorist witnesses prior to the trial of persons charged on the basis of their evidence; and what are the total sums which have been spent, committed or are planned to be spent for the purposes of resettling or protecting converted terrorist witnesses following the outcome of the trials at which they provide evidence.

Mr. Hurd: I have been asked to reply.

It would not be appropriate to give precise details since they might prejudice the security of individuals; but total direct expenditure on the protection of individuals who gave evidence against former accomplices in terrorist organisations in the last seven years amounted to just over £1·3 million. This expenditure is kept at the minimum level consistent with adequate protection of those concerned. Figures for expenditure are not maintained in a form which would permit them to be broken down into pre- and post-trial expenditure without disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployed Persons (Benefits)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate what percentage the average unemployed person gets in benefits of the income he or she could expect if he or she had a job.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Precise up-to-date information on the previous or likely earnings of the unemployed is not available. However, in April 1984 the standard unemployment benefit — including child benefit but excluding any supplementary allowances — for a man with a wife and two dependent children was £57·05. This was about 37 per cent. of the average gross weekly earnings of full-time male employees working a full week for manual occupations or about 32 per cent. for all occupations. A study by the Department of Health and Social Security in autumn 1978 indicated that the average usual gross weekly earnings of full-time men currently unemployed were just under 80 per cent. of those of all currently employed men. If this relationship has not changed significantly between 1978 and 1984, the above standard unemployment benefit figure in April 1984 would probably be just over 40 per cent. of the average usual gross weekly earnings of those currently employed. This comparison does not take account of supplementary allowances which will vary from individual to individual.

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment what action is being taken by the Health and Safety Executive to counteract the serious level of under-reporting of toxic side effects attributed to pesticides in the farming community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Poisonous Substances in Agriculture Regulations 1984 and the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 require the reporting of incidents involving pesticides at the workplace.

The Health and Safety Executive places great emphasis on and publicises the need for the safe use and handling of pesticides and the reporting of accidents to do with them. There is no evidence of a serious level of under-reporting. All complaints about and reports of incidents involving suspected poisoning by agricultural pesticides are investigated.

Hon. Majesty's Agricultural Inspectorate's next national safety campaign, "Your Health", includes in its scope the use of pesticides and their effects on people, crops, wildlife, and the environment.

Labour Statistics

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for unemployment in Eastleigh; and how the percentage unemployed in Eastleigh compares with the national figure.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the House of Commons Library. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Disabled Persons (Employment Code)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if the Manpower Services Commission's code of good practice on the employment of disabled people has been distributed to Government Departments and local authorities; and what measures are being taken to assess the effectiveness of the code.

Mr. Alan Clark: Copies of the code of good practice have been sent to all government Departments and the Civil Service's own code is currently being revised to take account of its recommendations. Every local authority has been supplied with copies of the code.

It is too early, as yet, to assess the effectiveness of the code, but the response to the code is being carefully monitored. Information about employers' first impressions of the code is being obtained during the first half of this year, and a more detailed evaluation is planned at a later stage when employers have had time to adjust their policies and practices where necessary to its guidance.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies of the Manpower Services Commission's code of good practice on the employment of disabled people have been printed; how they have been distributed; and what has been the cost of promoting the code.

Mr. Alan Clark: Sixty thousand copies of the code have been printed so far. Copies of the code have been sent to chairmen of major companies in the private sector as well as to heads of nationalised industries, local authorities, Government Departments and voluntary organisations. Forty thousand copies have been sent to members of the Manpower Services Commission's disablement advisory service for local distribution to employers, voluntary organisations and other interested bodies. The initial cost of promoting the code, including printing and distribution, has been £73,000.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people since its publication from (a) disability organisations and (b) employers.

Mr. Alan Clark: The code of good practice has been endorsed by the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and by the National Advisory Council on the employment of disabled people. It has been well received by the chairmen of many major companies and by the Confederation of British Industry. It is now being widely promoted at local level to employers throughout the country by the Manpower Services Commission's disablement advisory service and the reaction so far has been very favourable. Responses will continue to be carefully monitored during the coming months.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether, since the publication of the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people, there has been an increase in the number of inquiries from employees to the Disablement Advisory Service; and if he anticipates an increase in the work load of disablement resettlement officers.

Mr. Alan Clark: The code of good practice is generating a great deal of interest among employers. The disablement advisory service is promoting the code as part of its everyday work of encouraging employers to adopt good policies and practices towards disabled workers, and will monitor the level of interest and response over the coming months. It is not anticipated that the introduction of the code will directly affect the numbers of clients with whom disablement resettlement officers (DROs) deal. However, if employers respond positively to the advice in the code, the DROs will be assisted in their task of placing disabled jobseekers.

Youth Training Scheme (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a breakdown by ethnic origin of the latest available figures of those on youth training scheme courses in the Leeds area.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The numbers of young people in training on the youth training scheme at the end of January 1985 in the Leeds local authority district, presented by ethnic origin, are shown in the following table:

Ethnic origin	In training 31 January 1985
White/European	3,378
African/West Indian	106
Asian	63
Others	26
Total	3,573

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the average earnings of workers employed in the United Kingdom's textile and clothing industries in the years 1979 to 1984; and if he will compare the increase in earnings against changes in the retail price index and increases in the earnings of all employees during this period.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Employment how much the prices of textile and clothing products have increased since 1979, comparing these increases with changes in the retail prices index in the equivalent period.

Mr. Alan Clark: Clothing — including clothing materials — is a component of the retail prices index. Between January 1979 and January 1985 it increased by 22 per cent. compared with an increase of 74 per cent. in the "all items" index.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment what warnings are carried on containers of fluoride for addition to water supplies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Advisory Bodies (MSC)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those bodies designated as advisory bodies to the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission has the following permanent advisory bodies:

Advisory Committee on Resettlement of Ex-Regular Members of HM Forces
Area Manpower Boards
Careers Materials Advisory Committee
Committees for the Employment of Disabled People
Manpower Services Committee for Scotland
Manpower Services Committee for Wales
National Advisory Council on the Employment for Disabled People
Open Tech Programme: Steering Group
Ex-Services Resettlement Committee for Scotland
Sheltered Employment Consultative Group
Special Employment Measures Advisory Group
Technical and Vocational Education Initiative National Steering Group
Youth Training Board
Youth Training Board Advisory Group on Content and Standards
Industrial Language Training Advisory Committee

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will place in the Library copies of the Manpower Services Commission memoranda 511/3 and 514/3 which give information on accidents to area manpower boards, plus their supplements;

(2) if he will make a statement on the Manpower Services Commission's memorandum 511/3, Supplement 4, which gives information on accidents to area manpower boards;

(3) if he will place a copy of the Manpower Services Commission's memorandum 894/1, which deals with appraisal of youth training scheme programmes, and 894/5 which deals with accidents to young persons on the youth training scheme, in the Library;

(4) if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East given in the Official Report, 25 July 1984, column 661, on fatal accidents on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Skillcentres

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment which skillcentres in the west midlands are to be affected by closure plans.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Skillcentre Training Agency plans to close its skillcentres in Castle Bromwich and Redditch, the annexe to Wolverhampton skillcentre at Dudley and its young people's training centre in Handsworth. This will allow the agency to make more cost-effective use of the skillcentres in Handsworth, Coventry and Wolverhampton, while still maintaining good geographical distribution of its facilities in the west midlands.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement about the implementation of the Government's financial management initiative in his Department.

Mr. Tom King: I have today placed in the Library a report describing the implementation of the financial management initiative within my Department during 1984. The report is also on sale to the public from my Department's headquarters.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Servants

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Prime Minister what further guidance is being given to civil servants about their duties and responsibilities in relation to Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The head of the Home Civil Service, after consulting permanent secretaries, has today issued, with my consent, a note of guidance restating the duties and responsibilities of civil servants in relation to Ministers. A copy of it is annexed to this answer.

The note does not and cannot discuss the corresponding responsibilities which Ministers have in relation to civil servants. Civil servants who carry out their duties and responsibilities in the manner described in the note by the head of the Home Civil Service are entitled to the trust, respect and support of Ministers. In the end it is Ministers who bear responsibility for the policies and decisions of Government; but no competent Minister wants his civil servants to tailor their advice to what they think the Minister wants to hear. My colleagues and I have a very high opinion of the general quality of the advice and service we receive from the Civil Service.

THE DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF CIVIL SERVANTS IN RELATION TO MINISTERS

Note by the Head of the Home Civil Service

During the last few months a number of my colleagues have suggested to me that it would be timely to restate the general duties and responsibilities of civil servants in relation to Ministers. Recent events, and the public discussion to which they have given rise, have led me to conclude that the time has come when it would be right for me, as Head of the Home Civil Service, to respond to these suggestions. I am accordingly putting out the guidance in this note. It is issued after consultation with Permanent Secretaries in charge of Departments, and with their agreement.

2. Civil servants are servants of the Crown. For all practical purposes the Crown in this context means and is represented by the Government of the day. There are special cases in which certain functions are conferred by law upon particular members or groups of members of the public service; but in general the executive powers of the Crown are exercised by and on the advice of Her Majesty's Ministers, who are in turn answerable to Parliament. The civil service as such has no constitutional personality or responsibility separate from the duly elected Government of the day. It is there to provide the Government of the day with advice on the formulation of the policies of the Government, to assist in carrying out the decisions of the Government, and to manage and deliver the services for which the Government is responsible. Some civil servants are also involved, as a proper part of their duties, in the processes of presentation of Government policies and decisions.

3. The civil service serves the Government of the day as a whole, that is to say Her Majesty's Ministers collectively, and the Prime Minister is the Minister for the Civil Service. The duty of the individual civil servant is first and foremost to the Minister of the Crown who is in charge of the Department in which he or she is serving. It is the Minister who is responsible, and answerable in Parliament, for the conduct of the Department's affairs and the management of its business. It is the duty of civil servants to serve their Ministers with integrity and to the best of their ability.

4. The British civil service is a non-political and disciplined career service. Civil servants are required to serve the duly elected Government of the day, of whatever political complexion. It is of the first importance that civil servants should conduct themselves in such a way as to deserve and retain the confidence of Ministers, and as to be able to establish the same relationship with those whom they may be required to serve in some future Administration. That confidence is the indispensable foundation of a good relationship between Ministers and civil servants. The conduct of civil servants should at all times be such that Ministers and potential future Ministers can be sure that that confidence can be freely given, and that the civil service will at all times conscientiously fulfil its duties and obligations to, and impartially assist, advise and carry out the policies of, the duly elected Government of the day.

5. The determination of policy is the responsibility of the Minister (within the convention of collective responsibility of the whole Government for the decisions and actions of every member of it). In the determination of policy the civil servant has no constitutional responsibility or role, distinct from that of the Minister. Subject to the conventions limiting the access of Ministers to papers of previous administrations, it is the duty of the civil servant to make available to the Minister all the information and experience at his or her disposal which may have a bearing on the policy decisions to which the Minister is committed or which he is preparing to make, and to give to the Minister honest and impartial advice, without fear or favour, and whether the advice accords with the Minister's view or not. Civil servants are in breach of their duty, and damage their integrity as servants of the Crown, if they deliberately withhold relevant information from their Minister, or if they give their Minister other advice than the best they believe they can give, or if they seek to obstruct or delay a decision simply because they do not agree with it. When, having been given all the relevant information and advice, the Minister has taken a decision, it is the duty of civil servants loyally to carry out that decision with precisely the same energy and good will, whether they agree with it or not.

6. Civil servants are under an obligation to keep the confidences to which they become privy in the course of their official duties; not only the maintenance of trust between Ministers and civil servants but also the efficiency of government depend on their doing so. There is and must be a general duty upon every civil servant, serving or retired, not to disclose, in breach of that obligation, any document or information or detail about the course of business, which has come his or her way in the course of duty as a civil servant. Whether such disclosure is done from political or personal motives, or for pecuniary gain, and quite apart from liability to prosecution under the Official Secrets Acts, the civil servant concerned forfeits the trust that is put in him or her as a servant of the Crown, and may well forfeit the right to continue in the service. He or she also undermines the confidence that ought to subsist between Ministers and civil servants and thus damages colleagues and the Service as well as him or herself.

7. The previous paragraphs have set out the basic principl which govern civil servants' relations with Ministers. The rest this note deals with particular aspects of conduct which deri from them, where is may be felt that more detailed guidan would be helpful.

8. A civil servant should not be required to do anythi unlawful. In the very unlikely event of a civil servant being aske to do something which he or she believes would put him or h in clear breach of the law, the matter should be reported to superior officer or to the Principal Establishment Officer, wh should if necessary seek the advice of the Legal Adviser to th department. If legal advice confirms that the action would b likely to be held to be unlawful, the matter shoul be reported i writing to the Permanent Head of the department.

9. Civil servants often find themselves in situations whe they are required or expected to give information to Parliamentary Select Committee, to the media, or to individual In doing so they should be guided by the general policy of th Government on evidence to Select Committees and on th disclosure of information, by any specifically departmenta policies in relation to departmental information, and by th requirements of security and confidentiality. In this respec however, as in other respects, the civil servant's first duty is t his or her Minister. Ultimately the responsibility lies wit Ministers, and not with civil servants, to decide what informatio should be made available, and how and when it should b released, whether it is to Parliament, to Select Committees, t the media or to individuals. It is not acceptable for a serving o former civil servant to seek to frustrate policies or decisions o Ministers by the disclosure outside the Government, in breach o confidence, of information to which he or she has had access a a civil servant.

10. It is Ministers and not civil servants who bear politica responsibility. Civil servants should not decline to take, o abstain from taking, an action merely because to do so woul conflict with their personal opinions on matters of politica choice or judgment between alternative or competing objective and benefits; they should consider the possibility of declinin only if taking or abstaining from the action in question is felt t be directly contrary to deeply held personal conviction on fundamental issue of conscience.

11. A civil servant who feels that to act or to abstain fro acting in a particular way, or to acquiesce in a particular decisio or course of action, would raise for him or her a fundamenta issue of conscience, or is so profoundly opposed to a policy a to feel unable consientiously to administer it in accordance wit the standards described in this note, should consult a superio officer, or in the last resort the Permanent Head of the department, who can and should if necessary consult the Head of the Home Civil Service. If that does not enable the matter t be resolved on a basis which the civil servant concerned is able to accept, he or she must either carry out his or her instructions or resign from the public service — though even after resignation he or she will still be bound to keep the confidences to which he or she has become privy as a civil servant.

ROBERT ARMSTRONG

Government Objectives

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement outlining the objectives of her Government for the rest of the current Parliament.

The Prime Minister: At home, we aim for continued reduction of inflation and sustained economic growth, based on sound financial policies. We will continue policies designed to achieve better prospects for employment, involving a more flexible and competitive economy encouraging initiative and enterprise. Our aim will be to hold public expenditure broadly stable in real terms, to seek to reduce Government borrowing and to reduce the level of taxation. We will work for the spread of wealth and ownership more widely in our country, based upon the privatisation of industries, the encouragement of individual home-ownership, and the spread of employee profit sharing and share participation in business. We will use our new legislation to protect householders and business from excessive rate demands, and will continue with our task of streamlining local government. We will seek to free more publicly owned land, particularly in city centres, for the rebuilding of our urban areas, and will consider simplifying planning regulations to help investment.

We shall bring to a conclusion our widespread review of the welfare state — the largest review since Beveridge. We will seek to protect the poorest in our community, whilst strengthening incentives to work. We will encourage the new board of management of the NHS to put patients first, and to ensure that the increasing resources we are making available for the Health Service go to improve the quality of service.

We shall vigorously uphold the rule of law and fight crime, especially drug abuse and crimes of violence. We will complete our examination of public order legislation. We shall continue our work for a better educational system, by giving parents more say, by extending the training and vocational elements in teenage education, and by laying greater emphasis on the improvement of standards in the system.

Our policies on pollution will improve the environment, and our conservation policies will protect the best in our heritage.

Abroad, we will promote freer and fairer trade between nations. Within the European Community, we seek to strengthen the workings of the internal market in goods and services so that industry thrives and the consumer throughout the EC has access to the best products at the best price, regardless of their source of manufacture, and our suppliers have a fair chance. We will continue to work for enlargement of the Community to strengthen democracy in Western Europe.

We will maintain the effectiveness of our defences through co-operation with our NATO Allies, and we will ensure that Britain maintains an independent nuclear deterrent. We will work from strength for the mutual reduction and control of armaments. We will see that Britain's voice remains prominent in international counsels. We will sustain our efforts to combat hunger and disease. We will continue to improve the efficiency of public services, taking Government out of those areas which are best left to others. We seek a strong Britain, where individuals have more choice.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister how many cases of accidental fluoride poisoning (a) in the workplace, (b) as a result of excess inclusion of fluoride in the water supply and (c) in all other circumstances have occurred in the United Kingdom in the last 30 years; and if she has any information on incidents in other countries in any of these categories in the same period.

The Prime Minister: During the 30 years in which water fluoridation has taken place in this country, there have been no instances of accidental fluoride poisoning as a result of excess inclusion of fluoride in the water supply. We are aware of one such accident resulting in a fatality which occurred in Annapolis in the United States of America in 1979 as a result of the fluoried level in the water accidentally rising to 20 times the optimal level. Such an accident could not occur in this country. The equipment here is designed to halt the supply of fluoride if the concentration in the water supply begins to exceed the tolerance level. Even if there were a malfunction in the monitoring equipment, the amount of fluoride which could enter the supply at any one time is severely limited.

I regret that information relating to accidental fluoride poisoning at the workplace could not be obtained without disproportionate cost and that data on the incidence of such accidents in all other circumstances are not available.

General Belgrano

Q71. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 12 February, she will make a statement about the security considerations which required the actual date of the visual sighting of the General Belgrano by HMS Conqueror to remain undisclosed to the House until after the date of publication in the London Gazette of the official despatch of the Commander in Chief, Fleet on Operation Corporate.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the speeches by my right hon. Friends in the debate of 18 February 1985, at columns 737-830.

Ayot St. Lawrence

Q100. Mr. Murphy asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to the parish of Ayot St. Lawrence.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Barron asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 February.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 February.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 February.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 February.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 26 February.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Benefits (Single Payments)

Mr. William Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a list of those items for which single payments are made and the sum allowed for each item in Northern Ireland and indicate where these items and sums differ from those in Great Britain made by the Department of Health and Social Security.

The Prime Minister: The categories of items for which single payments can be made are detailed in part 7 of the Northern Ireland S Manual. The only difference from Great Britain is that single payments are not available for costs incurred in travelling to visit relatives in hospital, (there is a separate scheme covering such expenses).

The amounts generally payable for bedclothes, clothing and footwear are set out in appendix 7 to the Northern Ireland S Manual; these are the same as in Great Britain. Fixed amounts are not prescribed for other items but the independent adjudication authorities are required to award sufficient to purchase goods of reasonable quality; records are not held centrally of such awards in Northern Ireland or in Great Britain.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Legal Aid

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about his Department's implementation of section 22 of the Legal Aid Act.

Mr. Newton: The authority for legal aid assessment officers to pass information to other officers for purposes not specified in section 22(1) of the Legal Aid Act 1974 remains suspended.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons were successful regarding claims for attendance allowance in 1981, 1982, 1983 and to the latest available date in 1984, as compared with the number of claims made in the respective years.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Attendance Allowance—Initial Claims 1981-84

	1981	1982	1983	1984
Initial claims received in each year	167,000	193,000	233,000	258,000
Total decisions made in each year	149,000	182,000	217,000	240,000
Total decisions resulting in an award	108,000	136,000	159,000	182,000

Social Security Reviews

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which of the bodies listed as having given oral or written evidence to his social security reviews have advised the Government (a) to abolish the state earnings-related pension scheme, (b) to abolish heating additions or other additions to supplementary benefit, (c) to abolish single payments to supplementary benefit claimants, (d) to abolish the Christmas bonus, (e) to abolish the death grant, (f) to abolish the maternity grant, (g) to create a two-tier child benefit, (h) to tax child benefit, (i) to means-test child benefit, (j) to abolish child benefit for young people between 16 and 19 years and (k) to modify or reduce the housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Whitney: Over 4,000 pieces of evidence covering a wide range of options have been received in the course of the social security review. As we have made clear, the Government do not propose to publish or summarise evidence. However, individuals and organisations are free to publish their evidence, if they wish, and a number h done so. It would be possible to identify and list published evidence in the manner requested only disproportionate cost.

Notifiable Diseases

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State Social Services if he will list the diseases which required to be notified to his Department; w information his Department seeks concerning the pers concerned in order to identify sectors of the populatio risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The following diseases notifiable in England and Wales:

Acute encephalitis
Acute meningitis
Acute poliomyelitis
Anthrax
Cholera
Diphtheria
Dysentery
Food poisoning
Infective jaundice
Lassa fever
Leprosy
Leptospirosis Malaria
Marburgh disease
Measles
Ophthalmia neonatorum
Paratyphoid fever
Plague
Rabies
Relapsing fever
Scarlet fever
Smallpox
Tetanus Tuberculosis
Typhoid fever
Typhus fever
Viral haemorrhagic fever
Whooping cough
Yellow fever

Medical officers for environmental health are requir to submit returns of notifications in their areas to the Offi of Population Censuses and Surveys, with the age and s of the patients concerned.

Oxygen Therapy

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State f Social Services if he will publish the latest financial co per annum in providing oxygen therapy by means of (a) oxygen concentrators and (b) oxygen cylinders; and if h will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The total cost to the famil practitioner services in England of the domiciliary oxyge service was £8·4 million in 1983-84. Only cylinders a supplied. Concentrators are available only through th hospital service at present and no information on the cos of domiciliary installations is collected centrally. We pla to introduce concentrators into the domiciliary service fo high volume users later this year, since this is a more co effective form of supply. Detailed calculations of th savings likely to be achieved will be available whe tenders have been evaluated. Meanwhile, the late available figures on the relative costs of cylinders an concentrators are those contained in the North Weste regional health authority's report on the pilot study o oxygen concentrators.

Motor and Neurologically Impaired Children

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 24 January, Official Report, column 526, if he will list the centres in the United Kingdom undertaking training programmes for motor and neurologically impaired children similar to those at the institute for motor disorders in Budapest.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that about 25 schools and units in the United Kingdom use some form of conductive education. We do not collect detailed information about centres where particular methods of treatment or education are practised.

Deaf People (Social Workers)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what factors he attributes the reduction in the number of people taking post-qualifying courses for social work with deaf people between 1979 and 1983, given in his answer of 23 January, Official Report, columns 463-4.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of people taking these courses have never been high; it has long been difficult to find social workers wishing to specialise in this way. The Department is in touch with the relevant professional bodies with a view to improving the situation.

Secure Accommodation

Miss Fookes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to introduce long-term secure accommodation for persons not sufferng from mental illness as defined by law but who none the less require a secure and sheltered environment for their own safety and that of others.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Contraceptives

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has discussed with the British Medical Association and the General Medical Council the implications of the judgment in the Gillick case for the implementation of his Department's guidelines on the prescription of contraceptive drugs or devices to minors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. We shall be reviewing our guidelines when the final outcome of the case is known.

Abortions

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many resident girls aged 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 years have died as a result of abortions in each year since 1968.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The following numbers of deaths resulting form abortions — all forms including spontaneous abortions—among girls aged 16 and under resident in England and Wales were registered in the years indicated:

1968 one 15 year old
1970 two 13 year olds
1971 one 12 year old
1972 two 15 year olds
1978 one 15 year old
1979 one 16 year old
1981 one 16 year old

No such deaths were registered in the remaining years.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if any studies have been brought to his attention which indicate that fluoride is a cause of genetic damage;

(2) if any studies have been brought to his attention which indicate that fluoride is carcinogenic;

(3) if any studies have been brought to his attention which indicate that fluoride causes damage to plant and animal life.

Mr. John Patten: Our independent scientific advisers have considered the relevant work on the genetic effects of fluoride as used in water fluoridation schemes to achieve a concentration of one part per million in the drinking water of whole communities. They have also considered all the available evidence on the biological effects of fluoride in short term tests, animal carcinogenicity tests and the epidemiological evidence recently reviewed in the report of the working party on fluoridation of water and cancer, copies of which are available in the Vote Office. They have concluded that there is no evidence leading to an expectation of a mutagenic hazard to man through the induction of heritable abnormalities in the germ cells and that there is no reliable evidence of any hazard to man in respect of cancer from the fluoridation of drinking water to a concentration of one part per million.

The effect of toxic concentrations of fluoride on plants and animals are well documented. However, it has been established that irrigation with water containing fluoride at one part per million does not cause adverse effects on plants, and that the use of fluoridated water at the same concentration in the diet of animals has no harmful consequences.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Serviees what is the precise nature, extent and duration of the consultation that he expects health authorities to conduct, and with whom, prior to any request to a statutory water undertaker to add fluoride to water supplies.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have accepted that the Water (Fluoridation) Bill should be amended in order to place a statutory duty on the health authorities to undertake proper public consultation before deciding whether to apply to the statutory water undertaker for fluoridation. We are considering the precise terms of the amendment in the light of the views expressed during discussion of the Bill.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those local authorities which have passed a resolution on the addition of fluoride to the water supplies, indicating against each one whether a decision was in favour or against.

Mr. John Patten: The following health authorities in England are understood to have requested water fluoridation. In the main, these requests were made by area health authorities. New requests for fluoridation after enactment of the Water (Fluoridation) Bill will fall to be considered by district health authorities. Only the then Wirral AHA is known to have resolved not to request fluoridation.

* Health authorities which are known to have had discuss with Water Authorities but have made no formal request.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for So Services if he will list in the Official Report all those a in the United Kingdom which do not have fluoride ad to the water supplies but which have enjoyed a reduc in the incidence of dental caries of a similar or gre extent than areas which have had fluoride added to water supplies over a comparable period.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available would it in any case constitute a valid test of effectiveness of water fluoridation. Studies which h been carried out in this country contrasting compar fluoridated and non-fluoridated areas have consiste shown that the reduction in dental decay is between third to one half greater in the fluoridated than in comparable non-fluoridated area. For a survey of results of recent British studies, my hon. Friend may w to consult the journal "Community Dental Health (19 Volume 1", pages 47 to 54, a copy of which I have to him.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for So Services (1) what studies Her Majesty's Government h made, or are aware of, as to the extent of ingestion fluoride by the population as a result of eating food s as vegetables grown on land irrigated with fluor containing water or processed in water contain fluoride; what conclusions have been drawn; and if he make a statement;

(2) why it has not been considered appropriate for chemicals normally used to add fluoride ion to the pu water supply to be submitted to the Committee on Sa of Medicines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend h replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has to the LD50 level of fluoride ion in animals, specifying the animals involved.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.
I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

State Pension

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the costs of increasing the basic state pension by £1 per week for single pensioners and married couples in 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney: The full-year cost of raising the basic retirement pension by £1 per week for each person receiving a pension on his or her own insurance—that is with no increase for adult dependants or married women receiving pensions on their husband's insurance—would be £380 million gross, or £280 million net of savings on supplementary benefit and housing benefit.

Hypothermia

Mr. Ernie Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of persons who have died due to hypothermia during the last 12 months; and what were the age categories of those persons.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Number of deaths with mention of hypothermia by sex and age group, 1 December 1983 to 30 November 1984
England and Wales

Age group	Males	Females	Persons

Figures are provisional.

Blood Products

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what proportion of blood products for use by haemophiliacs at transfusion centres is imported; and what proportion of imported products are used after one year, after two years, after three years, and after more than three years, respectively;

(2) when the heat treatment (protein fractionation) plant for blood products at Elstree will be completed and working.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: For information on the availability of heat-treated blood products, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) on 5 February at column 527. We do not collect information on how long imported products are kept.

AIDS

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which English regional health authorities have tested blood given by donors for HTLV3 antibodies;

(2) what proportion of HTLV3 tests give false positives (a) in experimental use and (b) in routine use.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are co-ordinating the evaluation of tests as they become available to assess which will be most suitable in the National Health Service. An important feature of this evaluation is to assess the reliability of tests in terms of false positives and false negatives. No regional transfusion centre is yet routinely testing blood for the AIDS related virus.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that regional health authorities are pursuing a common policy in regard to the prevention of blood donation by acquired immune deficiency syndrome sufferers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our policy objective is to ensure that would-be donors who are at high risk of contracting AIDS do not give blood. All regional health authorities have been told to issue our leaflet, "AIDS: Important New Advice for Blood Donors", to all existing and would-be donors on an individual basis. We know of no region which is not implementing this policy.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the exact nature of the consultations he is having with retail pharmacists over their current stockholding of drugs which will no longer be available on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Supplementary Benefit

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of young people between 16 and 18 years currently in receipt of supplementary benefit through unemployment and (b) the costs of the payment of the benefit to the young unemployed.

Mr. Whitney: The latest estimate of the number of young people aged 16 and 17 years receiving supplementary benefit because of unemployment was 160,000 in December 1983. The amount of supplementary benefit paid to young unemployed people in this age group in the financial year 1983-84 was approximately £185 million.

Severe Weather Payment

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the choice of a base line of 15·5 deg. C., in the formula used by the Chief Adjudication Officer for calculation of payment of supplementary benefit for fuel in periods of exceptionally severe weather assumes that this is an adequate temperature for a claimant's home.

Mr. Whitney: An outdoor temperature of 15·5 deg. C. is the baseline used by the Meteorological Office from which to calculate an indicator of average temperatures over a period, expressed in "degree days." The trigger points which have been set to determine when claimants in particular parts of the country may be eligible for single payments in periods of exceptionally severe weather are not in any way determined by the baseline upon which degree days are calculated. Moreover, the Chief Adjudication Officer has been advised by the Meteorological Office that, using the baseline of 15·5 deg. C., the proportion by which the actual number of degree days calculated for a period exceeds the mean for that period of the year is a reasonable indicator of how much more fuel than the average for that period is required to heat a building. But that does not imply any judgment about the temperature to which anyone should actually heat their home.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if it has been decided to allow the single fuel payment for severe weather to be paid for the week ended 24 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 70]: I understand that on the basis of the criteria set out in paragraphs 7426-7459 and appendix 19 of the S Manual — a copy of which is in the Library — the Chief Adjudication Officer has decided to advise local adjudication officers that the "exceptionally severe weather" condition in Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulation 26 has not been satisfied in any part of Great Britain in the week ending 23 February 1985.

Ancillary Services (Competitive Tendering)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report details of the performance of each area health authority in England and Wales in putting ancillary services out to competitive tendering, to the latest available date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 24 January 1985, c. 525]: The great majority of health authorities have now produced satisfactory competitive tendering programmes, and regions are taking steps to obtain satisfactory programmes for the remainder. We have received reports from health authorities showing the progress they had made by 31 December 1984 in the implementation of their programmes. The details shown in the tables give the percentage of the services put out to tender by then and the estimated annual savings on work costing over £100,000 a year awarded either to private contractors or the in-house organisation.

NATIONAL FINANCE

£1 Coin

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Chancellor of th Exchequer whether he will now consider changing th appearance and size of the £1 coin to make it mor acceptable to the elderly.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no plans to alter the dimensions of the £1 coin, which were the subject of extensive research prior to the introduction of the coin, and of consultations with organisations representing amongst others the elderly.

So far as design is concerned, a Scottish version of the coin, bearing a different type on the reverse, was issued in 1984, and a Welsh version will be issued this April. Northern Irish and English versions will also be issued in subsequent years.

Inland Revenue (Final Demand and Notice Payslips)

Mr. Higgins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why Inland Revenue final demand and notice payslips, stating that steps will be taken to recover with costs, either by district or court proceedings, the sums stated if they are not paid within seven days, are sent by second class mail; if he will estimate the average delay before such documents are received by the taxpayer; why the envelopes are not date-stamped when posted by the Inland Revenue; whether any are posted after the date they are said to be issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: In common with most other Inland Revenue communications, all demand notes are issued by second-class mail. This is done in the interests of economy.

The final notice is the third notification and by the issue date the liability will have been overdue by some five weeks. But allowance is made for the time taken to deliver the notice before any follow-up action is taken.

Demand notices are computer-produced in Inland Revenue accounts offices in the evening as part of each day's record updating process and show that date as the date of issue. They are normally posted on the next working day. Envelopes containing demand notices are generally of the type known as printed postage impression, and it is normal Post Office policy not to date stamp such envelopes.

National Economic Development Council

Mr. Proctor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons are employed by the National Economic Development Council at the latest available date and in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The number of staff employed by the National Economic Development Council at 31 December 1984 was 209—full-time equivalents. The number at 31 March in each of the past five years was as follows:

Year	Staff-in-post
1981	223
1982	217½
1983	209
1984	210½

The decrease between 31 March 1980 and 31 December 1984 is 10·3 per cent. Since the peak in NEDO staff numbers in July 1979, the number of staff has fallen by 15·4 per cent.

HMSO Bookshops

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the E whether items of urgency which need to be disp the various HMSO bookshops in the United Kin sent to each bookshop by Datapost.

Mr. Hayhoe: Such items are usually dispa Datapost, though other rapid delivery facilities used.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exch if the money passed back to the private sector by of England through the purchase of commer appears in any calculation or measure of grow money supply; what are the figures for that m every quarter since the beginning of 1979; and h that measure or the amount spent on p commercial bills compares with the am overfunding for each quarter over the same peri

(2) what rate of interest is currently charge Bank of England when it agrees to purchase co bills; and what information he has as to how this c with the rates of interest currently payable deposits;

(3) what is the estimated total of commercial currently held by the Bank of England and (b) private hands;

(4) if there is any policy limit on the ability of of England to purchase commercial bills;

(5) what has been the extent of overfunding quarter since the beginning of 1979; what has extent of the Bank of England's purchase of co bills for each quarter over the same period; and w these two factors have had on interest rates and policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Mem replies as soon as possible.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exch how many occasions the Commission has taken of suspected quota evasion with multi-fibre arra supplier countries in 1983 and 1984; and, of the many have involved the suspected evasion of m arrangement quotas for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: I do not have this informatio actions of the European Commission.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exch how many occasions his Department has dete fraudulent importation of textile and clothing covered by multi-fibre arrangement quotas in th Kingdom in 1983 and 1984; and what penalti subsequently imposed on the exporting co concerned and on the exporting countries concer

Mr. Hayhoe: The information asked for in the of the question could be obtained only at a di tionate cost. The matters dealt with in the second for the Commission.

Income Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor Exchequer if he will publish figures showing obtained from each rate of income tax in each year since 1978-79 at current and constant 1978-79 prices; and if he will also show the percentage increase in revenue from the lowest rate of income tax showing 1978-79 as 100.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1985, c. 494]: I regret that it is not possible to provide the information precisely in the form requested, since income tax receipts cannot be distinguished by rate of tax. The first table shows total income tax receipts at current and constant 1978-79 prices. The second table shows the estimated percentage breakdown on the basis of tax liabilities in respect of income in each year, distinguishing tax at the basic rate and for 1978-79 and 1979-80 at the lower rate.

Fringe Benefits

Mr. Ashley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) male and (b) female employees are known to the Inland Revenue to be benefiting from their employer providing (i) a company car, (ii) an occupational health scheme, (iii) subsidised meals at work, (iv) financial help with school fees, telephone bills, wages of chauffeurs, gardeners and other domestic staff and (v) nursery facilities for their children; and what revenue is obtained by the Exchequer from taxing each of these benefits either wholly or partly.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 571]: I regret that the information requested is not available for all the benefits listed and that it is not possible to provide separate figures for male and female employees. The available information—which includes directors—is as follows:

It is estimated that there are about 1½ million company cars available for private use by directors and employees. Of these about 1·1 million attract a charge to tax under the special rules for taxing benefits-in-kind in the hands of directors and those employees currently earning at a rate of £8,500 a year or more. The tax yield for 1984-85—including the yield from taxing free fuel for private motoring—is estimated to be abut £330 million.

Approximately 625,000 people have premiums for medical insurance paid for by their employers. Of these, about 425,000 are directors and employees within the scope of the special rules for taxing benefits-in-kind. The tax yield for 1984-85 is estimated at about £20 million.

The benefit of employer subsidised canteen is exempt from charge by section 62(7) of the Finance Act 1971, provided that the benefit is available to employees generally.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the vehicle excise duty on (a) private motor cars and (b) commercial vehicles in each of the last 10 years; and what has been the total revenue from each source in each of those years.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 56]: The information requestion is shown in the table:

Fuel Duty

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the value added tax on a gallon of (a) petrol and (b) diesel in each of the last 10 years; and what has been the total revenue from each source in each of those years.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: The information is as follows:

	Amount of VAT per gallon (pence)		Total VAT revenue from road fuel
	Petrol	Derv	£ million
1974-75	15	11	140
1975-76	15	12	430
1976-77	9	9	325
1977-78	8	9	290
1978-79	9	9	280
1979-80	16	16	420

1981-82	21	21	720
1982-83	22	22	800
1983-84	24	22	875

The amount of VAT on a gallon of petrol and derv has been calculated at the rate and (typical) prices current in January each year. The total VAT revenue has been calculated from estimates of consumers' expenditure on road fuel, and takes account of relevant VAT rate changes. Expenditure on derv is included but is not available as a separate estimate.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the representations received against any further extension of value added tax on (a) books, (b) newspapers and periodicals and (c) newspaper advertising.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: Treasury Ministers have received over 2,000 representations against the imposition of VAT on books, newspapers, periodicals and newspaper advertising. It is not practicable to list all these.

Lump Sum Pensions (Taxation)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the representations received against taxing lump sum pensions.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: We have received a considerable number of representations from interested parties in the past six months. Indentifying and listing each individual representation would involve disproportionate time and cost.

North Sea Oil (Revenue)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the revenue from North sea oil operations in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 58]: Total North sea oil tax take—that is, royalties, petroleum revenue tax (including advance payments), supplementary petroleum duty and ring-fence corporation tax (before ACT set-off)—in each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1983-84 was as follows:

1979-80	2·3
1980-81	3·9
1981-82	6·5
1982-83	7·8
1983-84	8·8

DEFENCE

Belize

8. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning United Kingdom forces in Belize.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on United Kingdom defence commitments in Belize.

Mr. Stanley: British forces of around 1,600 are based in Belize to assist in the external defence of that country and with the training of the Belize Defence Force.

RAF Basic Trainer

15. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to reach a decision on the new basic trainer for the Royal Air Force.

25. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his decision in respect of the Jet Provost replacement trainer aircraft.

30. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he is going to announce a decision on the new basic training aircraft for the Royal Air Force.

57. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce which aircraft is to replace the present Royal Air Force trainer.

59. Mr. Lamble asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to announce his decision on the replacement for the Royal Air Force trainer.

Mr. Lee: I hope that a final decision between the options, which still include the possibility of refurbishing the Jet Provost, will be made shortly.

33. Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has made any changes in the specifications for the Royal Air Force basic trainer.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs).

37. Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received best and final offers for the construction of the Royal Air Force basic trainer.

Mr. Lee: Yes. Best and final offers have been received from AAC-Westland Ltd, British Aerospace PLC, Hunting Firecracker Aircraft Ltd, and Short Brothers.

53. Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to meet representatives of the companies which seek to manufacture the Royal Air Force basic trainer.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement has already met representatives from each of the four companies concerned.

Schools (Service Visits)

21. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he is making for teams of service personal to visit schools to describe the current role of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The Royal Navy and Royal Air Force have presentation teams which include schools in their programme of presentations. In addition, many schools are visited each year by service careers information staff; these visits normally include presentations on career opportunities in the services.

Royal Dockyards

22. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on discussions between his Department and relevant trade unions on the future of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend discussed this question with trade union representatives at Rosyth on 13 February. He previously held similar discussions at Devonport. Both he and I, on separate occasions, have held other meetings with the trades unions on this subject. Additionally, there will be full consultation with the unions and others before decisions are taken about the future of the dockyards.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many commercial companies were approached by Mr. Peter Levene with a view to considering a private franchise arrangement to run Her Majesty's naval dockyards.

Mr. Lee: During the course of his studies into the future organisation and management of the royal dockyards Mr. Levene approached in excess of 20 companies. These included not only firms in the defence industry sector, but other companies with the necessary managerial and financial backing to sustain an operation the size of the dockyards.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any foreign-owned companies have been in contact with his Department about a possible private takeover of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Lee: No such approaches have been made to the Department.

Defence Documents (Classification)

23. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now review the security classification of defence documents as a result of the evidence in the Ponting case.

Mr. Heseltine: No. There are already well established procedures for the security classification of defence documents.

Nuclear Depth Charges

24. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the deployment of nuclear depth charges on board Royal Navy vessels is under review.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Nuclear Weapons

26. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of nuclear artillery in British Army tactical planning.

51. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the role of nuclear artillery in British Army tactical planning.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn).

32. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the condition of the United Kingdom's current stockpile of battlefield nuclear weapons.

Mr. Stanley: The nuclear warheads for the battlefield nuclear capable weapons systems operated by the British Army in the Federal Republic of Germany are owned by the United States, which is responsible for their custody and maintenance.

43. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department will be reviewing current strategy on battlefield nuclear weapons.

Mr. Stanley: The role of battlefield nuclear weapons within NATO's strategy of deterrence and flexible response is kept under continuous review by NATO Ministers in the nuclear planning group.

46. Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the condition of the Royal Navy's stockpile of tactical nuclear weapons.

Mr. Stanley: A continuing programme for the withdrawal and dismantling of rounds from service for examination has confirmed the safety and serviceability of the Royal Navy's stockpile of tactical nuclear weapons.

48. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the modernisation of Britain's tactical nuclear weapons.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Central (Mr. McTaggart) and Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes).

54. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the acquisition by North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces of new nuclear artillery shells.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Wigan (Mr. Stott), for Preston (Mr. Thorne) and for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay).

Trident

27. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any further estimate of the likely increase in cost of the purchase of Trident as a result of the recent decline in value of the pound sterling.

Mr. Lee: As stated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 29 January, at columns 134-137, the current Trident estimate is £9,285 million at 1984-85 prices and at £1=$1·38. $1·38 is the rate used by the Department for this year's recosting of the defence programme.

In view of the public interest in exchange rates, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has made available to the Select Committee on Defence and the Public Accounts Committee an indication of the effects of changes in the exchange rates on programme costs, so that those wishing to predict the effect of possible exchange rate changes over the procurement period are able to do so. The following table shows the broad exchange rate effect of a 1 per cent. change around the following alternative exchange rates:

$=£1	£ million
1·0	57
1·1	47
1·2	39
1·3	34
1·4	29
1·5	25
1·6	22
1·7	20

The above figures are based on the assumption that the chosen rate of exchange will remain constant throughout the life of the project.

34. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a revised estimate of the cost of the proportion of the Trident project being constructed in the United States of America.

Mr. Lee: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Members for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang), for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) and for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 29 January, at columns 134-37.

The United States share of the programme is estimated to cost about $5·7 billion and represents, at the exchange rate of £1=$1·38 used for recosting this year's defence programme, some 45 per cent. of the total estimated cost.

35. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he has recently convened to discuss the Trident programme.

Mr. Lee: None. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is regularly kept in touch with progress on the programme.

41. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to place a ceiling on the cost of Trident.

Mr. Lee: Expenditure on the Trident project is subject to the normal constraints placed on the defence budget as a whole. The Government remain committed to Trident to replace Britain's strategic nuclear deterrent in the mid-1990s.

49. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present up-to-date cost to the United Kingdom of the Trident nuclear weapon.

Mr. Lee: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Members for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang), for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) and for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 29 January, at columns 134-37. The estimated cost of Trident is £9,285 million at average 1984-85 prices and at an exchange rate of £1=$1·38.

61. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence in what way he anticipates the effectiveness of Trident will be curtailed by the development of Soviet ballistic missile defences in space.

Mr. Stanley: No developments in Soviet anti-ballistic missile defences are currently foreseen which are likely to negate the deterrent effect of the Trident force within the lifetime of the system.

Departmental Staff

28. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has changed the conditions of service for senior staff in the light of the judgment in the Pontin case.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Competition Policy

29. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received representations from industry regarding his competition policy; and if he is satisfied with the workings of that policy.

Mr. Lee: My ministerial colleagues and I have a close dialogue with industry about the effects of our procurement policies, including those relating to competition. I am satisfied that our competition policy is achieving increasing value for money in defence equipment procurement and improving the competitiveness of our defence industries.

FH70 Ammunition

31. Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the order for FH70 ammunition due from Germany at the beginning of December 1984 has been delivered in whole or in part.

Mr. Lee: Deliveries of high explosive shells have not yet started, for the reasons I explained to the hon. Member in answer to his similar question on 29 January, at column 139. Deliveries of cartridges by German industry have been on schedule: late delivery of packaging by a United Kingdom contractor has delayed their dispatch to BAOR.

High-technology Research

36. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the speed of decision making in his Department and the amount of financial support available from his Department's budget for advanced high technology military research projects.

Mr. Lee: Yes, to both questions.

RAF Molesworth

38. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions he has issued to persons employed in the protection of the Molesworth base to permit a motor car occupied by persons attending a Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament rally at the base to cross the official closed area.

Mr. Heseltine: The Ministry of Defence police at RAF Molesworth are under instructions to prevent trespass on Ministry of Defence land. Rights of public access also the adjacent bridlepaths on Ministry land have been preserved but do not extend to vehicular access by private persons.

Airborne Early Warning System

39. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the progress of the airborne early warning system replacement programme.

56. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the slippage in the Nimrod programme.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Members to last week's Royal Air Force debate, when I said that this was not a procurement exercise of which either the Ministry or industry can be particularly proud. However, the first production aircraft is currently engaged in trials at RAF Waddington.

Strategic Defence Initiative

40. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence what approaches he has had from the United States Government about British participation in the strategic defence initiative; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United Kingdom, or any other European member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, will be involved in research for the American strategic defence initiative.

50. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to participate in the American strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Lee: We are continuing our close consultation with the United States Government. Any proposal for British Government involvement in the programme would obviously be a matter for future discussions, but we hope that British scientists might be involved. Under normal trading arrangements some British companies are already involved in preliminary studies relevant to the programme. Any proposed involvement by other NATO Governments would be a subject for discussion between the United States Government and the Government concerned.

European Fighter Aircraft

44. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had recently with British Aerospace plc in connection with the proposed European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement met senior representatives of British Aerospace earlier this month and discussed a variety of issues affecting the prospective European fighter aircraft programme. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Defence, and the Minister of State for Defence Procurement expect to have further discussions with the company in the near future. Senior officials of my Department are in frequent contact with the company.

Eastern Bloc (Trade)

45. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of goods bought by, or on behalf of, his Department from Eastern bloc countries during 1984.

Mr. Lee: MOD has placed no direct contracts with Eastern bloc countries in 1983-84, the last year for which statistics are available. However, as I indicated in my earlier replies to the hon. Member on 11 and 14 February, at columns 51 and 288 respectively, MOD contractors have made limited purchases of items and materials from Eastern bloc countries in circumstances where no problems of strategic dependence are involved.

Merchant Navy

47. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the defence role of the Merchant Navy.

Mr. Stanley: The contingent requirement for merchant vessels for defence purposes is kept under constant review.

Greenham Common

52. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about security arrangements at Royal Air Force, Greenham Common.

Mr. Stanley: Security at RAF Greenham Common remains under close review.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to pay an official visit to Greenham Common.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to visit RAF Greenham Common.

RAF Cottesmore

58. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the criteria for compensation against nuisance from noise for residents near to RAF Cottesmore.

Mr. Lee: The policy of my Department in respect of noise from military airfields is that noise insulation grants will be available if three conditions are satisfied:

(a) that new public works as defined in section 9(6) of the Land Compensation Act 1973 have been carried out;

(b) that, as a result of bringing these works into use, noise levels have increased.

(c) that noise levels are above a qualifying limit of an average 75dB(A) over a 12-hour period.

In addition, compensation may be paid to those in the vicinity of the airfield for injurious affection (depreciation in the value of dwellings) due directly to the effect of noise resulting from the bringing into use of the new public works.

In the case of RAF Cottesmore this policy has been applied, and a scheme was announced recently, as explained in a letter of 29 January 1985 to my hon. Friend from my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces.

W-82 Shell

60. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department will agree to American proposals to introduce the W-82 shell at the nuclear planning group meeting in March.

Mr. Heseltine: No proposals have been made for the introduction of new nuclear artillery shells into Europe.

South Pacific (Atomic Explosions)

62. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the documents which his Department has made available to the Australian Royal Commission investigating the effects of the atomic explosions in the South Pacific during the 1960s.

Mr. Lee: I remind the hon. and learned Member of the reply given in the House by the Prime Minister on 15 January, when she indicated that several hundred documents had then been released to the Australian Royal Commission. The process is continuing and all unclassified documents provided to the Royal Commission will be made available in the Public Records Office at the earliest opportunity.

63. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place between his Department and the Australian Government concerning the atomic explosions in the South Pacific during the 1950s.

Mr. Lee: Discussions between officials of my Department and officials of the Australian Department of Resources and Energy, which has responsibilities arising from the test programmes in Australia in the period from 1952-1963, take place on a regular basis. During his recent visit to London on 12 February, Senator Evans, the Minister for Resources and Energy, discussed matters arising from the test programmes with my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement.

64. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many declassified documents have been made available to the Australian Royal Commission investigating the effects of the atomic explosions in the South Pacific during the 1950s; and how many other documents relating to this period remain classified.

Mr. Lee: As indicated by the Prime Minister to the House on 15 January, at that time several hundred documents relating to the test programmes and relevant to its terms of reference had been reviewed and released to the Australian Royal Commission. While many other documents relating to the test programmes remain classified, the Royal Commission is able to have limited access to this material. The process is continuing and many more documents from the records held in various Departments, the bulk of which are unclassified, have already been released.

65. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence why 15,000 of the 20,000 participants at the atomic tests held in the South Pacific in the 1950s who were not judged to be affected by high levels of radiation have been included in the survey being conducted by the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Lee: The National Radiological Protection Board study, which was commissioned by the Ministry of Defence, in recognition of the public concern over t safety of all participants, is intended to include all tho who may have been exposed to the effects of ionisi radiation arising from the tests. To this end the names participants are being supplied to the NRPB along with t records of doses experienced. It is for NRPB to decide t criteria for inclusion in the analysis, how best to deal wi those with recorded exposure, and how the data is to analysed.

Royal Tournament (RN Displays)

66. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary State for Defence if he will give an assurance that in t consideration of economies on Royal Navy displays in t Royal Tournament and elsewhere the Admiralty Board giving due weight to their value to recruiting and to t public relations of the Royal Navy service.

Mr. Lee: Yes. I can assure my hon. Friend that t recruiting and PR value of RN displays is taken fully in account when economies are being considered.

UN Decade for Women

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defen if he is satisfied that his Department has complied wi article 63(b) of the 1975 world plan of action for t United Nations Decade for Women.

Mr. Lee: Yes. Although no specific instructions ha been issued on this matter in the armed forces, since no are needed, my right hon. Friend has appointed departmental opportunities officer, who is responsible f ensuring equal opportunity for women, in accordance wi the programme of action on women in the Civil Servi announced by the Government on 9 February 1984.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defen what steps he is taking to promote, as far as it affe matters within his responsibilities, policies designed achieve the objectives of the United Nations Decade f Women; and what budget he has allocated to this.

Mr. Lee: In keeping with the principal objectives the UN Decade for Women, the contribution made women in the services to the overall effectiveness of t armed forces has, over recent years, been steadi increasing; we expect this trend to continue. Howev there are no plans to alter the one major constraint, th women are not used in combatant roles.

Promoting equal opportunities for women civil serva in the Department and eliminating unfair discriminati are an integral part of the personnel policy of the MO A number of initiatives have been taken within t Department to implement this policy, but it is not possib to identify the costs involved separately.

Royal Irish Rangers (Ballymore)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Defen when he intends to announce his decision regarding t future training provision for Royal Irish Rangers at S Patrick's Barracks, Ballymore; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Lee: We are still considering the future traini provision for the Royal Irish Rangers in relation to S Patrick's Barracks, Ballymena and hope to make announcement shortly.

Departmental and Service Appointments

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy to give preferential consideration when making new appointments in his Department and the services to existing service personnel and civilian employees who are coming to the end of their contract of service but who wish to continue in employment.

Mr. Lee: Most established civil servants are appointed to the age of 60, and in some circumstances may serve to age 65. In filling new civilian appointments in my Department it is the normal practice first to consider staff already serving who have the necessary experience, but where such experience is also available outside the Department and there would be advantage to the Department in widening the search for a suitable appointee, external applications may be invited. In such cases, external applicants and internal candidates compete on equal terms for selection.

Appointments to service posts are made from within the armed forces, from among those best suited to fill the post, as part of the normal career progression. Where it is in the service interest, a service man may have his service extended to fill an appointment. For those leaving the armed forces there is a range of civilian posts in my Department which are particularly suitable for occupation by people with service experience, and recruitment to these is specially tailored for them.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy regarding offering employment to those existing service personnel or civilian employees who come to the end of their contract of service but who wish to continue in employment.

Mr. Lee: Procedures exist whereby members of the armed forces are able to extend their service beyond their initial period of commitment. Cases are examined against the individual's continued fitness and efficiency and the needs of the service at that time. The latter would include age, rank and career structure considerations. Where these considerations permit, it is cost-effective to retain trained personnel, but new recruitment must also continue to meet future service needs.

The contractual retiring age for the Civil Service is 60 (or 65 for a small number of staff with reserved rights). The retention of civilian staff beyond age 60 is at departmental discretion. Non-mobile staff in my Department may continue in employment to age 65 subject to health, efficiency and the existence of a suitable post. Senior staff are generally required to retire at age 60. Some junior mobile staff may continue in service beyond 60 in their existing grade or be offered re-employment in a lower grade, subject to certain conditions. Mobile staff with short reckonable service for superannuation purposes may continue in service beyond age 60, subject to health, efficiency and the existence of a suitable post, to complete a specified number of years reckonable service or until age 65, whichever is earlier. Employment beyond age 65 is permitted only in exceptional circumstances.

Military Research and Development

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence by how much United Kingdom spending on military research and development has increased in real terms in the past 10 years; what are the reasons for the increase; and what information he has on the level of spending in the other European member states of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Lee: Defence spending on research and development over the last 10 years, adjusted to 1984-85 prices, has been as follows:

	£ million
1975-76	1,829
1976-77	1,787
1977-78	1,853
1978-79	1,937
1979-80	2,036
1980-81	2,151
1981-82	2,017
1982-83	1,886
1983-84	2,001
1984-85	2,106*

* Original estimates

The level of spending on defence research and development reflects the requirements of the defence equipment programme. Properly comparable statistics are not available for other European countries. Some information is given in the "Annual Review of Government Funded R&D" based on OECD data.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the new evidence that he has of safety risks involved in the storage of radioactive waste at Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Lee: There is no new evidence of safety risks involved in the storage of radioactive waste at Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the decision was made to store radioactive waste at Rosyth dockyard for a 10-year period;

(2) on what basis he is considering storing radioactive waste at Rosyth dockyard for a 20-year period;

(3) when he will consult the trades unions concerned about his proposal for the storage of radioactive waste at Rosyth and Portsmouth dockyards for a period of 20 years.

Mr. Lee: In 1983 the MOD drew up plans for the storage at Rosyth and Devonport dockyards, for a 10-year period, of certain categories of radioactive waste arising from nuclear submarine refitting which had previously been disposed of at sea, pending the development of a permanent disposal route. At Portsmouth naval base small arisings of radioactive waste unconnected with nuclear refitting are stored pending disposal by approved routes. All these matters have been discussed with the trades unions.

Rosyth and Devonport were recently asked to draw up plans for 20 years storage to cater for any possible delay in the development of long-term disposal arrangements. When proposals on this have been formulated we will be discussing them with the unions.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the creation of a new burial ground for radioactive waste at Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Lee: None. The facilities will take the form of secure storage buildings. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the other answers I am giving him today on this subject.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the creation of a new dumping ground outside Rosyth dockyard for the radioactive waste that arises from nuclear work at Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Lee: None.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the radioactive waste arising from the decontamination of the Revenge and Resolution submarines is being stored outside Rosyth dockyard;

(2) if he plans to store the radioactive waste arising from the decontamination of the Repulse submarine within Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Lee: Radioactive waste arising from nuclear submarine decontamination is of a character which, depending on preparation methods, may be disposed of in a variety of ways. In the case of all three submarines in question, the waste has been or is to be removed from Rosyth for disposal by approved means.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the commercial companies known by his Department to have expressed interest in a private takeover of Rosyth or Plymouth dockyards on a franchise basis.

Mr. Lee: For reasons of commercial confidentiality I am not prepared to list the names of the companies concerned.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects NIREX to bring forward proposals for the burial of radioactive waste from nuclear submarines;

(2) what evidence he has considered from the United States of America about the storage of radioactive waste from its nuclear fleet;

(3) how much money his Department spent in 1984, and in the preceding five years, on research into the disposal of radioactive waste from nuclear submarines.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment said on 24 January, at columns 1146-48, the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive is at present engaged on the identification of suitable arrangements for the burial of radioactive waste. In accordance with our policy of utilising national arrangements for the disposal of such material, we would expect to make use of whatever arrangements are eventually established. Our research work has, therefore, been confined to the handling and disposal of material created by the activity of nuclear submarine refitting, at a cost of some £0·5 million since 1979. National United Kingdom research has involved full consultation with overseas authorities, including, of course, those of the United States.

Polaris Fleet

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he now has for the siting of Britain's Polaris nuclear fleet when it is decommissioned and out of service.

Mr. Lee: Plans have not yet been drawn up. No Polaris vessels are expected to go out of service before the 1990s.

HMS Fearless and Intrepid

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for D by what time he estimates that a decision must be to replace HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid ; replacements are to be available before Fearle
Intrepid come to the end of their anticipated servi

Mr. Lee: As I said in the answer I gave to m
Friend on 21 February, at column 529, we are cu examining the provision of future amphibious cap including the replacement of HMS Fearless and Intrepid once they come to the end of their planne in the mid-1990s. Our decision as to whether or replace this capability must await the completion o studies but, if agreed, would mean on present pla detailed design work would need to start in abou 1986.

General Belgrano

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for D what criteria he used in deciding which aspects advice given to Ministers by officials relating sinking of the General Belgrano, and the subs revelations, should be made public.

Mr. Heseltine: In making my speech to the Ho
18 February, I was aware of a number of allegatio had been made about ministerial handling of this and I felt that the best way to deal with these was t to the actual advice I had received at the time. W quoted from a particular document, I have placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for D
if he will place in the Library all unclassified ad Ministers relating to the sinking of the General Be and issues arising subsequently therefrom.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

F111 Jet (Crash)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for D when he expects to receive the report on the crash F111 jet near Tain bombing range in August 1984;
he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The aircraft accident investigation re this accident has now been completed. It shows t aircraft struck a bird, causing damage which difficulties in the control of the aircraft. The pilot d there was no option but to eject, which both cr safely. The accident has been judged to be attribut the bird strike.

Mr. Clive Ponting

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for D
what advice Ministers received from Sir Ewen Bro about the prosecution of Clive Ponting.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to m
hon. Friend the Prime Minister's letter of 13 Febr the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for D
(1) if he will place in the Library copies of Mr
Ponting's minutes of 4 April 1984 together w proposed draft reply to the hon. Member for Linl

(Mr. Dalyell) and the replies received by Mr. Ponting to his minutes and draft reply from (a) Mr. Garnier, Director of Naval Operations and Trade, (b) Mr. Hoddinott, (for) Director of Naval Warfare and (c) Mr. Pender-Cudlip, Head of D18;

(2) what advice was obtained (a) by Mr. Ponting (b) by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces and (c) by the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the classification of the information contained in the draft reply prepared by Mr. Ponting and circulated on 4 April 1984; and if he will place in the Library copies of any such advice;

(3) what advice was offered by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces concerning the classification of the information contained in the draft reply prepared by Mr. Ponting and circulated by him on 4 April 1984.

Mr. Heseltine: I explained to the House in the debate on 18 February, at column 738, that, in the deplorable circumstances in which the Government found themselves it had been decided to reveal advice given to Ministers by officials and where such advice was quoted I would make available the full text to the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs and place copies in the Library of the House. The documents requested do not fall into this category and I do not intend to place copies of them in the Library. I assume that the purpose of these questions is to establish that Mr. Ponting changed his view about what information could be given to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) in reply to his letter to me of 19 March between his original submission of 29 March and 12 April. I myself explained this fully in the debate and do not dispute it. Mr. Ponting was the only person who advised me on the classification of his draft reply. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces minuted me to point out that Mr. Ponting's draft was inconsistent with the terms of the letter sent by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 12 April, but he did not comment on the classification of the draft. The reasons for the terms of the reply I sent to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 18 April were also explained in my speech to the House at columns 745-46.

Correspondence (Meetings)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all meetings which took place in his Department between 4 April and 18 April 1984 which discussed possible replies to the letter of the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) of 19 March; and if he will place in the Library copies of the minutes of any such meetings.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

WALES

Population Statistics

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh counties in order of percentage growth in electorate since 1979; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Growth in local government electorate by county since 1979

	Electorate		Change 1979-84
	1979	1984	Number	Per cent.
Clwyd	288,608	304,304	15,696	5·4
Powys	81,823	86,089	4,266	5·2
Gwynedd	173,118	179,830	6,712	3·9
Dyfed	250,571	260,195	9,624	3·8
Gwent	324,047	333,435	9,388	2·9
Mid Glamorgan	399,332	408,219	8,887	2·2
West Glamorgan	279,393	284,783	5,390	1·9
South Glamorgan	286,908	291,657	4,749	1·7

Ministerial Duties

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many overnight stays Welsh Office Ministers spent in Wales during the month of January.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 25 February 1985, at column 39.

Mental Illness Services (Dyfed)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received the final report from the review group on mental illness services in Dyfed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I received the final report of the review group late in January, and I have discussed it with the chairman, Lady Crawshay, in company with the other members of the group. The report points to what has been achieved over the last two and a half years by the three statutory authorities and their staff, working in co-operation. It also emphasises that these improvements provide the basis for further challenging work, which will be necessary if the full potential of the changes made is to be realised. There is now a strategic plan for the development of services agreed by all three authorities, which is itself a measure of the commitment to sustaining the momentum for improvement that now exists. It is further evidence of the quality of services at St. David's that it has recently obtained conditional approval from the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for a reintroduction of nurse training on the basis of a demanding new syllabus.

I shall be in touch with the chairman of the three authorities to emphasise the importance I attach to the review group's conclusions and recommendations. I welcome and endorse them all. My Department will k abreast of progress in implementing the ser developments planned for the coming years. There wil opportunities for me to take stock in advance of the r planned study of mental illness services in Dyfed to conducted by the National Health Service Health Advis Service, in 1987.

A copy of the review group's final report has b placed in the Library.

Departmental Cash Limit

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wale he has anything to add to his answer of 13 Febru Official Report, columns 188-9, concerning the cash li on class XVI, Vote 1 for the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Excluding the Spr Supplementary Estimate (£1,000) the cash limit for Cl XVI, Vote 1 is £741,489,000. I regret that, due to arithmetical error, this was wrongly quoted £733,489,000 in the answer which I gave to my h Friend on 13 February. Prior to the reduction £10,573,000 which I announced on that date, the relev cash limit was £752,062,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Home Department (1) what action has been taken by Department with regard to the incidence of acqui immune deficiency syndrome in prisons;

(2) what medical advice has been given to prison st about acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Mellor: The Director of Prison Medical Servi has been keeping in close touch with the Department Health and Social Security on the question of AIDS a there have been regular and frequent exchanges information and advice. Advice was issued by the direc of prison medical officers in March 1984 and again earl this month. Information about AIDS has also been ma available to staff, and further guidance for staff a inmates has now been issued. Copies of this advice ha been placed in the Library of the House.

Representatives of the Directorate of Prison Medi Services are visiting establishments where there particular concern about AIDS. Every effort is being ma to allay the anxieties of staff, their trade uni representatives, and inmates about the disease.

Controlled Drugs (Security)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Home Department what steps he has taken in response the 34 recommendations contained in the 1983 report the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on t security of controlled drugs.

Mr. Mellor: Since publication of the report November 1983, a wide range of organisations have be consulted and invited to comment on its recommen tions. We have been analysing their responses and are n examining, in consultation with other Departments, t detailed implications of the report's recommendatio The Government's conclusions will be announced short

Overseas Students

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will bring up to date the information regarding Syrian, Iranian, Iraqi and Libyan nationals resident in the United Kingdom given by the Minister of State in reply to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 24 July 1984, Official Report, columns 585-86.

Mr. Waddington: According to provisional figures the total numbers of these nationals granted asylum and leave to remain on an exceptional basis in 1984 were as follows:

	Asylum	Exceptional leave to remain
Iran	295	502
Iraq	48	60
Syria	3	1

Provisional figures for the period 1 July 1984 to 31 December 1984 show that 33 Iranians, 11 Iraqis and one Libyan originally given leave to enter as students were granted asylum and a further 107 Iranians and 16 Iraqis were granted leave to remain on an exceptional basis. No Syrians originally admitted as students were granted asylum or exceptional leave to remain during this period.

Records for earlier years are now being computerised and I regret that this has shown that the figures previously given for the numbers granted asylum (with or without refugee status), including the figures I gave in reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 24 July 1984 were too high. According to provisional information from the computerised records the numbers granted asylum (with or without refugee status) in the period 1979-83 were as follows:

Country	Number
Iran	4,336
Iraq	231
Libya	73
Syria	16

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that his Department's inspectors carry out sufficient visits to premises where experiments on animals are carried out, especially those premises operated by the Royal College of Surgeons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. The latest statistics show that in 1983 members of the Home Office Cruelty to Animals Inspectorate made 5,816 visits (mainly unannounced) to departments within the 508 places registered with the Home Office as premises where experiments on live animals could be carried out. ("Statistics of Experiments on Living Animals Great Britain 1983": Cmnd. 9311). The Royal College of Surgeons premises at Downe were visited twice in 1984 by an inspector.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inspections have been carried out by his Department's inspectors at premises where experimentation on animals has been carried out during the last five years; on how many of these occasions such inspections revealed a cause for complaint; and what action was then taken as a result thereof.

Mr. Mellor: The number of inspections ca the Home Office Cruelty to Animals Inspector past five years is given in table 24 of the "S Experiments on Living Animals Great Brit (Cmnd. 9311). A copy is in the Library of Reports compiled by inspectors on their visits confidence to the Secretary of State. A s infringements of the Cruelty to Animals Act conditions of licences issued under the Act is published statistics (paragraphs 12-16).

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of S Home Department if he will increase the numb carried out by his Department's inspectors used by the Royal College of Surgeons experimentations, in the light of their recent co cruelty.

Mr. Mellor: The case did not concern subject to these statutory controls; but I underst Royal College of Surgeons is to appeal conviction and it would therefore be improper make any comment which might have a bea case.

PRIME MINISTER

Manchester International Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Min gave any consideration to flying from the Unit America into Manchester international airpor when it was learnt that London's Heathrow likely to be non-operational due to freezing fog to avoid delay, she did not seek to fly into M

The Prime Minister: Yes. I considered Manchester or Prestwick. But subsequent chec Royal Air Force showed that Heathrow would the morning of 22 February and that I could fly only minimal loss of working time.

Legal Aid

Mr. Galley asked the Prime Minister whet any plans to reorganise the work of assessing of applicants for civil legal aid which is undertaken by the Department of Health Security.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. F Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Soci and I have agreed that the responsibility for as means of applicants for civil legal aid should fo in Scotland be transferred to the Scottish Home Department. The transfer will take place on 1 A

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State Services has also decided that assessments for E Wales would be more efficiently carried out office rather than, as now, in 11 loc Accordingly, starting as soon as possible after work will be transferred gradually to one office which will form part of the North Fylde ce complex of the Department of Health and Soci

In both cases staff not wishing to transfer wil posts in due course in other local offices of within reasonable daily travelling distance.

ENERGY

Power Cuts

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many power cuts of more than one hour's duration there have been in England and Wales since October 1984.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been no power cuts because of shortage of generating capacity, though electrical faults do occur from time to time which can cause disruptions of supplies in local areas. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member with details of such interruptions that have occurred since October 1984 and have lasted over 1 hour.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently being taken to supply food for Ethiopian refugees in the Sudan (a) by the United Kingdom and (b) by the members of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Raison: The figures available for commitments of emergency food aid to Sudan do not distinguish between aid for Sudanese and aid provided for refugees, except where the intended channel is UNHCR; and, in the latter case, do not distinguish between Ethiopian and other refugees.

The Government have this year provided 15,000 tonnes of grain through the World Food Programme, which has been delivered to Port Sudan, and pledged a further 30,000 tonnes, including about 13,000 tonnes of wheatflour for UNHCR's programmes in Sudan.

The European Community has made grants of £4·5 million to UNHCR to buy food and other supplies, and is supplying 25,000 tonnes of cereals through international and voluntary organisations, and discussing with the Government of Sudan the distribution of a further 26,000 tonnes.

Other member states of the Community have so far pledged a total of 83,000 tonnes of cereals.

ENVIRONMENT

Lead in Paint

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to fulfil the recommendation made by the Royal Commission on environmental pollution in 1983 to the effect that the maximum permitted concentration of lead in paint for household use should be progressively reduced to a level comparable to that applied in the United States of America, and that in the meantime all paint containing more lead than this should carry a warning label.

Mr. Waldegrave: Recent research carried out for the Department at the Building Research Establishment has indicated that the removal of lead-based driers from paint has only a marginal effect in lengthening drying times for a few types of paint.

I have placed copies of a summary of the results in the Library, and will also deposit the final report as soon as it is available.

Following discussions with the Government, agreem has been reached with the Paintmakers' Associatio Great Britain that from January next year lead will ceased to be added by member companies to white g primer and undercoat paints—which account for 60 cent. of solvent-based paint sales—and lead will c to be added to all coloured gloss paints and varnishes July 1987, an advance of one year on the Paintmal Association's earlier timetable.

Gloss paint with no deliberately added lead w contain only trace elements of lead and would comply the United States limit of 0·06 per cent. by weight in dry film. (About one-third of solvent-based paints varnishes already contain no added lead; emulsion pa which constitute about 75 per cent. of total decor sales in the United Kingdom are water-based and never contained lead additives).

The Paintmakers' Association has also agreed introduce as soon as practicable an appropriate labe identify paints with no added lead.

I am grateful to the Paintmakers' Association for initiative. Its members account for 90 per cent. of Un Kingdom paint manufacture by volume. The agreem should encourage companies who are not associa members, and any importers, to follow the same route the Government are exploring the possibility of a Un Kingdom initiative to seek to amend current EC legisla in this field.

"Brixton Cares for Kids"

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Environment in whose ownership and control are premises acquired for Brixton Cares for Kids through inner city partnership scheme; when funding ceased that project and why; when funding will be resumed; what lessons are to be drawn from this project.

Sir George Young: The premises acquired for Bri Cares for Kids are owned by Lambeth council. The grant payment under the urban programme was m when the project dissolved itself in September 1984. In circumstances, the question of resuming funding does arise.

The inquiry referred to in my answer of 14 Noven at columns 283-84, has yet to complete its worl understand that Lambeth council has undertaken to k the hon. Member informed of developments.

Olympic Games

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Environment whether Her Majesty's Government has any consultations about holding the 1992 Olympic Ga in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Gentleman to answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumf (Sir H. Monro) on Monday 25 February.

Greater London Record Office

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Environment what arrangements he proposes to make the future of the Greater London Record Office in event of the Local Government Bill becoming law.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Secre of State has today written to the lord mayor of corporation of the City of London setting out arrangements for the City on behalf of Londoners as a whole to take over and run the Greater London Record Office, subject to parliamentary approval for the Local Government Bill. The lord mayor has agreed with the proposal. The arrangement follows discussions between the Department of the Environment and the corporation. It means that the GLRO collection can be maintained intact in the hands of local government and in the charge of the corporation, which has considerable expertise and experience on archieve matters. I am placing a copy of the exchange of letters between the Secretary of State and the lord mayor in the Library.

Reservoirs Act 1975

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made to implement the Reservoirs Act 1975.

Mr. Gow: The Reservoirs Act 1975 is being implemented in stages. Under stage one, essential enabling regulations and regulations covering the appointment of new panels of engineers to carry out the various functions prescribed for qualified civil engineers under the Act came into force throughout England, Wales and Scotland on 8 November 1983, and 20 December 1984 respectively.

Under stage two, further regulations were made on 13 February bringing into effect on 1 April 1985 everywhere in England, Wales and Scotland, except in Greater London and English metropolitan counties those provisions in the 1975 Act:

(i) transferring responsibility for reservoir safety from the district councils to the upper tier;

(ii) providing for local authorities to set up registers of reservoirs; take action in the event of an emergency; make reports to the Secretary of State about steps taken to ensure compliance with the Act; and requiring reservoir undertakers to provide further information about and to carry out more regular monitoring of their reservoirs;

(ii) providing for non-compliance with the Act to be a criminal offence.

To enable local authorities to establish the local registers, reservoir undertakers are required to provide authorities by 1 January 1986 with information about their reservoirs. Local authorities must take steps to inform undertakers of this requirement by 1 July 1985.

The remaining provisions of the Act mainly relating to supervision of a reservoir operations by qualified civil engineers will be implemented later in the third and final stage. The date at present proposed is 1 April 1986.

Implementation in Greater London and English metropolitan counties will follow Parliament's decision on the future of local government in those areas. The Local Government Bill now before Parliament provides for the transfer to the London borough and metropolitan district councils of the functions which the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils would have assumed under the Reservoirs Act 1975. The intention is that the stage two provisions referred to above will be brought into effect in these areas on 1 April 1986 and the third stage provisions on 1 April 1987.

Those local authorities specified in the Reservoirs (Safety Provisions) Act 1930 can continue to use the powers available in the Act until it is repealed. The present intention is to repeal it in all areas except the metropolitan areas in England on 1 April 1986, and in those areas on 1 April 1987.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the sums which (a) the Greater London council, (b) each of the London borough councils, (c) the Common Council of the City of London, (d) each of the metropolitan county councils and (e) each of the metropolitan district councils have been entitled to spend under (i) section 137 and (ii) section 142 of the Local Government Act 1972 during each of the last six years.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 62]: There is no equivalent limit on expenditure under section 142 to that contained in section 137. The information in respect of expenditure entitlements under section 137 is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Oxford University

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grants were made from public funds to the University of Oxford for each year since 1978-79, in constant 1983-84 prices and in cash terms, excluding the element of the grant paid since 1982-83 to compensate for the loss of fee income from the reduction in tuition fees for home students.

Sir Keith Joseph: Recurrent and capital grants made available to the University of Oxford on the advice of the University Grants Committee and the Computer Board in each financial year since 1978-79, excluding elements to compensate for the loss of fee income from the reduction of the home undergraduate tuition fee in 1982-83 and its freezing in 1983-84, were as follows. (The real terms figures are the cash figures adjusted to a 1985-86 base, using GDP deflators which provide an estimate of the average movement of prices across the economy as a whole.)

	University Grants Committee recurrent	Computer Board recurrent	University Grants Committee capital	Computer Board capital	Total Cash	Real terms
1978-79	19,769,893	732,210	1,962,901	1,332,359	23,797,363	40,412,595
1979-80	23,862,000	781,608	2,608,063	224,328	27,475,999	39,912,266
1980-81	31,429,163	495,536	2,987,961	460,064	35,372,724	43,322,381
1981-82	32,558,053	423,956	3,344,824	253,278	36,580,111	40,735,096
1982-83	34,311,545	486,889	3,160,823	49,980	38,009,237	39,687,212
1983-84	37,404,168	517,303	3,163,190	141,155	41,225,816	41,225,816

These figures are not entirely comparable from year to year because of various other changes in funding arrangements during the period.

Maintained Schools

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research has been carried out by his Department into any correlation between increases in the incomes of those employed in the education service and the quality of the education provided in maintained schools.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department has not conducted research into this specific correlation.

Residential Special Schools (Working Party)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the current membership of the joint working party (residential special schools) indicating by whom they are appointed, how often they meet, and who convenes their meetings;

(2) what are the responsibilities, functions and duties of the joint working party (residential special schools); and whether the results of its considerations are enshrined in statutory instruments.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that the joint working party (residential special schools) operates under the auspices of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of County Councils, from whom I suggest the hon. Member seeks further information. This is not a matter for my right hon. Friend. The working party's recommendations are not enshrined in statutory instruments.

Mathematics

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional measures he intends to introduce to improve the standard of mathematics in secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Government have introduced a range of measures in the light of the Cockcroft report, and will continue to take action to disseminate and encourage the implementation of the report's findings. In addition, support under the education support grant scheme will be provided, from September 1985, for additional mathematics advisers and advisory teachers in almost all LEAs. The introduction of the GCSE examination will encourage further improvements in the teaching of mathematics.

Burnham Committee (Replacement)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to seek to replace the Burnham committee with an alternative negotiating body.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have no such plans.

Overseas Students

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will bring up to date the information relating to Syrian, Libyan, Iranian and Iraqi students given in reply to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 24 July 1984, Official Report, column 548.

Mr. Brooke: Approximate numbers studying in the United Kingdom in universities, FE colleges and some private sector colleges in 1983-84 were:

	Number
Iran	2,400
Iraq	1,900
Libya	1,800
Syria	300

This information will be contained in the British Council booklet "Statistics of Overseas Students in the UK 1983-84" currently under preparation; a copy will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Teacher-Pupil Statistics

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list average teacher-pupil statistics for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is as follows:

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list average teachers' salaries for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Pupils (Cost)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list average expenditure per pupil for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Higher Education (Sabbatical Leave)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students are currently at institutions of higher education on sabbatical leave to fulfil students union commitments whilst in receipt of local education authority grants; and what is the annual cost of these sabbatical students.

Mr. Brooke: Students on sabbatical leave to fulfil student union commitments are not eligible for mandatory grants. They are paid by their student unions out of public funds allocated to the unions by the institutions concerned. Information about the total numbers and costs of student union sabbatical posts is not available, although the last known survey of universities showed that in 1979 80 per cent. had five sabbatical officers or fewer and 60 per cent. had four or fewer.

Primary Schools

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the primary schools built before 1900 currently in use in Cornwall, together with their original year of construction.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not maintain such a list.

Open University

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is ready to publish the report of the visiting committee to the Open University; and if he will now announce the Open University grant for 1985 and the indicated grant for 1986-87.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now make a statement on the Open University's budgetary allocation for 1985 and the provisional allocation for 1986 and 1987.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have considered the Open University visiting committee's report. A copy of it has been sent to the university with a letter notifying its grants for 1985 and indicated grants for 1986 and 1987. Copies of the report and the notification of grants have been placed in the Library.

Under-fives

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research into the education of under-fives is currently being supported by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have asked Professor Margaret Clark of Birmingham University to carry out a critical evaluation of research into the education of under-fives undertaken over recent years — and she has agreed. There is now a very substantial amount of research findings available in this field and there is a need, which I believe is shared by academics, practitioners, administrators and elected members of LEAs, to take stock and assess the validity and significance of the results of this research. I should emphasise that this does not imply any expansion of expenditure provision for the education of this age group: the objectives are to assist those who wish to refer to existing research, to guide future policy on research in this area, and ultimately to facilitate better deployment of existing resources. Professor Clark has been asked to let the Department have her report by September 1986. She alone will be personally responsible for the judgments and opinions expressed.

TRANSPORT

Holidair

71. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the licensing system operated by the Civil Aviation Authority following the licensing of Holidair now backed by former directors of Budget Holidays.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Transac Services Ltd. which now trades as Holidair, has been licensed as a tour operator by the Civil Aviation Authority since 1978. The authority is aware that two people formerly connected with the Budget Group are now involved in Holidair. If a change of ownership takes place the authority will have to consider, in accordance with Regulation 4(3) of the Civil Aviation (Air Travel Organisers' Licensing) Regulations 1972, as amended, whether the new holder of the licence is a fit person, and has resources and financial arrangements adequate for discharging his obligation. If the authority is not satisfied, it has a duty to suspend or revoke the licence.

Trains (Hazardous Materials)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to require that trains carrying hazardous materials are not permitted to pass through tunnels in excess of 100 m in length at the same time as passenger trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. This would place an unwarranted restriction on the movement of hazardous goods by rail, which has a good safety record in this country. The inspector inquiring into the derailment and subsequent fire in Summit tunnel last December is, however, examining the possible need for more control of the movement of hazardous goods trains through tunnels and this question will be addressed in his published report. British Rail already regulates trains passing through the Severn tunnel so as to ensure that passenger trains are not in the tunnel at the same time as trains conveying hazardous goods.

London Regional Transport (Bus Services)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact on London Regional Transport's bus services due to congestion caused by the increased number of coaches operating into central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand from LRT that it is keeping the situation under review. If my hon. Friend has any particular problem in mind I shall be glad to discuss it with him.

Coach Services (Central London)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner on the impact on rush-hour traffic congestion of the increased number of coach services operating into central London.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no plans at present to call for such a report.

EMPLOYMENT

Illegal Child Employment

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers were convicted of illegal child employment offences in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Responsibility for the enforcement of legislation restricting the employment of children in industrial undertakings, such as factories, construction sites, mines and quarries etc., and in agriculture falls to the Health and Safety Executive. The numbers of employers prosecuted by HSE inspectors and convicted for illegal child employment offences are:

	Number
1980	8
1981	4
1982	3
1983	*3
1984	*1

* Provisional.

Youth Training Scheme and Community Programm

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State Employment whether the Manpower Servic Commission has issued instructions to its staff preventi disclosure of accidents occurring on the youth scheme a community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State Employment if he is satisfied with the operation of t community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes, although we are continua seeking means of improving the effectiveness a efficiency of the programme.

Information Technology and Telecommunications

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State Employment whether he anticipates that there will b growth in demand for skilled staff in (a) informati technology and (b) telecommunications in the n decade; and what steps are being taken to meet a additional requirements.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's strategy directed towards encouraging industry to assume its pro responsibilities for identifying and meeting its manpov requirements. Our support for employers' training effo will be focused on those skills in real demand, particula in information and new technologies. The first two repo of the information technology skills shortage committe including representatives of Government, industry a education indicate a growing demand for staff w information technology skills, and made recommendatio for action. Its final report is due to be published short

International Labour Organisation

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State Employment what was the date on which the denunciati by Her Majesty's Government of International Labo Organisation Convention No. 95 on labour clauses (pub contracts) was registered by the International Labo Organisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United Kingdom denunciation of International Labour Conventions No. concerning labour clauses in public contracts and No. concerning the protection of wages were registered by t International Labour Office on 20 September 1982 and September 1983 respectively. Each denunciation to effect 12 months after its registration.

Small Textile Firms

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State Employment what were the main conclusions t emerged from the campaign conducted by the Wag Inspectorate and the Health and Safety Executiv Factory Inspectorate concerning working conditions small textile firms; and whether he will make a stateme

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The object of the campaign w to check the extent to which small firms in the textile a clothing industries were complying with health and saf regulations and, where, appropriate, with the le minimum wages council rates of pay and conditions. T three areas selected by the Health and Safety Executive's Factory Inspectorate and the Wages Inspectorate for investigation were Leicester, the east end of London and the West Midlands. Reports on the outcome of their inquiries are published today and I have placed copies in the Library.

In general, the reports show that the majority of the small firms covered were complying with their legal obligations under the health and safety and wages council regulations. Although contraventions of the law were discovered, most were of a relatively minor nature and were often due to ignorance of the detailed requirements of the law. A major lesson of the campaign is that the relevant inspectorates should place a greater emphasis on their role in supporting small employers in the clothing and textile trades by helping them to realise the positive advantages of ensuring that their premises are safe and meet health standards and that they are properly registered with the appropriate authorities. This reinforces the Government's policy of helping small businesses prosper by providing them with good advice and the right information.

Working Children

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the recent report by the Low Pay Unit on working children, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have nothing to add at present to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 1 February 1985 at column 329.

Chemical Installations (Safety)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied that a disaster similar to that which occurred in Bhopal could not happen in Scotland; and if he will make a statement as to safety measures undertaken and in force.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 19]: No installation in Scotland is in any way comparable with the Union Carbide factory at Bhopal.

There is a comprehensive legal framework in this country for the control of hazardous installations. Under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 there is a legal obligation on employers to conduct their undertakings in such a way as to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that employees or members of the public are not exposed to risks to their health and safety.

The general provisions of this Act are further strengthened by provisions in the Notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations 1982 and the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984.

These regulations are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the average earnings of workers employed in the United Kingdom's textile and clothing industries in the years 1979 to 1984; and if he will compare the increase in earnings against changes in the retail price index and increases in the earnings of all employees during this period.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 128]: The following table sets out information from the new earnings survey on the average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult manual employees in the textile and clothing industry, the percentage change in average earnings between 1979 and 1984 for this group and for all employees and the percentage change in retail prices over the same period.

	*Textiles and clothing industry	Male manual employees aged 21 and over†	Female manual employees aged 18 and over†

* Order XIII and minimum list headings 441-9 of Standard Industrial Classification, 1968. Figures for 1983 and 1984 have been adjusted from the Standard Industrial Classification 1980 to a comparable basis.

† For 1983 and 1984 figures based on employees on adult rates have been adjusted to the earlier definition.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment what warnings are carried on containers of fluoride for addition to water supplies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 129]: The majority of water authorities use hydrofluorosilicic acid solutions for fluoridation, though some limited use is made of sodium fluorosilicate.

Hydrofluorosilicic acid solutions — also known as fluorosilicic acid or fluorsilicic acid — are usually delivered in bulk by road tankers subject to the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981. The tanker would need to be placarded to warn of the corrosive properties of the solution, unless diluted to a safe level. The placarding would include the hazard warning sign for a corrosive substance together with other information for the emergency services in the event of a fire, spillage or other accident.

Sodium fluorosilicate, a powder, is usually delivered in bags. These have to be labelled in accordance with the Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations, 1984, to show the toxic properties of the undiluted substance. The label would carry a danger symbol and the risk phrase "toxic by inhalation, in contact with the skin and if swallowed"; it would also include prescribed safety advice.

These precautions are aimed at safety in conveyance and use of the substances named. They have no bearing on water supplies treated with these substances.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East given in the Official Report, 25 July 1984, column 661, on fatal accidents on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 129]: The following is a list of fatalities on the youth training scheme since 1 February 1984:

Date of fatality	Cause of fatality
27 July 1984	Road traffic accident
22 August 1984	Road traffic accident
24 September 1984	Dumper truck overturned

A further fatality, on 12 February 1985, has been notified to the Manpower Services Commission. An investigation, to determine the exact cause of the incident and whether it is reportable, is being carried out by the local enforcing authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cleaning Services

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Lord Privy Seal how much was spent in 1982-83 and 1983-84 and how much is due to be spent in 1984-85 on cleaning services for the House.

Mr. Biffen: The costs of cleaning services are in part borne by the House itself and in part by the Property Services Agency. The figures for the costs borne by the House are:

1982-83	255,468
1983-84	259,366
1984-85	273,629

Cleaning costs borne by the Property Services Agency for the whole parliamentary estate, including the House of Lords and all parliamentary outbuildings, are:

1982-83	279,222
1983-84	358,793
*1984-85	380,000

* Estimate.

A detailed breakdown of these latter costs between the two Houses is not available; but on a rough proportional basis some 66 per cent. can be attributed to the House of Commons.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Short Brothers Ltd.

72. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of St for Northern Ireland whether recent increases productivity achieved by Short Brothers Ltd. accord w the trend for British industry in general.

Dr. Boyson: Short's productivity has shown continuing increase in recent years, and, so far as it possible to make such comparisons, in line with t productivity improvement of British industry in genera

Industrial Development Board

Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for Northe Ireland what was the total sum of money spent by t Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland promotion and marketing for the financial years 1982- and 1983-84; and what is the expected spending for t financial year 1984-85.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

1982-83	2,018
1983-84	4,257
1984-85	*3,771

* Estimate.

Leisure/Recreation Centres

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of Sta for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply of 7 Februar Official Report, columns 651-53, what is the estimate trading loss or profit at each of these leisure/recreatio centres; and what is the equivalent in pence per pound rates in the respective district councils.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is not hel centrally and could be obtained only at disproportiona cost.

Churches

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State fo Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Repo a list of those churches which were examined and did no meet the criteria used to decide which churches should b listed as historic churches; and if he will indicate to whic denomination they belonged.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested could b provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State fo Northern Ireland if he will indicate the criteria used t decide which churches should be listed churches i Northern Ireland at (a) A. (b) B+ and (c) B.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department of th Environment's architects survey buildings of specia architectural or historic interest and only after consultatio with the Historic Buildings Council does the Departmen decide which buildings are to be listed and placed in on of the following summarised categories:

Category A — These are buildings of national importance or fine, little altered examples of some particular date or style. Buildings placed in this category are of such importance that their preservation is a matter of top priority.

Category B+ — These are buildings which are regarded as outstanding in a local context. Although they are of specific interest they do not warrant inclusion in the top category. Approximately 10 per cent. of "B" buildings would fall into this particular category.

Category B — These are buildings of local importance or good examples of some period or style which may have been somewhat altered or are of lesser interest. To be graded category "B" does not mean that the building is of necessity a large one or a very famous one.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

TUC (General Secretary)

13. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend met Trades Union Congress leaders, including the general secretary, on 12 March 1984 when the subjects discussed included industrial restructuring, Government support for research and development, regional policy as well as industrial policy in the European Community.

20. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; and what matters were discussed.

23. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; and what matters were discussed.

24. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; and what matters were discussed.

26. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; and what matters were discussed.

37. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend met Trades Union Congress leaders, including the general secretary, on 12 March 1984 when the subjects discussed included industrial restructuring, Government support for research and development, regional policy as well as industrial policy in the European Community.

Footwear Industry

15. Mr. Budgen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current state of the footwear industry.

Mr. Trippier: The recovery of the domestic footwear market last year has contributed to a stabilisation of employment in the United Kingdom industry over recent months. Exports showed a promising growth of 7 per cent. in the first nine months.

Bankruptcies

16. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will conduct a study of the marginal effects of higher interest rates on the level of company bankruptcies.

Mr. Pattie: No. Many factors contribute to insolvencies and a study would be unable to isolate one particular marginal factor.

Car Prices (European Community)

17. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to reduce the disparity in car prices in the European Economic Community member states.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Commission has now adopted a regulation which should help to ensure that consumers benefit from a genuine common market for motor vehicles in which they are free to buy, across geographical boundaries if necessary, from whichever source offers the most favourable terms. This should contribute to a continuing erosion of price differentials.

Direct Broadcasting by Satellite

18. Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role he envisages for his Department in the introduction of direct broadcasting by satellite in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pattie: The Department's role in this area is to encourage profitable development, investment and services which will position the British space and electronics industries and programme makers well in future markets.

Advanced Technology

19. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he will provide to industry in 1985-86 for research and development in advanced technology.

Mr. Pattie: Last November I announced a review of the Department's support for industrial research and development. Obviously I cannot anticipate the outcome of this review, but an announcement will be made shortly.

Wine Labelling

21. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce regulations to improve consumer protection regarding the descriptions on the labels distinguishing English wine from British wine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have no evidence that existing legislation on trade descriptions is inadequate to protect the interests of consumers in this area.

Small Firms

22. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the net number of small businesses established in the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for 1980 to 1983 were published in an article in British Business, copies of which were placed in the Library. These show that in 1983 there was a net surplus of 42,564 businesses.

49. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what he is doing to encourage small firms to accept equity injections rather than loans to cover their needs for risk capital.

Mr. Trippier: The business expansion scheme continues to provide a major incentive to the development of equity finance and I am looking at ways of encouraging small firms to make full use of this source of funds. In addition, the importance of equity finance to small firms has been stressed in the help for growing businesses seminars which my Department has sponsored over the past year.

51. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has yet received the conclusions of the interdepartmental scrutiny of the administrative and legislative burdens placed on small firms.

Mr. Trippier: I have received the central report of the scrutiny team, based on studies in seven Departments of regulatory burdens on small businesses. I am considering how this should be followed up and will make a further announcement in due course.

56. Mr. Carttiss asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will make a statement about the scrutiny of administrative and legislative burdens on small firms.

Mr. Trippier: I have received the central report of the scrutiny team based on studies in seven Departments of regulatory burdens on small businesses. I am considering how this should be followed up and will make a further announcement in due course.

Plessey Company

25. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the Plessey company.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has had no recent discussions with the Plessey company.

Schoolchildren (Work Experience)

27. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that schoolchildren receive first hand experience of the working of industry and commerce.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is involved in promoting such experience through a range of projects and organistions, notably the schools curriculum industry project, project trident and the science and technology regional organisations.

Schools (Computer Facilities)

28. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide further support for the expansion of computer facilities in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Butcher: The provision of computers in schools is primarily the responsibility of local education authorities. My Department is considering, however, whether to provide any further assistance to LEA schools to build on the success of the micros in s scheme.

Regional Assistance

29. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of St Trade and Industry how many applications for re assistance have been received in the newly desi assisted area in the west midlands.

Mr. Butcher: As at 15 February the West Mi regional office had received more than 4,300 in about regional selective assistance, generating a t 185 applications for grant.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

30. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for and Industry what representations he has received the Silberston report on the multi-fibre arrangemer

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Frie Minister for Trade has received representations on be future of the multi-fibre arrangement and on the Silb report from companies in the textile and clothing ind representatives of employers and employees i industry,consumers', importers' and retailers' org tions, retailers and a number of hon. Members.

CBI (Chairman)

31. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for and Industry when he last met the chairman Confederation of British Industry; and what matter discussed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend and the president and director general of the CBI on 29 Ja 1985. Among the subjects discussed were the Budget representations published on 23 January.

Privatisation

32. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for and Industry whether the performance of ente returned to the private sector in which his Departme retained a financial interest has improved or worse

Mr. Pattie: The performance of those ente returned to the private sector has justified expectations. The general pattern is increased turnov higher profits leading to increased investment.

British Tourist Authority

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trad Industry if he will make it his policy that the budget British Tourist Authority is at least maintained i terms at its 1981 level.

Mr. Butcher: The Government fully recogni important contribution and potential of the to industry to the growth of the United Kingdom ec and employment. My Department will, therefore, s encourage the development, growth and interna competitiveness of the United Kingdom tourism ind The future level of the British Tourist Authority's gr aid will be set with this objective in mind and with to the wider context of the need to contain the gro public expenditure generally.

Retail Grocery Trade

34. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Trade and industry if he will estimate the share of the retail grocery trade in the United Kingdom likely to be commanded by the six largest grocery chains by 1990.

Mr. Trippier: I am not prepared to estimate future market shares, which will depend on the uncertain effects of many factors.

Regional Industrial Development Grant

35. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received following his recent decision to declare a moratorium on payments of regional industrial development grants.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Ministers in the Department of Trade and Industry have received five letters containing representations about the moratorium on payments of regional development grants.

There have also been a few representations to Scottish and Welsh Office Ministers and to officials of the Departments concerned.

Large Firms (Payment of Bills)

36. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will promulgate a Government code of practice to encourage large companies to pay small firms' bills on time.

Mr. Trippier: I have invited representatives of industry to examine possible ways of encouraging the prompt payment of bills, including a code of practice.

Illegal Broadcasting

38. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to act against illegal broadcasting businesses.

Mr. Butcher: Illegal broadcasting on the United Kingdom mainland is not usually carried out by limited companies with separate legal personalities. However, I intend that action should be taken against illegal broadcasting no matter how it is organised.

Interdepartmental Working Parties (Evidence)

39. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make arrangements to accept oral and written evidence for the four interdepartmental working parties on training 14 to 18-year-olds, small businesses, competition policy and the reduction of controls and regulations.

Mr. Trippier: The four interdepartmental groups, which are being chaired by the Minister without Portfolio, are not taking formal evidence. However, the Minister and his officials in the Enterprise Unit have already been in contact with a wide range of individuals and organisations with an interest in the four topics under discussion. The Minister without Portfolio would welcome further views on these and other aspects of the encouragement of enterprise.

Design for Design Policy

40. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report progress on his Design for Design policy; and what further initiatives he proposes to take.

Mr. Butcher: The strategy document "Design for Design: a Framework for Action", which I announced in May 1984, was the result of a comprehensive review of Government policy on design. A strategy group was established to consider the most effective ways of meeting the objectives described in that document. The group has produced a constructive report, which I have welcomed. I am now considering the recommendations in the report.

In the meantime, the Design for Design policies will continue. The success of our design advisory service funded consultancy scheme has been maintained, and an exhibition of completed projects from the scheme is currently touring the country. We are supporting various initiatives in the field of design education including the "Young Designers into Industry" scheme which has recently been launched by the Royal Society of Arts. This scheme will give young design graduates a period of planned work experience.

I intend to continue to pursue a vigorous design policy, with the objective of improving design performance in British industry and thus enhancing our competitiveness particularly in consumer goods, in world markets.

VAT (Children's Footwear)

41. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the implications for the United Kingdom footwear industry of an extension of value added tax to children's footwear.

Mr. Trippier: It is difficult to predict the possible effects of such an extension, but I have received representations from the footwear industry. These representations have been drawn to the attention of Treasury Ministers.

Heavy Engineering Industry

42. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions his Department is taking to develop the heavy engineering industry.

Mr. Butcher: As with many other industries, the heavy engineering sector has received Governmental assistance under the Science and Technology Act, through the support for innovation scheme, and through grants made under the Industry Acts. In addition, a number of heavy engineering firms have taken advantage of the teaching company scheme organised jointly by my Department and the Science and Engineering Research Council.

British engineering industry participation in overseas projects has in many cases benefited also from Governmental help on export credits and aid and trade provision.

Asbestos (Alternative Materials)

43. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance his Department is offering to companies to help them to develop alternative suitable materials to asbestos.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is assisting under the support for innovation scheme a number of asbestos substitution projects, the details of which are subject to commercial confidentiality. The scheme is currently under review.

School Curricula (Wealth Creation and Enterprise)

44. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department will take steps to ensure that school curricula give due weight to the importance of wealth creation and enterprise.

Mr. Trippier: The responsibility for school curricula rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science, Scotland and Northern Ireland, as well as the local education authorities, and individual schools. My Department's industry-education unit has, however, been responsible for a number of initiatives designed to improve young people's understanding of the wealth creation process.

We have to this end strongly supported the schools curriculum industry project, which, through a network of co-ordinators in England and Wales, encourages curriculum developments, with the aim of creating wider understanding of industry and wealth creation in schools.

We have encouraged industry-education activities by supporting local and national projects and working closely with a number of agencies and link bodies. We have provided resource materials for use in schools (for example the video series "Foundations of Wealth"); and sponsored conferences (for example the Careers Research and Advisory Centre conference "Education for Enterprise" in 1984).

We have set ourselves four specific targets for Industry Year 1986: every secondary school to have links with at least one industrialist or commercial company; every secondary school to have its own mini-company; every LEA to have an individual or body with clear responsibility for promoting school industry links; and every LEA to introduce technology as an examinable subject. Many of these activities are joint initiatives with industry, other Government Departments, and others active in this area.

We are also giving increasing priority to the development of entrepreneurial attitudes among young people.

Competition

45. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional measures he intends to take in 1985 further to promote competition.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend will continue to seek to promote competition across the whole range of his responsibilities. 1985 has already seen the publication of a White Paper on financial services which gives priority to competition, and an extension of the role of the Director General of Fair Trading in civil aviation. A European Commission regulation on selective distribution systems for motor vehicles, adopted with the support of the Government, comes into force in July, with the aim of ensuring freer play of market forces in the Community market for motor vehicles. The implications for competition will also be a major element in his review of the legislation on intellectual property rights. My right hon. Friend will be examining the scope for further relaxation of advertising and other restrictions professions. He will continue to exercise hi sibilities under the Fair Trading and Competitio will also play a full part in ensuring that the G as a whole continues to promote competitio benefit of consumers, as it has already don policies as the liberalisation of telecommunicati long distance coach services, the ending of the monopoly on the sale of spectacles, and the a price controls.

Value Added Network Services Licens

46. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of Trade and Industry when he now proposes to consultative document on value added networ licensing.

Mr. Pattie: Shortly.

Financial Services (White Paper)

47. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Industry what representations he has received his White Paper on financial services.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has received of written and oral representations about the W from a variety of interests.

Coal Industry Dispute

48. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State and Industry if he will commission a study on on small businesses of the miners' strike.

Mr. Trippier: No. I do not need to commissi to appreciate that small businesses in mining co are suffering economic difficulties because of These difficulties have often come to my atten sympathise because they are not of their making Government's. In mining communities, as elsew help firms to cope with business problems by the of confidential advice through the Small Firms

Warship Building Yards (Privatisatio

50. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State and Industry when he expects to be able to a privatisation of British Shipbuilders' warship yards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As my right ho announced on 25 July 1984, he has aske Shipbuilders to complete the sale of its warshi interests by 31 March 1986.

Office of Telecommunications

52. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Se State for Trade and Industry if he will make a about the functions and role of the Telecommunications.

Mr. Pattie: The functions and role of the General of Telecommunications and of the Telecommunications are as set out Telecommunications Act 1984.

The Act imposes on the director a number functions, including the enforcement of conditi licences granted to telecommunications operators and the investigation of complaints that are made about the provision of telecommunications services and apparatus. All the director's functions are carried out having regard to the general duties which are set out in section 3 of the Act and which include the maintenance and promotion of effective competition in telecommunications and the promotion of the interests of consumers, purchasers and other users of telecommunication services and apparatus in respect of prices, quality and variety.

Amble

53. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will visit Amble, Northumberland in order to assess the value to the area of regional and European Economic Community aid to industry.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to visit Amble.

Manufacturing Industry

54. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to encourage British manufacturing industry to take a larger share of the home market.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The best way for British manufacturing industry to achieve this is by improving its competitiveness . My Department's work is directed towards this aim through the promotion of a climate conducive to business and enterprise and the encouragement of increased efficiency, adaptability and innovation.

65. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and how this compares with the figure for the same month five years ago.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For the three months to December 1984 the index of production for manufacturing is 101, based on 1980 equal to 100. This is 8 per cent. lower than the index of production for manufacturing industry in the three months to December 1979.

Investor Protection (White Paper)

55. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the public reaction to the White Paper, Cmnd. 9422 on investor protection.

Mr. Trippier: I am satisfied with the public reaction so far.

European Space Agency (Meeting)

57. Mr. Haywood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Ministerial Council Meeting of the European Space Agency in Rome.

Mr. Pattie: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made on 4 February, at columns 395-96.

Imports and Exports

58. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate of the value of (a) oil imports and exports and (b) non-oil manufactured products imports and exports for the current financial year.

Mr. Butcher: Information is not available for the current financial year. Data for 1984 as a whole are as follows:

United Kingdom Trade in Oil and Manufactures
£ million
Balance of payments basis

	1984
Oil
Imports	7,774
Exports	14,910
Manufactures
Imports	50,380
Exports	46,539

East-West Trade Seminars

59. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will consider initiating the resumption of the series of East-West trade seminars on the promotion, marketing and business contracts provided for under the Helsinki agreement, but which have been suspended since the 5th seminar in Posnan in 1979.

Mr. Butcher: No initiative is required because the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe has already arranged for a sixth seminar to be held in Geneva from 25 to 27 March this year.

Greater London (Industrial Development Projects)

60. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he is having with the London Boroughs Association on industrial development projects in Greater London.

Mr. Trippier: None.

National Economic Development Office

61. Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Director General of the National Economic Development Office; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend and other Ministers of the Department of Trade and Industry regularly meet the Director General of the National Economic Development Office at meetings of the National Economic Development Council. My right hon. Friend last attended NEDC in April 1984 when the matters discussed included the 1984 Budget, the United Kingdom labour market and the review of sector assessments by the Economic Development committees.

Manufactured Goods

62. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on developments in the balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Trade in manufactured goods, on a balance of payments basis, was in deficit in 1984 by £3·8 billion. At the same time, however, the current account as a whole was broadly in balance.

66. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom's surplus or deficit in manufacturing trade with the European Economic Community and the rest of the world, respectively, in 1984 on the overseas trade statistics basis.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1984 there was a crude deficit on trade in manufactures with the European Community of £8·4 billion, and a crude surplus of £2·2 billion with the rest of the world. On the Overseas Trade Statistics basis, on which these balances are derived, the valuation of imports includes freight and insurance costs.

Japan

63. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the volume of British exports to Japan.

Mr. Trippier: United Kingdom exports to Japan in 1984 grew to £926 million in 1984 from £798 million in the previous year, an increase of 16 per cent. This is encouraging, and my Department and the British Overseas Trade Board, particularly through the Exports to Japan Unit and the Japan Trade Advisory Group, in collaboration with the British embassy in Tokyo, are continually encouraging British exporters to explore the opportunities offered by the Japanese market.

Horseriding (Headgear)

64. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is proposing to support the voluntary bodies encouraging those horseriders to wear BS 6473 standard riding hats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has issued a press notice alerting the riding public to the dangers of not wearing hats to the new standard, BS 6473. Copies of the notice have been placed in the Library.

The Department will also be writing to suppliers of riding hats, reminding them of the new standard and pointing out that hats which do not meet the new standard may become illegal under the general safety duty proposed in last year's White Paper on the "Safety of Goods" (Cmnd. 9302).

Nationalised Industries (Monitoring)

67. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of the nationalised industries sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Butcher: Yes, in general, but there is always room for improvement. Appraisal of monitoring techniques will ocntinue and improvements introduced where necessary.

French Schools (Computer Supplies)

68. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied that orders to supply French schools with computers will be open to competition from British manufacturers.

Mr. Pattie: One British manufacturer is among those invited by the French authorities to put forward proposals for the supply of microcomputers to French schools. But it is not clear whether the project will be open to other British manufacturers. I am seeking clarification of the position from the French authorities.

ASEAN (Export Potential)

69. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secr for Trade and Industry what assessment he future export potential in the Association o Asian Nation countries.

Mr. Trippier: My Department and the So trade advisory group of the British Overseas on the basis of regular assessment, regard region as one of the most promising areas fo world and give every encouragement to Brit to explore the opportunities offered by the ma countries.

Public Purchasing Initiative

70. Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of St and Industry if he will make a statem Department's public purchasing initiative.

Mr. Butcher: The aim of the public initiative is to use public purchasing to suppliers' competitiveness, consistent with need to get value for money. It is the p Government as a whole, not just the Departm and Industry. The recent report by the Man Personnel Office on "Government Purchasing the principles of the public purchasing initiati that its implementation by purchasing Depa been patchy. The Department is continuing to policy throughout the public sector while a r methodology of the PPI is under way. recommendations should help its operation i far as central Government are concerned.

Companies (Prosecutions)

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State fo Industry how many prosecutions were underta of companies which had failed to file compa

Mr. Fletcher: The number was 2,928.

Regional Development Policy

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of Sta and Industry what recent representations he about changes in Government regional policy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 206 written on the changes to regional industrial policy received since I announced them on 28 No addition, Ministers in the Department have h of meetings with right hon. and hon. Membe both local and more general issues o development in the context of the new policy

COCOM

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary Trade and Industry what assessment he has barrier to trade presented by COCOM regardin of products falling within its remit where have a technological or cost advantage; and if a statement.

Mr. Channon: No such assessment has The aim of the embargo is to control the export agreed by the COCOM partners to be strategically sensitive, and does not have regard to the cost or technological advantage of manufacturers in any one country.

Hotels and Guest Houses (Registration and Classification)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate for the other European Economic Community countries the legislative requirements for hotels and guest houses to participate in schemes of registration and classification, together with exemptions on size or other features.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My Department has no comprehensive information about hotel registration and classification schemes operating in other EC countries. However, research carried out in 1983 by the English tourist board indicated that all other EC countries operated some form of compulsory hotel registration and licensing which in some cases also involved hotel classification. I will ask the ETB to write to my hon. Friend.

Regional Aid

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration is taken of the funds available for regional assistance from the European Economic Community when allocating funds for regional aid.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The expected contribution from the European Regional Development Fund is taken into account in planning our total expenditure on regional industrial aid, and that expenditure is higher than it would be without the Community funds. The expected amounts of ERDF assistance are shown in the public expenditure White Paper alongside planned levels of domestic expenditure under the same programme headings.

Children's Nightwear

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will extend flame resistant regulations to all children's nightwear including pyjamas.

Mr. Fletcher: My Department has just completed a consultation exercise with a large number of consumer, trade and enforcement bodies on new regulations for nightwear flammability. Under the proposed regulations children's nightdresses and dressing gowns will have to meet the flammability requirements of BS 5722:1984. All other nightwear including children's pyjamas will have to carry a label relating to its fire performance. The consumer bodies are generally happy with the proposed scope of the regulations.

Subject to any views the European Commission may have, I would hope to submit the new regulations for parliamentary approval shortly.

Paint (Pesticides)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken or plans to take to regulate the addition of pesticides to paint.

Mr. Fletcher: The Food and Environment Protection Bill now before Parliament will empower Ministers to regulate the use of pesticides. Ministers will be consulting interested organisations on the scope of the regulations.

The Secretary of State for the Environment is currently consulting interested parties about separate regulations under the Control of Pollution Act controlling the use of marine anti-fouling paints containing organo-tin compounds.

Bolton (Business Start-ups)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimate for public sector assistance in 1984-85 for schemes designed to help new business start-ups in Bolton.

Mr. Trippier: Small Firms in Bolton can benefit from a range of assistance to help them set up and expand, under national schemes such as the business expansion scheme, the loan guarantee scheme and the enterprise allowance scheme. Bolton is also eligible for regional selective assistance, as an intermediate area, and for support under the business improvement services package which I launched last November. There are no separate figures available for potential take up in Bolton. My Department's small firms service can also offer advice and counselling to people interested in setting up small businesses.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) on what grounds the proposed clothing, footwear and textiles scheme for technological investment in the United Kingdom clothing, footwear and textile industries has been disallowed by the European Economic Community;

(2) if he will outline the major proposals of the clothing, footwear and textile scheme for investment in the United Kingdom clothing, footwear and textile industries; and which of its provisions were objected to by the European Economic Community;

(3) what plans he now has for Government investment in the United Kingdom clothing, footwear and textile industries;

(4) what reasons the European Commission gave to his Department for its refusal to approve the implementation of the clothing, footwear and textiles (CLOFT) scheme for investment in the United Kingdom; if he has any alternative proposals for investment assistance in these industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 114]: The aim of the clothing, footwear, knitting and textiles scheme, which was announced by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 19 March 1984, was to provide investment support for small firms in these industries to encourage them to invest in the most modern machinery. The proposal was to provide grants of 20 per cent. of the cost of certain high technology equipment, with a maximum grant of £40,000.

The Commission has concluded that the aid proposal did not meet the conditions necessary to benefit from any of the derogations of Article 92(3) of the Treaty of Rome and that it should not be implemented.

I have not yet seen the full text of the Commission's decision. When it becomes available, I shall wish to study the grounds on which it is based and its implications, and to consult with representatives of the industries concerned.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total amount of Government investment in each of the following industries in the latest year for which figures are available; and what rate per 1,000 employees in each of the following industries this figure represents: (a) the coal mining industry, (b) the steel industry, (c) motor vehicle manufacture, (d) the computer manufacturing industry and (e) the clothing, footwear and textile industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 114]: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. The annual reports provided under the Industrial Development Act give information about support for investment on a sectoral basis, but no information is available about support for innovation on that basis. Information on nationalised industries capital requirements and financing are set out in Part V of the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88". Questions relating to the coal mining industry are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the current annual levels of Government investment in the textile industries of each of the member countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 114]: Comprehensive information on investment is not available. However, so far as sectoral aid schemes are concerned the position is as follows:

France

In April 1984 the European commission approved a textile and clothing sectoral scheme, mainly comprising a provision whereby employers were relieved of part of their social security contributions. The overall ceiling for 1984 was FF 1·2 billion.

Belgium

Commission approval was given for the first two years (viz 1982 and 1983) of a proposed five year plan to aid restructuring of the textile and clothing sector. A request to extend the scheme into 1984 was refused by the Commission.

Italy

In March 1983 the Commission approved a three-year scheme to restructure textile and clothing firms. About Lire 130 billion was made available each year in 1983 and 1984.

Netherlands

In December 1983 the Commission approved an investment support scheme for the textile and clothing sector, subsequently limited to a total of HFL 65 million.

It is my understanding that none of the above schemes is still open for applications. However, aid may be provided through regional or general schemes not specifically targetted to the textile sector.

In the United Kingdom the textile, clothing and footwear sectors received or were offered under regional assistance and general schemes £66·4 million during 1983-84 and £25·7 million during the period April to September 1984.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom's crude trade balance in yarns, fabrics and garments, respectively, in the years from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 114]: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom trade in yarns, fabrics, garments: Crude balance (£ millions)

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	*1984
Yarns	8·7	60·0	−87·1	−142·7	−189·2	−220·9
Fabrics	−378·1	−216·2	−382·3	−497·6	−726·9	−836·6
Garments	−401·2	−378·1	−511·6	−597·4	−663·1	−930·0

Yarns: Data corresponding to SITC/R2 Group 651 less 651·21 (wool tops).

Fabrics: Data corresponding to SITC/R2 Group 652-656 plus 657. 1-657·4.

Garments: Data corresponding to SITC/R2 Division 84 less Group 848 and item 847·11.

Notes:

The crude balance equals exports valued f.o.b. less imports valued c.i.f.

* Provisional figures.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in how many multi-fibre arrangement product categories multi-fibre arrangement suppliers increased their utilisation of their quotas to the United Kingdom by 10 per cent. or more in 1983 compared with 1982, and in 1984 compared with 1983.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 114-15]: Quota utilisation figures for multi–fibre arrangement suppliers for 1983 cannot be readily compared with those for 1982, as the quotas were adjusted following the renegotiation of the bilateral agreements in 1982. Quota utilisation figures for 1984 are not yet available.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times the anti-surge mechanism in the multi-fibre arrangement bilateral agreements was used in 1983 and 1984; and on how many occasions other EEC member states utilised the anti-surge mechanism in the same period.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 115]: Neither the United Kingdom nor any other Member State of the Community made use of the anti-surge mechanism during 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which multi-fibre arrangement group I product categories, the individual quotas to the United Kingdom for Macao, Taiwan and South Korea, respectively, exceeded 1 per cent. of total United Kingdom imports of the product concerned in 1980.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 115]: The information requested in respect of the United Kingdom is as follows:

	Categories
Macao	4, 5, 7, 8.
Taiwan	3, 4, 5, 7, 8.
South Korea	2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

The anti-surge provision is applicable only when a member state's quota represents 1 per cent. (dominant suppliers) or 2·5 per cent. (non-dominant suppliers) of total EC (not United Kingdom) imports of that product in 1980.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which multi-fibre arrangement group I product categories, the quotas to the United Kingdom of the non-dominant multi-fibre arrangement suppliers exceeded 2·5 per cent. of the United Kingdom's total imports of the products concerned in 1980.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 115]: The information requested in respect of the United Kingdom is as follows:

Category	Countries
1	None.
2	Brazil, China, India, Pakistan.
3	None.
4	Brazil, India, Pakistan, Philippines, Romania, Singapore, Thailand.
5	Singapore, Thailand.
6	None.
7	India, Indonesia, Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka.
8	India, Pakistan.

The anti-surge provision is applicable only when a member state's quota represents 1 per cent. (dominant suppliers) or 2·5 per cent. (non-dominant suppliers) of total EC (not United Kingdom) imports of that product in 1980.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the levels of the voluntary export restraints from Portugal and Spain to the United Kingdom of textile and clothing products for 1983 and 1984; and what were the actual levels of exports to the United Kingdom from these sources in each product category concerned in this years.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 115]: The voluntary restraint arrangements on textile and clothing products which the EC has with Portugal and Spain are informal arrangements, the details of which are not published. Imports of products of particular concern received in the United Kingdom from those two countries in 1983 and 1984 are as follows:

Category (Units)	1983	1984

SCOTLAND

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, West on 13 February at columns 337-38. At the request of the teachers' side my right hon. Friend met representatives of the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee for Teaching Staff in School Education on 15 February. He has since had another exchange of letters with the Joint Secretary (Teachers' Side) in order to clarify still further his position on a possible review of pay and conditions of service within the SJNC(SE) framework. My right hon. Friend and I very much hope that an early decision will now be reached by the teachers' side enabling such a review to begin.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total sum of money spent by the Scottish Development Agency on promotion and marketing for the financial years 1982-83 and 1983-84; and what is the expected spending for the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The total sums spent by the Scottish Development Agency on promotion and marketing for the financial years 1982-83 and 1983-84 were £5·3 million and £7·2 million retrospectively. The agency expects to spend around £9·1 million in the financial year 1984-85.

These amounts represent expenditure, exclusive of salaries, on marketing and promotion at home and abroad, in pursuit of the full range of the agency's functions.

Regional Growth

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish regions in order of percentage growth in electorate since 1979; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figure in each case.

Mr. Ancram: The information for the Scottish regions and islands areas for the period 1979-84, is set out in the table below.

Regions and islands areas	Actual increase	Percentage increase
Grampian	27,331	7·8
Shetland	1,003	6·7
Highland	8,057	5·8
Fife	12,915	5·2
Dumfries and Galloway	5,434	5·1
Orkney	584	4·1
Central	8,286	4·1
Lothian	20,665	3·6
Western Isles	510	2·3
Borders	1,524	1·9
Tayside	5,376	1·8
Strathclyde	28,566	1·6

Dunblane Bypass

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he has not included the Dunblane bypass in the projects listed on page 45 of his Department's public expenditure to 1987-88 commentary.

Mr. Ancram: That list shows trunk road schemes which are currently expected to be ready for a start of work by 31 March 1988. The Dunblane bypass is not at present expected to be ready before the 1988-89 financial year, but I do not rule out the possibility that it might be started sooner if design and statutory procedures can be concluded quickly and if funds are available.

Fishing Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts of financial assistance given by the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for Scotland to the catching and processing sectors of the fishing industry in those maritime areas covered by the Highlands and Islands Development Board in each of the past four years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

(1) Catching Sector

	Temporary Support Schemes £'000	Decommissioning Grants £'000
1980-81	1,417	—
1981-82	2,555	—
1982-83	1,588	—
1983-84	8	4

(2) Processing Sector

Notes

The above figures relate to the sea fisheries districts Wick, Orkney, Shetland, Ullapool, Stornoway, Mallaig, Oban and Campbeltown.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts of financial assistance given by the Highlands and Islands Development Board to the catching and processing sectors of the fishing industry in each of the past four years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Catching	Processing	Total
1981	2,825,935	588,852	3,414,787
1982	1,357,673	1,600,147	2,957,820
1983	3,416,698	1,762,091	5,178,789

	11,102,896	4,282,640	15,385,536

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts of financial assistance given by the Sea Fish Industry Authority in each of the past four years to the catching and processing sectors of the fishing industry situated in those maritime areas covered by the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. John MacKay: Assistance provided by the authority in the Highlands and Islands Development Board area is as follows:

Catching Sector

	Payments 1981	1982	1983	1984
Grants for vessel construction	331	17	582	1,125
Grants for vessel improvements	109	95	378	336

I shall write to the hon. Member with the figures for Sea Fish Industry Authority loans.

Processing Sector

No grants or loans were made.

Glenrothes Development Corporation

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which bodies were responsible for nominating the new members of the Glenrothes development corporation; and how many members of the new board reside in Glenrothes.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There is no right of nomination to new town development corporations but before appointing members the Secretary of State is required to consult local authorities concerned with the development of the town. In the case of Glenrothes he consults Fife regional council and Kirkcaldy district council. Members are not appointed in any representational capacity but by virtue of the personal contribution he considers they can make to the town. Three members of Glenrothes development corporation live in Glenrothes, and the remainder elsewhere in Fife.

DEFENCE

Tricothenes (Report)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the report by scientists from his Department's Porton Down laboratories of their visit over three years ago to south-east Asia to study the consequences of tricothenes has not yet been published; and when it is proposed that it will be published.

Mr. Lee: No scientists from the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, have visited south-east Asia for this purpose. Investigations into the alleged use of mycotoxins on south-east Asia are continuing, but we are not yet in a position to state when their results might be made available.

Binary Nerve Gas

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an undertaking that Her Majesty's Government will not be willing to manufacture in the United Kingdom precursors for binary nerve gas.

Mr. Lee: Such chemicals are widely used for normal and bona fide industrial purposes such as flame retardants and pesticides. On the manufacture of all types of chemical weapons, Her Majesty's Government's position remains as set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at column 901.

Nuclear Security

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all police forces, quasi police forces and security agencies which operate in respect of military nuclear matters.

Mr. Lee: Ministry of Defence police, who have constabulary powers under the 1923 Special Constables Act, and RAF police, who carry out their duties under military law, have responsibility for protecting military nuclear assets.

Arms Exports

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of United Kingdom arms sales overseas in 1984; and what were the values in 1970, 1974 and 1979 expressed in constant prices.

Mr. Lee: The latest year for which detailed information is available is 1983. Figures for 1970 and 1974 exclude "estimates of additional military equipment" which have only been recorded since 1975. On this basis, details given at 1983 constant prices are as follows:

Year	*Identified Defence Equipment £ million	Estimates of Additional Military Equipment† £ million
1970	306	Not available
1974	564	Not available
1975	492	693
1979	551	957
1983	919	1189

Notes:

* Categories of equipment which can be identified through the Customs and Excise tariff.

† These goods are not distinguishable from similar goods for civilian purposes in Customs and Excise records. These estimates are based on information from the Society of British Aerospace Companies and individual electronics and motor vehicle manufacturing companies. Exports connected with international collaborative projects are excluded.

BAOR (Nursery Education)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of pre-school children in British Army of the Rhine families living in Germany and the support and educational services provided for them.

Mr. Lee: As at the end of January this year there were 16,612 pre-school children in British Army of the Rhine (BAOR) families living in Germany.

The support and educational facilities available for the under-fives in BAOR are similar to those provided in the United Kingdom for children of the same age. Kindergartens, mother and toddler groups, and playgroups have been established over a number of years and are well supported.

In addition, the medical services provided are comprehensive and include child guidance clinics, paediatricians, SSAFA health visitors, speech therapists, and there are some limited facilities for handicapped children.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of his Department's police are currently involved in security operations at RAF Molesworth;

(2) what assistance he has requested from civilian police forces to assist in security operations at RAF Molesworth;

(3) how many Army and Royal Air Force personnel are currently assigned to the security operation at RAF Molesworth;

(4) what is the current rate of expenditure per week on the security operations at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated final cost of the perimeter fence at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley: The cost of the permanent single weldmesh fence and related ancillary works now under construction at RAF Molesworth is estimated at approximately £3·5 million.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimate of the total cost of preparing RAF Molesworth up to the arrival of cruise missiles.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) on 22 November 1984 at column 224.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the percentage of earnings absorbed by income tax and employee's social security contributions at different levels of earnings in the United Kingdom, France, Germany, the United States of America and Japan, respectively (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1984.

Mr. Moore: The information requested, for selected levels of income and family responsibilities, is as follows:

Notes:

1. The figures shown relate to income of 1984 and 1979 (1984-85 and 1979-80 in the case of the United Kingdom).
2. Coversions were made for 1984 at the exchange rates prevailing on 4 February 1985 and for 1979 at the average exchange rates for 1979. They do not fully reflect differences in purchasing power between sterling and the other currencies.
3. In addition to personal allowances, the tables take into account employment income reliefs and other standard reliefs (including income tax relief for social security contributions given in certain of the countries).
4. The income of the married couple is assumed to be wholly income of the husband.
5. The percentages given for a married couple with two dependent children reflect the tax and social security contributions due less any child benefit payable in respect of the children.
6. It is assumed that the United Kingdom employee is contracted-in to the State pension scheme.
7. The figures in brackets for the USA and Japan include local income taxes at typical rates.

Company Taxation

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide a motive test in section 29 of the Finance Act 1973.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to exempt the payment of intra-group dividends by close groups of companies from the provisions relating to apportionment.

Mr. Moore: Existing rules already provide that to the extent that retention of intra-group dividends is necessary for the business requirements of members of trading groups there will be no apportionment.

Employees (Company Shares)

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend section 79 of the Finance Act 1972 in relation to the acquisition by employees of shares in subsidiary companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation whereby employers offering approved share option provisions may have the right to buy back employees' shares when their employment comes to an end.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Furniss v. Dawson

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he proposes any legislative changes following the decision of the House of Lords in Furniss v. Dawson.

Mr. Moore: I have no plan to propose such changes, but the position will be kept under review.

Average Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of average earnings is represented by (a) the single person's tax allowance and (b) the married man's tax allowance at the current time; and how that percentage compares with those for the following years: 1960, 1970, 1975, 1979, 1980 and 1983, respectively.

Mr. Moore: The tax threshold for earned income, expressed as a percentage of average male manual earnings, is as follows:

	Single	Married
1960-61	29·5	42·6
1970-71	28·7	41·0
1975-76	21·5	30·4
1979-80	22·2	34·5
1980-81	22·5	35·1
1983-84	23·4	36·6
*1984-85	24·7	38·9

* Assuming an increase in earnings of 7½ per cent. between 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Per-capita Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figure per capita of the tax-paying population was represented by the total grant-aid received by the United Kingdom from the European Economic Community in each of the years since such grants commenced.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figure per capita of the tax-paying population was represented by the financial contribution made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community in each of the years since such contributions commenced.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

European Community Budget

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the proportion of the EEC budget for each year since 1972, devoted to (a) compulsory and (b) non-compulsory expenditure; and what are the current guidelines in force as to the possible annual increase in expenditure in both categories.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Departments (Staff)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff-in-post in central Government Departments at 1 January.

Mr. Peter Rees: At 1 January 1985 there were 619,570 staff-in-post — 503,253 non-industrial and 116,317 industrial. The number of civil servants has fallen by 112,705 or 15·4 per cent. since the beginning of the last Parliament.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Council of Ministers (Voting)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Her Majesty's Government have accepted the principle of a more frequent use of majority voting in the EEC Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government consider that British interests would be well served if votes were more regularly taken in respect of those treaty articles which provide for majority voting, with the important proviso that it should remain open to any member state to postpone a vote indefinitely where very important national interests are at stake.

Draft Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what explanation the European Assembly advanced to the Council of Ministers for its rejection of the draft 1985 budget; and if this draft budget had the approval of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The European Parliament rejected the draft 1985 budget as agreed by the Council on the grounds that it did not cover twelve months of revenue and expenditure. The Council, in forwarding the draft budget to the European Parliament, undertook to meet additional budgetary requirements by 1 October 1985.

Law of the Sea Convention

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Nations convention on the law of the sea will enter into force; and what are the implications for the United Kingdom's interests in deep sea mining and other areas covered by the convention which flow from its implementation, although the United Kingdom is not a signatory.

Mr. Rifkind: The convention will enter into force one year after sixty ratifications and accessions in respect of states ratifying or acceding to it. So far, there have been 14 ratifications. In respect of states ratifying or acceding subsequently, it enters into force 30 days after the deposit of the instrument of accession by the state in question. The United Kingdom, as a state which has not acceded to the convention, would become bound by the rules envisaged in the convention only in so far as they were generally accepted and regarded as rules of customary international law. How far they are or may come to be so regarded depends on the past and future state practice of countries generally. As for deep sea mining, British operators have made it clear they would not wish to operate under the convention's present mining regime.

Romania and Bulgaria

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had on his recent visits to Romania and Bulgaria on the subject of trade with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Rifkind: Trade forms a significant part of our bilateral relationship with both Romania and Bulgaria. During my right hon. and learned Friend's recent talks with the Romanian President and Foreign Minister they agreed on the desirability of expanding and diversifying bilateral trade. They discussed current collaborative projects and possible areas for future cooperation. They also discussed prospects for the forthcoming meeting in London of the United Kingdom/Romania Joint Commission. In Sofia, where my right hon. and learned Friend had talks with President Zhivkov, and the Bulgarian Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, he discussed trade opportunities and areas of potential industrial collaboration where United Kingdom firms are particularly well-placed to make a contribution. My right hon. and learned Friend's visit there took place immediately before the opening of a British Economic Week. The United Kingdom/Bulgaria Joint Commission next meets in London in March and the Bulgarian Foreign Trade Minister will visit Britain in April, returning a visit made to Bulgaria last summer by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade.

COCOM Committee

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the work load arising from the COCOM committee, he has any plans to increase the level of staff for trade purposes at the British embassy in Moscow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The multilateral forum for the discussion of export control policy matters (COCOM) is based in Paris and the work arising from it is dealt with by staff there, in London and in the capitals of other member states. There are no plans for increasing the staff in the places concerned. COCOM has made no decisions which would necessitate increasing the number of staff engaged in commercial work in Moscow.

British Council

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the amount given by the Government to the British Council in 1969, 1974, 1979 and 1984; and how this has changed in real terms.

Mr. Renton: Money received by the British Council from the Government in the relevant years, excluding agency money, was as follows:

	£ million
1968-69	11·3
1974-75	25·3
1978-79	45·9
1983-84	73·4

From 1968-69 to 1983-84 this represents a 25 per cent. increase in real terms calculated by using the GDP deflator, or a 2 per cent. decrease on the basis of risen costs at home and overseas and of exchange rate movements.

Ethiopia

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protests were made by Her Majesty's Government, in concert with other Governments and international organisations, against the delay of several days to aircraft carrying food to relieve the famine in Ethiopia by flights concerned with the Organisation of African Unity summit meeting at Addis Ababa; and what was the result of such protests.

Mr. Rifkind: The Ethiopian Government did warn us last November that pressure of aircraft at Addis Ababa airport before and during the OAU conference might cause difficulties. In the event, however, there were no delays of which we are aware.

Integrated Mediterranean Programmes

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the effect of the proposed increase in EEC funds for the integrated Mediterranean programmes on (a) the size of the European regional development fund, (b) the proportions of the European regional development fund devoted to quota and non-quota sections, (c) the quota allocation to the United Kingdom and (d) the availability of European regional development funds for projects in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Rifkind: The Commission's new proposals for integrated Mediterranean programmes have only just been tabled and have not yet been discussed. The effect of the proposals on the European regional development fund is one of the points we shall wish to ascertain.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the last year the percentage increase in war pensioners' mobility allowance as against the percentage increase in the cost of motoring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: War pensioners' mobility supplement was increased from 26 November 1984 by 5·2 per cent.

The transport and vehicle group index, that part of the retail prices index which covers motoring costs, petrol and oil, motor insurance, fares and rail transport, for the year ended November 1984 showed an increase of 2·1 per cent.

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the first case of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in the United Kingdom came to the attention of the Department; and what action was then taken.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The first case was reported to our Department in December 1981. Arrangements were made immediately for the surveillance of AIDS cases to be undertaken by the communicable disease surveillance centre. In July 1983, with our support and participation, the Medical Research Council set up a working party to review scientific knowledge and research on AIDS worldwide, to encourage contact and co-operation between research workers in the field, and to advise the Council on the current state of knowledge and on topics for research. In August 1983 we issued a leaflet asking those who believed they were in the high risk groups for AIDS not to give blood. With regard to other action taken, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) on 20 February, at columns 497-500.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set out in tabular form the number of diagnosed cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in the most recent 12-month period, indicating how many, and what percentage, involved (a) practising homosexuals, (b) persons injecting themselves with drugs and (c) other causes which he is able to specify or identify.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information for 1984 is as follows:

	No.	Percentage of total
Practising homosexuals/bisexuals	70	90·9
Intravenous drug abusers	—	—
Haemophiliacs	1	1·3
Persons connected with Central Africa	5	6·5
Others/unknown	1	1·3
Total	77	100·0

War Pensioners (Psychiatric Cases)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of war pension cases awarded in 1982, 1983 and to the latest available date in 1984 acknowledged the primary disability condition as being of a psychiatric nature.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

Year	Percentage
1982	5·1
1983	4·7
*1984	4·6

* Up to September.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider introducing independent multi-disciplinary panels, including a psychiatrist, social worker or other professional with experience of mental health problems, for assessing severe disablement allowance claims by mentally ill or handicapped persons.

Mr. Newton: No. The level of disablement for severe disablement allowance is assessed by the adjudicating medical authorities in accordance with criteria similar to those already used in the industrial injuries and war pensions schemes. These authorities will aim to build up a complete picture of the claimant's condition, based on statements provided by him and those who care for him and, where necessary, information from other sources, including doctors' reports and hospital case-notes.

Most mental handicap is present from birth or the early development years and people so affected can normally expect to qualify for severe disablement allowance before age 20 on a test of incapacity for work alone.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific steps he is taking to ensure that adjudicating medical practitioners deciding severe disablement allowance claims receive thorough instruction in assessing disabilities as well as periodic refresher courses.

Mr. Newton: Adjudicating medical practitioners already have long experience of assessing a wide range of disabilities on claims arising in the industrial injuries and war pensions schemes. Specific guidance on severe disablement allowance has been made available to them in the form of a draft handbook. This is currently being revised in the light of the many helpful comments received from voluntary organisations representing disabled people and will eventually be published. Adjudicating medical practitioners dealing with claims for the new benefit have also received guidance, either in groups at specially arranged sessions, or by acting as a member of a medical board chaired by a colleague from our full-time medical staff. The need for further guidance will be kept under close review.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of pensioners living in Welwyn Hatfield constituency who are currently in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: The Welwyn Hatfield constituency is covered by two DHSS offices. The number of pensioners receiving supplementary benefit from these offices in February 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, was

Hertford	4227
St. Albans	3126

Human Embryos

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the source of medical evidence which states that 60 per cent. of human embryos do not implant in the womb, as given by the Minister of State on 15 February, Official Report, column 685.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Two widely quoted scientific sources which refer to an implantation failure rate in the region of 60 per cent. are:

Roberts, C. J., Lowe, C. R., Lancet 1975, vol. 1, pp 498-499.
Lindley, M., Nature 1979, vol. 280, pp 635-636.

I did describe the figure as a modest estimate.

Miss Janet Palfrey

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will investigate the reasons why Miss Janet Palfrey of 47 Churchill road, Walton, Stone, Staffordshire, has not received supplementary benefit from 3 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Miss Palfrey's claim has been assessed and she has been notified that she is not entitled to any supplementary benefit in her present circumstances. I understand my hon. Friend has written to Stafford local office about her case and that a reply was sent on 26 February.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him about the period after which patients with end-stage renal failure die; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There is no precise definition of the point of onset of end-stage renal failure and it is not therefore possible to measure the period from that point until death.

Benefits

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of St[a]te for Social Services if he will list the social security be[n]efits for disabled people and their carers which spon[sored] immigrants and their carers may (a) claim and (b) claim.

Mr. Newton: Disabled sponsored immigrants claim benefits for disabled people subject to the same as other claimants. These rules include tests of pre in Great Britain as follows: for attendance allowanc weeks out of 52 preceding claim; for mobility allow 52 weeks out of 18 months preceding claim; for s disablement allowance, 168 of 196 qualifying da incapacity. In each case the claimant also has to be p in Great Britain at the time the claim is to be made. are also tests of ordinary residence and for s disablement allowance the claimant must also have resident 10 out of 20 years preceding the claim (under 20, at least 10 years since birth).

The carer of a disabled sponsored immigrant may invalid care allowance subject to the same rules a other carer.

Both disabled sponsored immigrants and their c may claim supplementary benefit subject to the same as other disabled people and their carers. However, i case of any sponsored immigrant, whether or not disa the sponsor is liable for the immigrant's maintenanc any supplementary benefit paid to the immigrant m recoverable from the sponsor.

A sponsored immigrant who has been resident in Britain for 10 years after age 60 may qualify for a contributory retirement pension at age 80 or on compl of the residence test if later.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of Stat Social Services what would be the cost of transferri current recipients of unemployability supplemen invalidity benefit and of abolishing unemployal supplement; if there are any circumstances in the futu which a person could under present legislation be entitled to unemployability supplement and no invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The White Paper "Reform of Industrial Injuries Scheme" (Cmnd. 8402) envisage abolition of unemployability supplement, with exi beneficiaries being transferred to invalidity benefit. cost would be minimal.

There are two, albeit rare, circumstances in w unemployability supplement would be payable invalidity benefit would not. Firstly, invalidity be cannot be paid after deemed retirement age (70 for and 65 for women), whereas unemployability supple continues in payment irrespective of age. Seco earnings greater than £23·50 in one week would re entitlement to invalidity benefit for that week, but w not affect unemployability supplement provided ear for the year were not above £1,222.

Incontinence Pads

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of Stat Social Services if he will advise health authorities r reduce the supply of incontinence pads to paren children incontinent by reason of physical or mental disability without first undertaking an individual assessment of need.

Mr. John Patten: We would expect such an assessment to be made before reducing the supply of incontinence pads, but it is a matter for health authorities to decide locally.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for invalidity benefit to be paid in advance rather than in arrears where there is underlying entitlement to widow's pension or any other overlapping benefit listed in regulation 16 of the Claims and Payments Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. Invalidity benefit is generally paid in arrears because title is dependent on the provision of medical evidence for the period covered. A widow who is entitled to both widow's pension and invalidity benefit can choose which benefit she wishes to receive. Normally widow's pension is paid in full because it is the greater of the two. If there is any balance of invalidity benefit due, this is paid separately. The only other benefit listed in regulation 16 which overlaps with invalidity benefit is invalid care allowance which, like widow's pension, is paid in advance.

Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what regulations apply to overlap of a national insurance widow's pension and any pensions received from another country in respect of a widow's late husband's previous employment abroad.

Mr. Whitney: There are provisions in some reciprocal agreements made between the United Kingdom and other countries which enable a widow's pension awarded under the Social Security Acts to be reduced by reference to a widow's pension which is paid by the other country concerned and is based wholly or partly on the widow's late husband's record in that country.

Central Funding Initiative

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will approve the Shropshire health authority's application under the central funding initiative to establish a self-referral walk-in counselling service in Shropshire.

Mr. John Patten: I am glad to say that the application was approved on 21 February.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the aggregate effect on the sales to the National Health Service of pharmaceutical companies with establishments within the Welwyn Hatfield constituency of his revised limited list proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We cannot estimate this with precision. It depends on a number of factors, including whether the companies concerned decide to supply generic medicines to the National Health Service.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the exact nature of the consultations he is having with retail pharmacists over their current stockholding of drugs which will no longer be available on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 142]: Since my right hon. Friend's announcement last November there has been ample time for retail pharmacists to adjust the stocks they hold of drugs no longer available on the National Health Service. However as my right hon. Friend said in his statement to the House on 21 February we are prepared to examine any relevant evidence that pharmacists may present on this matter.

Royal Liverpool Hospital

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the termination of all routine admissions to the Royal Liverpool hospital.

Mr. John Patten: Routine admissions have been suspended temporarily at the Royal Liverpool hospital due to the unusually high incidence of emergency admissions resulting from the recent weather conditions. No urgent admissions are affected. It is for health authorities to arrange admissions to hospitals to take account of fluctuations in demand.

Maternity Services Liaison Committees

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those district and regional health authorities which have so far not appointed non-medical members to their maternity services liaison committees;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure that district health authorities appoint non-medical members to their maternity services liaison committees;

(3) if he will set a deadline by which time district health authorities must have appointed non-medical members to their maternity services liaison committees.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Efficiency Incentive Payments

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what was the total value of efficiency incentive payments made to offices in his Department in 1984; if he will list the categories of savings which qualified for such incentives; and if he will list the offices to which such payments were awarded, showing the amount of the payment and the use to which it was put in each office under the following categories; office parties, staff outings and social purposes, purchases of equipment, purchases of vouchers for use by staff and donations to charities.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 17 January 1985, c. 219-21]: I regret that the list of offices receiving incentive awards given in my previous reply was incomplete. The following offices have also received incentive awards.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Lecturers (Redundancies)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of university lectureship redundancies in each of the last four academic years.

Mr. Brooke: The number of academic staff taking early retirement under the UGC's redundancy compensation scheme in the academic years 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84 were 1,446, 864 and 890 respectively. Information for 1984-85 is not yet available.

School Bus Passes

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans his Department has to issue fresh advice to county councils concerning the provision of concessionary school bus passes in the light of the High Court decision in the case of Rogers v. Essex County Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend understands that this case may be the subject of an appeal. In the first instance it is for local education authorities to consider the implications of the judgment, but my right hon. Friend will of course also be considering it.

EMPLOYMENT

Fairgrounds

83. Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he is arranging between local authorities, the Health and Safety Executive and fairground operators about measures to improve the safety of fairground equipment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultation with the fairground industry on measures to improve the safety of fairground equipment takes place at the joint advisory committee for health and safety in the amusement industry. Membership of this committee consists of representatives from the Health and Safety Executive national industry group and the three main organisations which represent fairground operators.

The work of the committee has led to the joint initiative of the publication in 1984 of the code of safe practice at fairs and there are indications that this has already led to improved standards. A sub-committee of the advisory committee is considering how the code's objectives can be translated into improvements at particular devices. The executive has published advice on improvements at popular fairground rides, and a programme of further guidance notes has been drawn up.

Youth Training Scheme and Community Programm

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State f Employment whether he will instruct the Manpow Services Commission to permit disclosure of informati regarding accidents on the youth training scheme a community programme to area manpower boards and ho Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Subject to requirements confidentiality concerning individuals, information accidents to trainees on the youth training scheme w continue to be made available to area manpower boar and hon. Members.

Sponsors of community programme projects are t employers of all participants and are responsible f notifying accident information to statutory enforci authorities in accordance with legal requirements. T Manpower Services Commission does not colle statistical information on accidents for the communi programme, although area manpower boards will contin to be advised on health and safety concerns abo individual project applications.

Community Programme

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State f Employment if he will make a statement on the allocati of places on the community programme in Basildon.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Basildon area currently h more places on the community programme in proporti to the incidence of long-term unemployment than mo other areas in the south-east. At the end of January 198 the latest date for which figures are available, it had 3 filled places.

Adult Training Strategy

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State f Employment if he will make a statement on the adu training strategy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's adult traini strategy encompasses a number of initiatives to stimula adult training.

The national adult training campaign, launched November with the aim of raising awareness about t importance of adult training, is now under way. Action support of the campaign is being developed at bo national and local level.

The commission is working jointly with the Educati Departments to promote effective collaboration and acti on training at local level. Encouraging progress is bei made and 116 individual projects have been approved date. We are developing new methods of deliveri training by extending best practice in the use of op learning, supporting the development of new traini technologies and encouraging work on the training nee of trainers.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State f Employment what information he has as to the avera length of time unemployed people are without a job sin they became unemployed; and what evidence he has as the correlation between this average figure and the over level of unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about median durations of unemployment, both in terms of uncompleted spells and completed spells is published quarterly in tables 2·22 and 2·24 of the Employment Gazette. Precise evidence on the correlation between these figures and the overall level of unemployment is not available, but these figures tend to increase when unemployment is rising.

Early Retirement (Job Creation)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to create new job opportunities by increasing the opportunity for early retirement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend announced in the House on 12 November 1984, at column 444, that the full-time job release scheme, due to end on 31 March 1985, would continue until 31 March 1986, and that we would be revising the present part-time job release scheme to make it more attractive to both employers and employees.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given, in conjuction with other EEC Employment Ministers, to European Commission document 9248/84, on action to combat long-term unemployment in the Community; what steps they intend to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester) on 21 December 1984, at columns 387-88. As the final text of the resolution on action to combat long-term unemployment recognises, the problem cannot be resolved without policies designed to achieve economic recovery, and the Government will continue to pursue such policies.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many Health and Safety Executive inspectors are employed in Scotland; and what was the number in 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 1 February 1985 there were 90 Health and Safety Executive inspectors employed in Scotland. On 1 February 1979 the number was 108.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he is considering for removing any obligations as respects health and safety from employers in small companies in Scotland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no such proposals currently before him from the Health and Safety Commission, which advises him on such matters. However, the Government are committed to taking all practicable steps to encourage enterprise and initiative, and we are always ready to consider proposals which can help small businesses while being compatible with the maintenance of health and safety standards at work.

Youth Opportunities Programme

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether the final report of the independent study on accidents to trainees on the youth op programme, commissioned by the Manpow Commission, has been completed; and what findings.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In their preliminary r on an analysis of a 10 per cent. sample of a trainees on the youth opportunities programm April 1980 and March 1983, researchers f university suggested an examination of a large ensure that their findings were soundly bas provide more detailed analyses of the p occurrence, severity and causation of accident report based on a larger sample has now been r I have placed a copy in the Library. The la generally confirms the findings containe preliminary report which was placed in the Libr 1984. The Aston researchers conclude that evidence that trainees on the youth op programme had a higher accident incidence employed young persons. They express stron tions on the validity of comparing accident inci for the youth opportunities programme with fi the Health and Safety Executive applying to the population generally. The great majority sustained by trainees were of the type that expected to happen to any person working in the concerned. Copies of the Aston reports are av request from the Manpower Services Commis

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of Employment if he will place in the Library Manpower Services Commission memorandu with accidents on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his February 1985, c. 18]: Yes. I am placing in t today a copy of the Manpower Services Com memorandum to its local staff on the dis information on accidents to area manpower boa be seen from the memorandum that area manpo receive regular monitoring reports on health an the youth training scheme and are given infor individual accidents. Details identifying providers or trainees are not normally given as civil proceedings may be taken in connectio accident and it is necessary to safeguard a actions or statements which might prejudice pr Information and statistics on accidents to train youth training scheme have always been made to this House, and this will continue.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conveyancing

Mr. Gorst asked the Attorney-General introduce legislation to ensure that banks societies or any other organisations likely to conveyancing work are excluded from doing circumstances in which a conflict of interests r as a result of working for both the vendo purchaser.

The Attorney-General: I have nothing to add to previous statements on this topic. No legislation is contemplated during the present Session of Parliament.

ENERGY

Nuclear Security

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all police forces, quasi police forces or security agencies which operate in respect of civil nuclear matters.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority constabulary, which was established by statute, protects United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels establishements and nuclear materials in transit. I understand that BNFL and the CEGB employ commercial security firms at some sites. This is a matter for them.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy how Britain compares with other countries in energy efficiency; what was the position in each of the last 10 years; and on what statistical data he bases his conclusion.

Mr. David Hunt: In making comparisons of Britain's performance on improving its energy efficiency, my Department has drawn on the statistics prepared by the OECD and the International Energy Agency. Figures covering the 10 years 1973-83, for the UK and its chief industrial and economic competitors, are as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Women's Hospitals

Q32. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister what reply she has sent to the letter from Dr. Jean Lawrie about keeping open the South London Hospital for Women and the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson hospital sent to her on 11 February.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Health and Social Security has sent a reply to Dr. Lawrie on my behalf.

Down Thomas

Q97. Mr. Steen asked the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Down Thomas.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Ayot St. Peter

Q113. Mr. Murphy asked the Prime Minister if sh will pay a visit to the parish of Ayot St. Peter.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to d so.

Privatisation

Q118. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Prime Ministe if she will make a statement on progress of th Government's privatisation programme.

The Prime Minister: Since 1979 privatisation ha freed 12 major companies and a number of othe enterprises from state control. Over 400,000 employee have been transferred to the private sector. On averag around 80 per cent. of eligible employees have taken u shares and now own a stake in the business in which the work. Our measures to encourage the small investor to bu shares have probably doubled the number of shareholder in the United Kingdom. The common pattern fo privatised companies has been improved turnover an higher profits, enabling them to increase investment an create more jobs. We shall continue to sustain th momentum of the privatisation programme and spread it many benefits as widely as possible.

Security Surveillance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whethe the Government will seek to establish an all-part committee of privy councillors to scutinise all application for surveillance where it is alleged that the persons o organisations whose right to privacy is to be secretl curtailed constitute a threat the Parliamentary democrac by seeking to undermine it by political, industrial o violent means.

The Prime Minister: No. I do not believe that ther is any reason to depart from the principle of ministeria accountability for national security matters. As far a investigations into subversive activities are concerned, am satisfied that these are carried out with proper regar for the definition of such activities first given by Lor Harris of Greenwich:

"those which threaten the safety or well-being of the State an which are intended to undermine or overthrow Parliamentar democracy by political, industrial or violent means"—[Official Report, House of Lords, 26 February 1975; Vol. 357, c. 947.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what i the definition of a Communist sympathiser for th purposes of surveillance by the security services.

The Prime Minister: A Communist sympathiser i commonly understood to be a person who, whilst no himself a Communist, supports the aims and intentions o communism. Under the terms of its directive, the Securit Service has a duty to investigate the activities of suc people where there is a threat to the defence of the realm as a whole from attempts at espionage and sabotage, o from actions of persons and organisations (whethe directed from within or without the country) which ma be judged subversive of the state.

European Council

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister if she will see to ensure that the agenda for meetings of the Europea

Council distinguishes between items which come within the scope of the European Economic Community treaties and those which do not.

The Prime Minister: The function of the European Council is to provide strategic direction and political impetus for all areas of European Community work and for co-operation between member states outside the treaty framework; for example, in political co-operation. No purpose is therefore served in distinguishing between matters discussed on the basis of whether or not they fall within the scope of the treaties.

Engagements

Mr. Colvin asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 28 February.

Mr. Eggar asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Skinner asked the Prime Minister, if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 28 February.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 28 February.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will be having further meetings later today.

Surrogate Motherhood

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received on the legal implications for children born by commercial surrogate motherhood; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 14 January, at column 63.

ENVIRONMENT

Crime Prevention

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority crime prevention schemes are currently funded through the urban aid programme.

Sir George Young: In 1984-85 the urban programme is funding some 300 projects promoted by local authorities which are intended to prevent crime, or alleviate its effects. The total value of these projects is approximately £6·3 million. Local authorities operate about 40 per cent. of these projects directly; the rest are run by voluntary organisations.

Empty Dwellings (Greater London)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes have taken place in the number of empty dwellings in Greater London and in each of its component boroughs and the City in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in each of the last six years up to the latest date for which information is available.

Sir George Young: The available information is from housing authorities' annual housing investment programme returns, which, except for their own dwelling stock, are based on such evidence as they can gather. Figures for consecutive years may not be comparable because they are not on a common basis, so that apparent changes must be interpreted with caution, not only for the private sector but for the public sector, which includes, as well as council houses, some dwellings owned by other public authorities and by housing associations.

The figures reported by the authorities for each year from 1978 and the increases or decreases each year are given in the following table, with estimates for Greater London which include allowances for missing figures.

Merseyside (Partnership Committee)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to call a meeting of the partnership committee for Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have no plans at this stage to call a meeting of the Liverpool partnership committee. My officials have met the three partners — Liverpool city council, Merseyside county council and the Liverpool health authority — about their inputs to the 1985-86 partnership programme, and discussions are continuing.

Local Government Reform (Merseyside)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations from individuals residing in the county of Merseyside he has now received (a) opposing his plans to abolish Merseyside county council and (b) favourable to his plans.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The informtion requested is not available in this form. However, my Department has received over 1,000 coupons opposing abolition deriving from advertisements placed, and leaflets circulated, by the Merseyside county council, at the ratepayers' expense, which make alarmist and unjustified claims about the effects of abolition.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors he took into account about the effect on modernisation programmes for inter-war council dwellings when deciding to reduce further the prescribed proportion of capital receipts which local authorities can retain to supplement their capital expenditure.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government take account of need in setting the level of gross capital expenditure provision fol local authorities. The proposed reduction in the prescribed proportion is one of the steps which we consider necessary to deliver that level of gross expenditure without overspending.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he is having with representatives of the Metropolitan borough of Wolverhampton about the effect of his decisions on capital receipts on plans for building an extension to the town's central library, improving its information facilities, replacing its central baths and extending the central art gallery.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received no representations from the council on this matter.

Geographic Information

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the setting up of a committee of inquiry into the handling of geographic information in the United Kingdom, as agreed in the Government's response to the first report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology on "Remote Sensing and Digital Mapping", Cmnd. 9320.

Mr. Waldegrave: The committee of inquiry has now been established. Its terms of reference are:

"To advise the Secretary of State for the Environment within two years on the future handling of geographic information in the United Kingdom, taking account of modern developments in information technology and of markets needs".

I am pleased to announced that Lord Chorley has been appointed as chairman of the committee, and Mr. Walter Smith, who retires in March from his present position as director general of the Ordnance Survey, is to be deputy chairman. The remaining members of the committee will be appointed shortly and the committee will begin its work in April.

Sand and Gravel Association (Exhibition)

Mr. Dorrell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to New Horizons in Restoration, by the Sand and Gravel Association, to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Macfarlane: Arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 11 to 15 March.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the moneys which they have been entitled to spend under (a) section 137 and (b) section 142 of the Local Government Act 1972 have been spent in each of the last six years by (i) the Greater London council, (ii) each of the London borough councils, (iii) the Common Council of the City of London, (iv) each of the metropolitan county councils and (v) each of the metropolitan district councils.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 62]: Details of expenditure under section 142 are not collected centrally. Expenditure under section 137 was not collected centrally prior to 1982-83. The available information is as follows:

Authorities' expenditure under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 as a percentage of their maximum entitlement

TRANSPORT

Channel Link

85. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received the report of the Anglo-French working party on the conditions which developers of a Channel link would require to conform to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Yes. My right hon. Friend will make a statement in the near future.

Fatal Road Accidents

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of a single fatal road accident.

Mrs. Chalker: The average cost of a fatal road accident in Great Britain is estimated at £167,160 in 1983 (the most recent year for which an estimate is available); this figure includes resource costs and an allowance for pain, grief and suffering.

Crossing (Thatched House, Leytonstone High Road)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations have been received for a pedestrian phase to the junction crossing at the Thatched House, Leytonstone high road; and when his decision is likely to be made.

Mrs. Chalker: No further representations have been received, but I have just written to the hon. Member with details of some layout improvements we are proposing to help pedestrians.

British Rail (Asbestos)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what programmes British Rail has made to identify asbestos in its installations; what discoveries have been made, by location; what steps have been taken to (i) remove or (ii) otherwise make such asbestos safe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is primarily a matter for the management of British Rail. However I can tell the hon. Member that British Rail has an agreement with its trade unions on a timetable for removing asbestos from rolling stock by 1987. Asbestos in buildings and structures is removed or sealed in position as soon as there is any possibility that fibres may be released into the atmosphere. If it has to be disturbed for repairs it is removed as necessary.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what programmes London Regional Transport has to identify asbestos in its installations; what dicoveries have been made by location of (a) blue asbestos, (b) brown asbestos and (c) white asbestos; what plans there are for its (i) removal and (ii) otherwise making safe; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: This is primarily a matter for the management of London Regional Transport. However I understand that London Regional Transport has surveyed all installations containing asbestos and has identified its type.

Asbestos in buildings and structures is removed or sealed in position as soon as there is any possibility that fibres may be released into the atmosphere; if it has to be disturbed for repairs, it is removed as necessary.

London Regional Transport (Asbestos)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether Her Majesty's Government will make a specific allocation of funds to London Regional Transport for the identification and subsequent removal or making safe of asbestos in London Regional Transport installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I would expect LRT management to take account of prospective requirements for expenditure on asbestos removal or similar measures when reaching a view as to their future external finance requirements.

Public Transport (Reports)

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the reports his Department commissioned on "Tendering of Bus Services" by Steer, Davis & Gleave Ltd., and on concessionary fares by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory has been engaged on two research projects, the first concerned with the use of on-board equipment to process concessionary fares and the second with the general question of methods of reimbursement for concessionary fare schemes. The first project contains confidential information of a commercial nature which it would not be appropriate to publish, but it is my intention to make a report on the second project available to the House when the work has been finalised.

The report by Steer, Davies and Gleave on competitive tendering also contains information provided in confidence and is unsuitable for publication. I am arranging for a summary of its conclusions to be placed in the Library.

WALES

Development Agencies (Expenditure)

Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum of money spent by the Welsh development agency on promotion and marketing for the financial years 1982-83 and 1983-84; and what is the expected spending for the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh Development Agency spent £2·3 million on promotion and marketing in 1982-83 and, in addition, made a grant of £1 million to the Development Corporation for Wales of which about £0·5 million was spent in the promotion overseas of Wales as a location for industrial investment. In 1983-84 promotional expenditure by the WDA, including expenditure by WINvest which succeeded the Development Corporation for Wales on 1 April 1983, totalled £2·6 million. The Agency, again including WINvest, expects to spend about £3 million on promotion and marketing in 1984-85. These figures exclude salaries and other related costs.

Industrial Aid (South Glamorgan)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of offers of selective financial assistance made for projects in South Glamorgan from (a) July 1975 to May 1979 and (b) May 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In the periods 1 July 1975 to 30 April 1979 and 1 May 1979 to 26 February 1985 the numbers of offers of regional selective assistance made in South Glamorgan were 46 and 149 respectively.

Holyhead (Assistance)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will conduct a review into the level of government financial assistance to the area of Holyhead.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: No. I refer my hon. Friend to my letter to him of 10 December 1984.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number and percentage of houses in (a) Wales, (b) Mid-Glamorgan and (c) Clwyd which require repairs costing (i) less than £4,500 and (ii) more than £4,500 in both the public and private sector.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The most recent reliable information concerning the cost of repairs of housing in Wales is contained in the "Welsh House Condition Survey (1981)," a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what number and percentage of houses in (a) Wales, (b) Mid-Glamorgan, (c) Cynon Valley and (d) Clwyd lack one or more of the defined basic amenities.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The most recent information about the condition of Welsh housing at national and county level is published in the "Welsh House Condition Survey (1981)," a copy of which is in the Library.

The latest information available about housing conditions in the Cynon Valley is contained in a survey commissioned by the borough council.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers employed in the Welsh textile and clothing industry for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Doctors

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of practising doctors per 1,000 population in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Mid-Glamorgan.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to general medical practitioners. At 1 October 1984 the provisional rates for unrestricted principals in Wales and Mid-Glamorgan were 0·53 and 0·5 respectively. Details for England and Scotland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Social Services and Scotland respectively.

Ysbyty Gwynedd (Renal Unit)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he plans to have any discussions with relevant trade unions, including the National Union of Public Employees, concerning the proposed subsidiary renal unit at Ysbyty Gwynedd at Bangor.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. In relation to establishing a renal unit in a particular locality I would expect the district health authority as our agent to undertake any discussions with trades unions and others as necessary.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Council of Ministers

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The usual written forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. Heads of State and Government will meet at the European Council in Brussels on 29-30 March. At present seven meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for March.

The Environment Council is due to meet on 7 March to discuss the draft directives on the control of vehicle emissions, air pollution from large combustion plant, the use and disposal of containers of liquids for human consumption and the reduction of titanium dioxide waste. It will also consider the draft of a new directive to control the discharge of dangerous waste into water.

The Economic and Finance Council is expected to meet on 11 March to discuss the financial framework for the guidance section of the European Agricultural Guarantee and Guidance Fund over the next five years; the Commission's quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community; points arising from the European Court of Auditors annual report for 1983; and the progress report on the unit trust directive concerning the harmonisation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions. The Council may also consider changes in the Community loan mechanism; procedures for implementing Budget discipline; and an increase in the Euratom lending ceiling.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 11-12 March and 25-27 March to consider the Commission's price proposals for 1985 and possibly agricultural structures such as aids for investment in agriculture holdings, for forestry and for the protection of the environment.

The Energy Council is expected to meet on 15 March to discuss proposals for new programmes of support for energy demonstration projects and hydrocarbon technology projects; the conclusions of the review of energy pricing policy in the Community and the rational use of energy in buildings; and a Commission paper on the refining and petroleum product situation in the Community. Ministers may also discuss aids to the solid fuels sector and the energy aspects of the draft directive on the control of emissions from large combustion plant.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet in a specially extended session on 17-20 March to prepare the Community position for negotiations with Spain and Portugal. It will also continue its discussions of the new own resources decision and the financing of the 1985 Budget, and the new Commission proposals for integrated Mediterranean programmes; and will consider the proposal for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations in the GATT. Ministers may also consider a draft negotiating mandate for the second EC/Yugoslavia financial protocol; and the Community's policy towards its Mediterranean partners following enlargement.

The Industry Council is expected to meet on either 22 or 25 March to discuss both internal and external steel issues, including proposed amendments to the steel aids code, the supply of ferrous scrap and exports of steel to the United States. Ministers may also discuss advanced manufacturing technologies, especially standards, and the tariff structure for imports of consumer electronic goods and semi-conductors.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Equipment (Blast and Heat Protection)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he hopes to issue guidance to industry on the protection of vital equipment against blast and heat damage.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

COCOM Talks

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement concerning the outcome of the recent COCOM talks; and whether any change is proposed in the list review procedure.

Mr. Channon: The Co-ordinating Committee held a high-level meeting in Paris on 6 and 7 February. The meeting reviewed progress made in COCOM since the previous high level meeting in April 1983, which was considered to be satisfactory both in respect of co-ordination between the Member States and the updating of COCOM's lists of controlled products and technologies. The meeting agreed guidelines for the content and method of future work. It also approved a modification of the procedure for reviewing its lists, which will be divided into four segments, each to be studied once every four years.

European Space Agency

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he intends to have with the Science and Engineering Research Council about the annual 5 per cent. rise which he agreed should be contributed to the European Space Agency's mandatory science budget between 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Pattie: I agreed to this increase in the European Space Agency's mandatory science budget on behalf of the Government at the successful ministerial Council of the agency on 30 and 31 January. This followed full consultations with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and with the Chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council, both of whom were represented in the United Kingdom delegation. This Department and the SERC continue to maintain regular contact in order to ensure that the Government pursues consistent and effective policies in all the activities of the Agency.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of financial guarantees under the loan guarantee scheme which his Department was called upon to meet in the financial year 1983-84 because the business had failed; what proportion this represented of loans under the scheme; what are the equivalent figures for 1984-85 to date; and what has been the cost to public funds.

Mr. Trippier: In financial year 1983-84, 1,462 guarantees were called, 10·2 per cent. of the guarantees issued in that year. In 1984-85, 1,490 guarantees were called up to 31 January 1985, 9·4 per cent. of the guarantees issued. The net cost of the scheme to date is £66·1 million.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in how many cases where a loan guarantee has been called upon and his Department have had to meet the cost due to the failure of the business concerned, papers have been referred to the police.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has not referred any of these cases to the police.

Drugs (Patent Life)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to provide extensions to the existing conditions of patent life for the research and development of drugs.

Mr. Butcher: The question of drug patent life is not only a matter of our domestic law; it involves consideration of the United Kingdom's obligations under the European patent convention. I intend to seek the opinion of the Government's standing advisory committee on patents and to this end have asked the pharmaceutical industry to prepare a paper setting out its case.

Letter Post Service

Mr Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response the Post Office has made to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the letter post service of the Post Office in the head post office areas of Glasgow, Belfast and Cardiff, and in the numbered London postal districts, published on 12 September 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I have now received the initial response of the Post Office to the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission published last September. I am placing copies of the Post Office's response in the Library of the House.

I regard it as a very serious matter that the commission was unable to come to a firm conclusion that the Post Office was not pursuing a course of conduct which operates against the public interest in providing a letter post services in London, Belfast, Cardiff and Glasgow. The commission suspended judgment on the public interest question taking the view that this would depend chiefly on whether the Post Office made adequate efforts to implement charges which were largely common ground between the Post Office and the commission.

The Commission has produced a particularly thorough and comprehensive report and has made 78 recommendations covering financial control, costing and forecasting; efficiency measurement; personnel and industrial relations; mechanisation; and quality of service. The commission took the view that the Post Office should give immediate and particular emphasis to introducing a proper system of work measurement and work standards; introducing more effective budgetary control and developing a better understanding of the costs of the business; and completing the letter post plan and bringing its performance up to the levels of efficiency recommended in the report by the dates stated.

In its response, the Post Office has accepted 7
78 recommendations and has indicated that, i cases. the recommendations reflect the direction
Office thinking and action already in hand.

A number of the recommendations have industrial relations implications. The Post Office

Ford Motor Co. Ltd.

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for T
Industry when the Monopolies and Mergers Co Report on the Ford Motor Company Ltd.
published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The report is published today

On 11 May 1984, the Director General of Fai referred to the Commission under section
Competition Act 1980 Ford's policy and practi granting to any person (other than to persons s body parts to Ford) a licence to manufacture or s United Kingdom any replacement body part wh claims to be entitled to prohibit such manufactu by virtue of the copyright subsisting in the dra designs of body parts.

The commission concluded that Ford's practice was anti-competitive in that it had the effect of preventing competition in the supply in the United Kingdom of replacement body panels or part panels for Ford cars and vans. They also concluded that the practice was clearly adverse to the public interest, because it eliminated competition from independent manufacturers which had had a beneficial effect on prices and on innovation.

The commission considered that the public interest in competition, Ford's interest in obtaining an adequate return on its investment and the public interest in allowing a reward for innovation and investment could all be met if, for body panels, the period of protection under the Registered Designs Act 1949, were to be limited to five years. It recommended also that a corresponding amendment be made to section 10 of the Copyright Act 1956 and that under that Act the period of protection for body panels not registrable under the Registered Designs Act should be reduced to a period not exceeding five years. However, they recognised that a more general reform of the legislation, applying more widely than body panels, could also remedy the adverse effects which they had identified.

The commission recognised that changes of the law would take time. They suggested that in the intervening period the preservation of competition in the supply of replacement body parts for Ford vehicles could depend upon Ford's readiness to respect the public interest as they had defined it, and to modify its position accordingly.

I accept the findings of this report, which is an important contribution to the debate over the relationship between the laws governing intellectual property rights, and those governing competition. The Government are reviewing the law of copyright and industrial design protection in the light of consultations on the Green Paper on "Copyright, Design and Performers Protection" (Cmnd. 8302) and the Green Paper on "Intellectual Property Rights and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9117). We shall take account of the report's recommendations in respect of body panels in our consideration of wider legislative reform.

Meanwhile, in the light of the report's findings, I am asking the Director General of Fair Trading to open discussions with the company with a view to securing appropriate undertakings.

Hall Russell, Shipbuilders

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the companies which have submitted tenders for the purchase of Hall Russell, Shipbuilders, Aberdeen under the Government's privatisation proposals.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 25 February 1985, c. 10]: I refer to the reply my hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Malone) on 22 February at column 631.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

No-passport Excursion Scheme

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the withdrawal of the no-passport excursion scheme has had on the numbers of short-stay travellers crossing between French and British ports.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 14 February at column 270. The full information required for our review of the no-passport excursion arrangement is not yet available, and I am not yet able, therefore, to provide the details requested.

British Broadcasting Corporation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which external services of the British Broadcasting Corporation will be affected and what number of posts will be lost arising from his decision to scale down the services' funding for the 1985-86 financial year.

Mr. Renton: BBC external services' funding for the 1985-86 financial year at approximately £91 million is 7 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1984-85. The external services were requested to absorb £1·2 million in risen costs relating to pay and pay-related awards. They have informed us that they will be able to do this without reducing their broadcasting services. It is for the BBC to decide whether any posts need be lost. We have been told, however, that no redundancies are envisaged.

Falklands Campaign (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now place in the Library a copy of the minute from the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the right hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Pym) dated 1 May 1982 and referred to in the Prime Minister's letter of 8 October 1984 to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, 22 October, Official Report, column 469.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. The minute is a classified document. It is, however, included in a set of documents which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is arranging for members of the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs to see, under appropriate security arrangements.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Victim Support

1. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make available additional funding for local victim support schemes.

58. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide additional funding for staff recruitment for victim support schemes.

Mr. Mellor: We will be considering this possibility in the course of the 1985 public expenditure survey.

52. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his response to the conclusions on victim support schemes of the Home Affair Committee in its report, published on 12 December 1984 on compensation and support for the victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: We hope to publish the Government's reply to the Home Affairs Committee report shortly.

Sunday Trading

2. Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to make a statement on the Auld report.

60. Mr. Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make a statement on the Auld report.

78. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the Auld report on shop hours.

79. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce his response to the Auld committee recommendations on the Sunday trading laws.

80. Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce his decision on the Auld report on shop hours.

Mr. Brittan: I propose to make a statement very soon.

50. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on recent representations he has received about reform of the Sunday trading laws.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a number of representations about the recommendations of the Auld report concerning Sunday trading, some in favour and some against. My right hon. and learned Friend is taking these into account.

Detention Centres

8. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to alter the regime in detention centres during 1985.

Mr. Brittan: As I said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on 13 February, at columns 196-97, a new regime for all detention centres will come into operation on 6 March.

28. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders will be subject to the new regime for detention centres when it comes into operation on 6 March.

Mr. Mellor: The new regime will apply in all 18 detention centres in England and Wales; offenders subject to detention centre orders may be held elsewhere only for temporary purposes or medical reasons. Information on numbers of receptions under detention centre orders is contained in Home Office Statistical Bulletin, Issue No. 2/1985, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Entry Clearance Procedure

11. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make changes in entry clearance procedures to ensure that the wives and children of men settled in the United Kingdom are able to exercise their entitlement to enter the United Kingdom with the minimum of impediment and delay.

Mr. Waddington: The entry clearance procedure is a sensible and effective means of assessing whether women and children seeking to settle here are entitled to do so. There are no plans to relax this requirement alth improvements are made in the administrative arr ments wherever possible, within the constraints o resources available.

Prisons (Education)

12. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Sta the Home Department whether he will make a state about education facilities at Holloway prison.

Mr. Mellor: The facilities for education at Holl prison were inspected by Her Majesty's inspecto schools between 26 and 30 March 1984 and their was published on 14 February this year. Action o report's recommendations will be taken when Holloway special project committee gives us its repo the regime as a whole in July.

47. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State f Home Department if he will make a statement o current state of prison education at Holloway priso other penal establishments.

Mr. Mellor: On the question of Holloway, I v refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier toda question from the hon. Member for Wolverham North-East (Mrs. Short). More generally, the p department is continuing the development of p educational services reflecting the important role they in prison regimes as a whole, in accordance wit Government reply to the first report from the Educa Science and Arts Committee, Session 1982-83, HC (Cmnd. 9126).

Fire Precautions

15. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State fo Home Department how many representations he received advocating a need for a national code of pr on means of escape in case of fire in houses in mul occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Over the last five years we received a total of 28 inquiries from 14 sep individuals and bodies about progress on the co guidance for fire safety in houses in multiple occupa In addition, a number of hon. Members have rec written to my right hon. and learned Friend on this n and have tabled questions on the subject. It is hope a draft code, to form the basis for consultation interested organisations, will be available in the nex months.

Licensing Hours

16. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State fo Home Department if his Department has yet complet review of licensing hours.

Mr. Mellor: We have no immediate plans to re the licensing law, but my right hon. and learned Fri keeping the matter under review and will conside results of the survey into the working of extended lice hours in Scotland, which my right hon. Friend Secretary of State for Scotland expects to be availa the summer.

Immigration

17. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the refusal rate for (a) husbands and (b) fiancés in the Indian subcontinent in each quarter of 1984; and what percentage of these refusals was wholly or partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Waddington: About one third of all applications in the Indian subcontinent for entry clearance from husbands and about one half of those from fiancés were refused in each of the first three quarters of 1984. Applications refused solely or partly because of the primary purpose test accounted for about five sixths of all refusals for both husbands and fiancés. Information for the fourth quarter is not yet available.

19. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of husbands and fiancés applying for entry clearance in New Delhi is refused wholly or partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Waddington: About 70 per cent. of applications for entry clearance from husbands and fiancés decided in New Delhi in the first three quarters of 1984 were refused solely or partly on primary purpose grounds.

23. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he takes in respect of immigration officers and entry clearance officers whose interview notes reveal a less than impartial attitude towards applicants for settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend, and I, expect all the staff of the immigration and nationality department, including immigration officers, to consider all individual applications impartially and without discrimination on grounds of colour, race or religion. Both the conditions of service of immigration officers, and the immigration rules prohibit such discrimination. If the interviews conducted by the officers or their interview notes, both of which are monitored by supervising officers, indicate that these requirements are not being met action would be taken. This could include disciplinary action where, for example, racially discriminatory behaviour is proven. The conduct of entry clearance officers is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, but similar action would be taken by his Department.

25. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his response to the report by the Commission for Racial Equality concerning immigration procedures; what plans he has to revise the arrangements for interviewing applicants for immigration into the United Kingdom in order to alleviate problems currently experienced by New Commonwealth citizens; and if he will make a statement.

34. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received a copy of the Commission for Racial Equality report on the operation of immigration rules; and whether he will make a statement.

37. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent report by the Commission for Racial Equality on immigration procedures.

61. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his response to the Commission for Racial Equality report about immigration procedures.

70. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce his response to the report of the Commission for Racial Equality on immigration.

81. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his response to the Commission for Racial Equality's report on immigration processes.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a copy of the report. We are studying its detailed recommendations. The Government do not, however, accept the premises on which the CRE bases the report. Immigration control provides the means by which people can show whether they are entitled to come here. In assessing entitlement abuse may be discovered. Testing entitlement and being on guard against abuse are aspects of the same process—not alternatives as appears to be implied by the CRE report. They must be appropriately balanced. But the balance must reflect the fact that from various parts of the world there is continuing pressure to emigrate and people from those parts therefore try to come here and seek work when not entitled to do so. The CRE's failure to acknowledge this fact undermines much of the report's analysis.

41. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of people waiting for a visa to enter the United Kingdom to join either a husband or wife.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is available only for the Indian subcontinent. 5,000 wives in the Indian subcontinent were awaiting a decision on their application for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom at the end of September 1984. This figure includes those who have been interviewed but whose application remains undetermined. The corresponding number of husbands awaiting a decision is given in table 10 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics, Third Quarter, 1984" (Issue 27/84). Figures relating to the end of December 1984 will become available during the first half of March.

53. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chief inspector of the immigration service to discuss immigration controls.

Mr. Brittan: I meet senior officials of the immigration and nationality department, including the chief inspector, as often as the conduct of public business requires.

Official Secrets Act

18. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the Ponting case, he will make a statement on the operation of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has taken note of the diverse views expressed about the operation of the Act in the context of that case.

20. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received calling for the repeal of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

26. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the operation of the Official Secrets Act.

35. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received since 11 February advocating the amendment of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

Mr. Mellor: Up to 27 February, two (including one forwarded by an hon. Member). This excludes parliamentary questions.

39. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government will consider establishing a committee of review to re-assess the efficacy of trials by jury relating to breaches of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so.

Broadcasting (Black Community)

21. Mr. Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the Director General of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss broadcasting for the black community.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that through its national television and radio services, together with local radio, the BBC fulfils its undertaking to provide a properly balanced service, which includes making provision for the black community. I do not therefore see the need for a meeting with the Director General.

Coal Industry Dispute

22. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been registered against the police as a result of the miners' strike; and in how many of these complaints the inquiries have been completed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to a question from the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

46. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the policing of the miners' dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am glad to reaffirm our full support for the police in the action they are taking to maintain order and to ensure that those who wish to exercise their right to go to work are able to do so.

CIVIL SERVICE

HOME DEPARTMENT

Coal Industry Dispute

51. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of S
Home Department what custodial sentences passed by the courts for offences committed miners' dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: 182 immediate custodi were imposed by the courts up to and in February for offences committed in connecti miners' dispute. This total includes sentenc custody or detention in a detention centre.

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of S
Home Department how many police officers disciplined as a result of action in relation to the miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that from 1984 to 26 February, 549 complaints were m

Civil Defence

24. Sir Anthony Kershaw asked the Secret for the Home Department if he will advise local to adopt the international civil defence in identity card laid down in the Geneva conven

Mr. Giles Shaw: Not at present, but consideration.

44. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider some shorter title than the civil defence community co-ordinator for the local warden.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall certainly consider my hon. Friend's suggestion, but he will be aware that the title is recommended by the report of the working party on the standardisation of training of civil defence volunteers. A copy of the report is in the Library of the House.

63. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will advise industry on effective shelter designs to protect its employees at their place of work.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department has issued general guidance on the effect of nuclear weapons and on protective measures. Application or development of this guidance in specific areas is a matter for those primarily concerned, in this case my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

65. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what minimum qualifications are required of persons applying for the post of local authority county emergency planning officer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: General guidance is available in Home Office circular No. ES 1/1972, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The appropriate qualifications for any particular post is a matter which properly falls within the discretion of local authorities.

30. Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will advise local authorities to provide insurance cover for all civil defence volunteers when on duty.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This is a matter for local authorities to decide. I am not aware of any difficulties, but if my hon. Friend has any particular aspect in mind I shall be pleased to consider it.

76. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide guidance for local authorities on travel and subsistence rates for civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the same question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne) on 31 January, at column 236.

77. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes any new action to encourage local authorities to recruit and train civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office working party on the standardisation of training of civil defence volunteers has recommended a standard pattern and syllabus of training. The views of the local authority associations which have commented on the draft report are being considered and the final report is expected to be issued soon. A successor working party will consider the development of standardised training material.

Burglary

27. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the priority given by the Metropolitan police to combating rising rates of burglary.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The continuing inclusion of burglary in his strategy for 1985 as one of the Commissioner's operational priorities has our full support. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December, at columns 288-89, of the measures the Commissioner has introduced to further police effectiveness in the investigation of burglary.

Metropolitan Police

29. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Metropolitan police commissioner; and what subjects were discussed.

69. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Brittan: I last formally met the Commissioner on 15 January, when we discussed his report to me on the future strategy of the Metropolitan police.

Prisons

31. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he proposes to reduce the use of overtime in prisons.

Mr. Mellor: Current plans include the recruitment by April 1988 of nearly 2,300 extra staff to enable overtime levels to be reduced. Measures are also being taken to encourage the more efficient deployment of existing staff.

32. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to combat drug trafficking in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are improving the quality of the information available centrally about the incidence of drugs in prisons.

We have increased the complement of specially trained dogs from 28 to 40, and this will enable wider programmes of searching to be undertaken.

We are improving staff training on drugs. A new training package aimed specifically at the problems and needs of the prison service is currently being developed for issue to all prison department establishments.

Terrorism

33. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report of Sir Cyril Philips's review of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act.

Mr. Brittan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 19 February, at column 427.

Television Licences

36. Mr. Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received calling for changes in the present system of television concessionary licences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Eighty-three hon. Members and 145 members of the public have written in the last three months about the concessionary television licence schemes for retired and disabled people in residential care.

38. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had regarding the British Broadcasting Corporation's submission for an increase in the television licence fee.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Some 270 hon. Members and 950 members of the public have written during the current Session about an increase in television licence fees.

Departmental Staff

40. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff he has in his F6 division; and how many of them have visited local authorities during 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are 37 staff in F6 division. Nine members have visited local authorities during 1984. A number of meetings with local authority representatives have also taken place at the Home Office.

Passports

42. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to revise the list of people authorised to countersign applications for passports.

Mr. Waddington: We have no present plans to amend the notes which describe the qualifications required of persons who countersign passport applications. The occupations mentioned on the application form are as the notes indicate intended only as a guide: other people of similar standing are acceptable.

Crime Prevention (Lighting)

43. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will recommend local authorities and owners of private blocks of flats to install new vandal-proof high luminosity lighting on all balconies and passageways as crime prevention measures.

59. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent his Department's crime prevention unit commends good street lighting to local authorities as a deterrent agaist crime, and in particular theft and street violence.

64. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recommendations have been made by the crime prevention unit to local authorities regarding the use of vandal-proof lighting.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Tottenham, (Mr. Atkinson) on 14 February, at column 234.

BBC (Report)

45. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of St Home Department whether he has yet decided the Peat Marwick Mitchell report on the efficie British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We understand that the B to publish the report by Peat Marwick Mitchell

Police (Training)

48. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of St Home Department whether he is satisfied with th currently offered to police constables.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The extensive training whi constables receive is always subject to a c process of review and improvement.

75. Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of Sta Home Department whether he plans to intro changes to the racism awareness training course officers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Mem reply given to a question from the hon. Me Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 31 January, at columns

Police Service

49. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of Sta Home Department to what extent metropolita councils have assisted him in formulating his pla future of the police service in their districts follo abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Besides the Associ Metropolitan Authorities, four metropolitan councils commented individually on the proposal to the police service in the White Paper "Streaml Cities" published in October 1983. Some coun since approached the Home Office on particular a the Government's proposals. No other assistance offered.

Wintex Cimex '85

54. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of Stat Home Department if he will make a statemen Department's participation in Wintex Cimex '85 currently taking place.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Officials from the Departm involved in the planning of the United Ki contribution to the exercise and are also taking

Mr. Umaru Dikko

55. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of Sta Home Department if he has received a formal req the Government of Nigeria for the extradition Umaru Dikko.

Mr. Brittan: Yes.

Communications (Monitoring)

56. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of Stat Home Department if he will make a statemen security precautions necessary to monitor the con tions of pressure groups.

Mr. Brittan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to a question from the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Shoplifting

57. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many, and what percentage, of women who were tried on indictment with shoplifting in 1984 and who pleaded not guilty were acquitted.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to all those proceeded against for stealing from shops, irrespective of plea and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables 1983," (tables S1.1(A) in Vol. 1 and S2.1(A) in vol. 2 under offence classification 46). Of the total of females who were found guilty of acquitted of stealing from shops at all courts in England and Wales in 1983, 9 per cent. were acquitted. Reliable information on plea is not available; nor is information yet available for 1984.

Crime (Reporting)

62. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with chief constables about incentives for the reporting of criminal activity.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All citizens have a responsibility to report criminal activity to the police, and I know that it is the policy of chief officers of police to encourage them to do so.

Criminal Violence

66. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the levels of criminal violence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: The most recent figures available for England and Wales were published on 19 December in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 28/84. In the 12 months to the end of September 1984, the police recorded 112,900 offences of violence against the person, 2·4 per cent. more than in the preceding 12 months. Of these, the more serious offences, including homicide, attempted murder, wounding and endangering life, constituted about one in in 20. The restrictions on parole which my right hon. and learned Friend has introduced are intended to ensure that those imprisoned for the most serious offences of violence serve sentences which adequately reflect the gravity of their crimes.

Information regarding other parts of the United Kingdom should be sought from my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Prisoners (Reforming Techniques)

67. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what psychiatric or other medical evaluation is used in reforming techniques for prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The primary concern of the psychiatric and other medical services available in prison is with the health of the individual. If my hon. Friend has a particular point in mind, my noble Friend will be glad to look into it.

Nuclear Winter

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has held any discussions with the United States Government on the nuclear winter findings.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The nuclear winter hypothesis naturally features among those topics mentioned during the continuing contacts between officials of our two Governments.

Demonstrations

71. Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the present policing arrangements for mass demonstrations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The arrangements for policing a mass demonstration are a matter for the chief officer of police concerned.

Grants

72. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the monitoring of grants authorised by him under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mr. Waddington: Applications for section 11 grant are considered against the criteria set out in Home Office circular No. 97/1982. The continued eligibility of posts for grant is reviewed after three years. We are satisfied with these arrangements which are kept under review.

Wine Tasting

73. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the operation of the licensing arrangements for wine tasting at English vineyards.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware that English wine producers favour amendments to the law on permitted opening hours for licensed premises to enable wine to be sold by the glass at vineyards during the afternoon. My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans for legislation on the licensing law, but the views of English wine producers will be borne in mind in our current review of the licensing hours.

Community Radio

74. Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the future of local and community radio.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The proposals for the further development of local radio outlined in the third report of the Home Office local radio working party were approved in principle by my noble Friend the Viscount Whitelaw in 1981. Any modification or extension to that pattern would be the subject of a further statement to the House. As regards community radio, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) on 23 January, at columns 417-18.

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received in respect of the setting up of a wider community radio network;

(2) if he has received any independent representations, other than those from the British Broadcasting Corporation and Independent Broadcasting Authority, on the availability of wavelengths for the proposed system of community radio.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Haywood) on 23 January, at columns 417-18, we have received about 120 letters on community radio, together with a similar number of telephone inquiries. Most of the approaches have been from persons wishing to set up community radio stations, and some have referred to the availability and allocation of frequencies.

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a further announcement about his plans for the development of a wider community radio network.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As outlined in the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Haywood) on 23 January, at columns 417-18, my right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make a further announcement before too long in the light of our study of the means by which community radio can best be taken forward.

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy, in determining commercial criteria for the new community radio system, to take account of the extent to which such criteria may affect the ability of small businesses to participate.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We regard it as important that community broadcasting should provide opportunities for those, whether voluntary groups, small businesses or otherwise, who are best able to reflect the interests of the communities they wish to serve.

Anti-street Crime Operation (Brixton)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis of representations made to the Commissioner by Lambeth council police committee concerning the special police anti-street crime operation launched in Brixton in December 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that Lambeth council's police committee wrote to the commander of L District on 25 January expressing its opposition to the targeting and surveillance operation launched by the police in Brixton on 21 January. In particular, the committee claimed that the operation had gone ahead without any form of consultation with the people of Lambeth. In reply, the commander pointed out that the operation was considered necessary to combat a serious increase in crime in the area, that he had received numerous requests for such action and that the proposed operation had been fully discussed in public on 15 January at a meeting of the Lambeth Community/Police Consultative Group (on which the Lambeth council is represented) and had been endorsed by the group.

I understand that provisional results from the operation are encouraging.

Police Establishment (Leyton)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the police establishment number for the area covering Leyton and the number available for duty in the area for each month since March 1984; how many in the establishment have been sent on weekly tours of duty in mining areas; how many such weekly tours there have been since March 1984; and how many home beat officers in the area have been diverted into mining areas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the information readily available is as follows. The total police establishment and strength of "J" district (which includes the Leyton division) for each month since March 1984 are as set out in the following table. Officers from "J" district have been sent to the mining areas for periods of duty ranging from one to eight days on 39 occasions since March 1984. The average number of officers sent on each occasion was 53. Information about the number of home beat officers sent on mutual aid duties could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Children (Carers)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made with his review of the arrangements for the disclosure of information to prospective employers about any relevant criminal background of persons seeking to work with children in a paid or voluntary capacity; when he expects to conclude it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly on the terms of reference for the review and on the brisk timetable which he will set for the review's completion.

Miss Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the most recent report he has had from the West Mercia police about its investigation into the case of the late Miss Hilda Murrell.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of West Mercia constabulary has kept my right hon. and learned Friend informed of continuing inquiries in this case. I understand that the latest information, including that provided by the hon. Member, has not served to take the investigation further.

HMS Conqueror (Log Book)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the cost to public funds of the recent visit to St. Lucia by two officers of his force to conduct inquiries into the loss of the navigator's log book from HMS Conqueror; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the two officers who went to the West Indies departed from the United Kingdom on 3 February and returned on 20 February. The cost of the return air fare was £1,363 per officer. During their stay, each officer was entitled to a daily subsistence allowance and reimbursement of additional expenditure on items such as official telephone calls. The Director of Public Prosecutions, at whose request the visit was made, will fully reimburse the Metropolitan police.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been made against police officers in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years; and how many have been upheld.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information about complaints made against the police and their outcome is contained in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. The reports are available in the Library of the House.

Neighbourhood Watch Scheme

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of neighbourhood watch schemes.

Mr. Shaw: We welcome the contribution neighbourhood watch schemes are making to police-community co-operation to prevent crime. While it is too early to draw firm general conclusions, initial indications from a number of schemes are that neighbourhood watch can be effective. Evaluation of neighbourhood watch is currently being conducted in the Metropolitan police district and we await the results with interest.

Betting Offices

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a consultation document on the rules governing betting offices following the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries (Amendment) Act 1984.

Mr. Brittan: A consultation document has been published today and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. In addition, copies have been sent to those people who appear to have an interest in the rules governing betting offices and copies may also be obtained by writing to E3 Division, the Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT. I shall want to look carefully at the comments received in response to the consultation document before bringing forward regulations affecting the displays which are allowed outside betting offices or an order changing the facilities which may be provided on the premises.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Lighting

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the projected expenditure for 1985-86 on the provision of new road lighting in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The estimated expenditure on the provision of new street lighting in 1985-86 is £2·6 million.

Belfast (Cross-town Rail Link)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessments have been made of the possible economic and social advantages for Northern Ireland of a cross-town rail link in Belfast between York road station and central station.

Mr. Chris Patten: The economic and social advantages were examined at the public inquiry into the Belfast Transport Strategy Review in 1977. A new strategy plan for the Belfast urban area is being prepared and this will include a review of transportation strategy for which updated analyses of the costs and benefits of component proposals will be prepared.

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Government's proposals to the European Commission for the regeneration of Belfast include the provision of funds for a cross-town rail link.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Belfast integrated operations document presented to the European Commission identifies a large number of projects. However, only the projects in schedule 1 to the document have funds committed to them. The implementation of projects in schedules II and III is dependent on funds becoming available, and the cross-harbour rail link is a schedule III project.

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary last had a meeting with the Chief Commissioner of the police in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Scott: 19 April 1983.

District Council Members (Expenses)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the allowances and expenses for which members of district councils qualify.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Firearms

82. Sir John Farr asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied that the system for preventing the illegal entry of firearms into the United Kingdom is operating satisfactorily.

Mr. Hayhoe: Although it is never possible to be wholly satisfied under a system of selected checks, nevertheless I have no evidence that existing controls are inadequate.

Road Building

Mr. David Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer to a question from the hon. Member for Aberdeen North, (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, 24 January, column 1120, he will provide the figures which lie behind his statement that road building will increase substantially in 1986 in real terms.

Mr. Lawson: The phrase "next year" in my statement refers to the next financial year 1985-86, rather than the calendar year 1986.

Provision for expenditure on new road construction in 1985-86 (excluding structural and other maintenance) is £619 millions, an increase of £34 millions (6 per cent.) over provision in 1984-85.

Inland Revenue Staff

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 402, on what dates the last two reviews of arrangements for emergency staffing in the Inland Revenue took place;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 402, whether the arrangements for emergency staff in the Inland Revenue are reviewed at national or regional level in so far as they affect district offices;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 402, why the regional controller, north-west, Inland Revenue, in a letter to district officers referred to staff levels in an emergency such as a dispute in the power industry leading to electricity cuts or a tanker drivers' strike.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Pound Sterling

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table publishing the real value of the pound sterling, taking 1964 as base year, from 1964 in each year to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lawson: The information requested is as follows:

	Real Sterling Exchange Rate Index (annual averages)*
1964	100·0
1965	100·1
1966	99·5
1967	99·4
1968	85·2
1969	83·2
1970	84·4
1971	88·5
1972	90·6
1973	81·8
1974	82·1
1975	88·0
1976	80·6
1977	80·0
1978	83·8
1979	94·2
1980	113·4
1981	113·9
1982	108·0
1983	99·8
1984	94·7

* The real Exchange Rate Index (ERI) is calculated by deflating the nominal ERI by a trade-weighted index of United Kingdom price movements relative to those in competitors' economies (using GDP deflators). The weights in the index are as in the IMF's Multilateral Exchange Rate Model.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the annual percentage change in manufacturing output for 1974 to 1984.

Mr. Lawson: Revised figures for manufacturing output were issued on 13 February in the press notice on the index of the production industries for December 1984. The annual percentage changes in manufacturing output for 1974 to 1984 are as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1974	−1·2
1975	−6·9
1976	+1·9
1977	+2·0
1978	+0·5
1979	−0·2
1980	−8·8
1981	−6·1
1982	+0·6
1983	+2·5
1984	+3·3

Senior Police Officers (Pensions)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from police committees and federations about the possibility of taxation being imposed on lump sums received by senior police officers upon retirement.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

West Midlands

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total per annum of taxes paid by the west midlands region and by Wolverhampton; what sum this represents per employed person; and what is the total of Government aid received by (a) the west midlands region and (b) Wolverhampton.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the capital gains tax rules which apply to assets disposed of in a series of transactions; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1984, c. 326]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has become concerned at the increasing use of the practice known as bond washing, that is the conversion of income arising on fixed interest securities into capital form so that it is chargeable according to the rules of capital gains tax rather than those of income tax. This can be combined with the exemption from capital gains tax enjoyed by most fixed interest securities held for 12 months or more with the result that tax is being avoided on a large and rising scale. It is estimated that this practice is now costing the Exchequer about £300 million a year.

Accordingly my right hon. Friend has decided to take action to bring the tax advantages of bond washing to an end. The necessary legislation containing my right hon. Friend's proposals will be included in the forthcoming Finance Bill. It will take effect from 28 February 1986, but there will be provisions to limit forestalling and these will take effect from midnight last night.

This decision was announced before the market opened today so that the market could trade in full knowledge of the Government's intention, which affects the specific characteristics of gilt-edged securities. With my right hon. Friend's authority the Inland Revenue has issued a press notice giving fuller details. I have placed copies of the press notice in the Library.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish Government expenditure on housing per head of population in (a) Wales, and the comparable figures for (b) England, (c) Scotland and (d) the United Kingdom for each year since 1979-80;

(2) if he will publish Government expenditure on education per head of population in (a) Wales, and the comparable figures for (b) England and (c) the United Kingdom for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his replies, 14 February 1985, c. 291]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Malone) on 22 February at columns 608-18.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the fall in the exchange rate since the end of 1981 has had on inflation.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1985 c. 494]: It is impossible to quantify with any accuracy the effect on inflation of the fall in sterling since the end of 1981.

EC (Rebate)

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) at what stage under the Fontainebleau agreement it was anticipated that the United Kingdom would obtain its rebate by abatement of contribution;

(2) by what date he anticipates that the United Kingdom rebate will be obtained through abatement of contribution.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his replies, 21 February 1985 c. 572]: The Fontainebleau agreement makes clear that all future compensation to the United Kingdom will be through abatement of the United Kingdom's VAT contributions, when the agreement is implemented. The 1,000 mecu in respect of the 1984 financial year is due to be paid by the end of 1985. Agreement has not yet been reached by the Council of Ministers on the procedure and timing of implementation and rebated budgetary matters.

Benefits (Taxation)

Mr. Ashley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of revenue raised from taxation of benefits paid to the unemployed in 1984.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to the reply, 21 February 1985 c. 571]: The yield, in a full year at 1984-85 levels, from taxing benefits paid to the unemployed is estimated at about £625 million.

Unemployment Costs

Mr. Ashley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form his estimate of the average monthly cost to the Exchequer when an adult male worker on average weekly earnings, (on the basis of all industry and services covered by the "New Earnings Survey", updated if appropriate by the average earnings index, and assuming pay was not affected by absence) becomes unemployed, showing separately (a) for single men and (b) for a married man with two children, one aged under five years and the other between five and 10 years, the following disbursements: (i) unemployment benefit, (ii) supplementary benefit, (iii) income tax rebate, (iv) rent and rate rebate, and the following losses of revenue, (v) from income tax, (vi) from taxes on consumption of goods and services, (vii) from employers' national insurance contributions and (viii) from employees' national insurance contribution.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1985 c. 608]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 15 November 1984 at column 354.

Company Taxation

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide a motive test in section 29 of the Finance Act 1973.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 211]: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Employees (Company Shares)

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend section 79 of the Finance Act 1972 in relation to the acquisition by employees of shares in subsidiary companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 211]: I have no plans to do so. The necessary purpose of section 79 of the Finance Act 1972 is to counter devices that might otherwise give employees extra remuneration free of income tax. Any company contemplating a scheme to which section 79 could be relevant may seek advice from the Inland Revenue.

European Community Budget

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the proportion of the EEC budget for each year since 1972, devoted to (a) compulsory and (b) non-compulsory expenditure; and what are the current guidelines in force as to the possible annual increase in expenditure in both categories.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 212-13]: The figures requested are not available for the budget as adopted and could not be provided without disproportionate cost. Information relating to the 1984 financial year was provided on 10 January 1985 to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing).

The conclusions on budgetary discipline adopted by the Council of Ministers in December will apply in full to the 1986 budget. The principles of budgetary discipline also apply to the 1985 agricultural price-fixing as it will affect expenditure in 1986.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the money passed back to the private sector by the Bank of England through the purchase of commercial bills appears in any calculation or measure of growth in the money supply; what are the figures for that measure in every quarter since the beginning of 1979; and how either that measure or the amount spent on purchasing commercial bills compares with the amount of overfunding for each quarter over the same period;

(2) what is the estimated total of commercial bills (a) currently held by the Bank of England and (b) still in private hands;

(3) what has been the extent of overfunding for each quarter since the beginning of 1979; what has been the extent of the Bank of England's purchase of commercial bills for each quarter over the same period; and what effect these two factors have had on interest rates and monetary policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his replies, 26 February 1985, c. 148]: Purchases of commercial bills by the Bank of England are undertaken to offset factors which would otherwise cause a reduction in banker's balances at the Bank, a small component of MO. These transactions in commercial bills are between the Bank and the monetary sector, and therefore do not affect broad money. Banking month data for MO are given in the article on "Changes to monetary aggregates and the analysis of bank lending" in the March 1984 issue of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

Concerning figures for commercial bills and for overfunding I would refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 16 November and 11 December 1984. Table 3.1 in the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin provides further information on acceptances outstanding. The relationship between overfunding and money market assistance is discussed in an article on "Funding PSBR" published in the December 1984 issue of the B of England Quarterly Bulletin.

The Bank's money market operations are designe prevent daily money market shortages from driving short term interest rates to an inappropriate level. The l of funding over this period has helped reduce the rat monetary growth.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer w rate of interest is currently charged by the Bank of Engl when it agrees to purchase commercial bills; and w information he has as to how this compares with the r of interest currently payable on bank deposits.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 26 Febru 1985, c. 148]: The Bank of England's dealing rates commercial bills are published daily, as are the rate interest available on bank deposits.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequ there is any policy limit on the ability of the Bank England to purchase commercial bills.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 26 Febru 1985, c. 148]: Policy is for the Bank of England to ope to relieve shortages in the money markets by purchas commercial bills and other methods in a way consis with control of the monetary aggregates.

Inflation

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequ what is the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 25 Febru 1985, c. 58]: Over the 12 months to January 1985, retail prices index increased by 5 per cent.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security (Equality of Treatment)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Soc Services what training officers of his Department have h with regard to the implementation of the directive on eq treatment for men and women in social security matte

Mr. Whitney: The Department's officers ha instructions and guidance on the operation of the eq treatment provisions and officers dealing with supplem tary benefit, family income supplement and retirem pensions receive training on the provisions as part of th general training. Self instructional training was provid on the subject in autumn 1984 for officers concerned w the introduction and operation of severe disablem allowance, and is currently being prepared for offic dealing with sickness and invalidity benefits. The need further training is being kept under review.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Soc Services what steps are being taken by his Department ensure that married and cohabiting women are inform of the regulations under the directive on equal treatm for men and women in social security matters.

Mr. Whitney: Leaflet NI 248, "New ways of claimi for couples", setting out the equal treatment provisio was produced in November 1983. Claim forms and ot leaflets have been amended to refer to the provisions a to leaflet NI 248 which is obtainable from local social security and unemployment benefit offices. A new edition of leaflet NI 248 is in hand.

Pensioners (Canada)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made with the Canadian Government in the implementation of a reciprocal agreement regarding British pensioners in Canada; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Canadian Department of Health and Welfare has prepared a draft of a reciprocal agreement on social security providing, among other things, for pension increases for United Kingdom pensioners in Canada. The draft is now the subject of consideration by officials of this Department and their Canadian counterparts.

Implementation of any agreement will depend on the necessary finance becoming available. The cost of paying pension increases due after the agreement comes into effect is estimated at £2·5 million in the first year alone, rising progressively to about £35 million.

Heroin Abuse

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent discussions he has held with (a) regional health authorities and (b) area health authorities concerning heroin abuse.

Mr. John Patten: We have received from regional health authorities interim reports, in response to DHSS circular HC(84) 14 of last June, about the prevalence of drug misuse and their plans for tackling the problem; the Department is following up all these reports with the authorities.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases his Department has rejected for unemployment benefit on the basis of declared part-time employment.

Mr. Whitney: As the Department of Employment administers unemployment benefit I, therefore, refer my hon. Friend to the reply given him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on 5 February at column 493.

Pensioners (Canada)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from Her Majesty's Government of Canada concerning the conclusion of a reciprocal social security agreement which would include payment of United Kingdom pensions to 41,000 British pensioners living in Canada; if he will estimate the increase in the cost to Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom in pound sterling of such an agreement; and if he will provide a breakdown of this figure.

Mr. Whitney: Over the last 12 months representations from the Canadian Government on the conclusion of a reciprocal agreement to include paying pension increases to British pensioners living in Canada have been received from the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, the former Secretary of State for External Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs. This issue was also raised at talks between the two Prime Ministers when they met in September 1983 on the occasion of my right hon. Friend's visit to Canada.

The cost to the United Kingdom of a comprehensive social security convention would arise almost entirely from paying higher pensions to British pensioners in Canada. The annual cost of increasing these pensions to current rates would be about £35 million; to pay future increases only would cost £2·5 million in the first year but the cost would rise each year to the same ultimate figure.

Sheffield Area Health Authority

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department will be writing to the Sheffield area health authority as agreed at their meeting on 16 November 1984 and promised for the Sheffield area health authority meeting in December 1984.

Mr. John Patten: Our officials will be meeting officers of Trent regional health authority and Sheffield health authority soon to discuss the proposals for development of services for mentally handicapped people in Sheffield.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place the attached notes of the auditors' accounts for Sheffield area health authority for the year ended 1984 in the Library, or otherwise make them available to hon. Members.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I assume the hon. Member has in mind the notes of discussions with senior officers of the Sheffield health authority to which the auditor refers, routinely, in his statutory report. These notes do not form part of the report but record discussions on a range of points for resolution, locally. In line with commonly accepted professional audit practice they are sent by the auditor to the senior officers following the close of the audit.

I would normally expect a health authority to make its statutory audit report available to the public but I would not normally regard it as necessary to collect them and place them in the Library. Discussions between auditors and officers arising from the audit are more useful if they remain confidential.

Disabled People (Benefits)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) by how much expenditure has increased each year on cash benefits for disabled people introduced by the previous Government; and what have been the savings on such expenditure since the link with earnings was removed;

(2) what has been the increase in real terms in spending on cash benefits for disabled people other than that on benefits introduced by the previous Government;

(3) what was the increase in real terms in spending on cash benefits for disabled people in each of the years 1973-74 to 1983-84.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure on cash benefits for long-term sick and disabled people from 1973-74 to 1983-84 was as follows:

Year	*Benefits introduced by the previous government 1974-79		†Other benefits
	Cash £ million	At 1983-84 prices £ million	Cash £ million	At 1983-84 prices £ million
1973-74	—	—	570	2,000
1974-75	—	—	740	2,220
1975-76	12	29	990	2,370
1976-77	44	91	1,160	2,410
1977-78	67	122	1,400	2,560
1978-79	120	202	1,660	2,790
1979-80	168	244	1,930	2,800
1980-81	238	297	2,260	2,820
1981-82	309	346	2,650	2,970
1982-83	398	417	3,080	3,220
1983-84	496	496	3,570	3,570

* Invalid care allowance, mobility allowance and non-contributory invalidity pension.

† Attendance allowance, industrial disablement benefit, invalidity benefit and the appropriate share of expenditure on war pension, supplementary benefit, housing benefit and the Christmas bonus. All figures rounded because of the imprecision arising from the need to apportion expenditure on the latter four benefits. Estimates of the additional expenditure that would have resulted if the link with the increase of prices or earnings whichever was the greater had been maintained would involve making assumptions about forecasts, the treatment of forecasting errors and about which benefits had been uprated by this method, which would make such figures meaningless.

Disabled People's Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, in rank order according to the amount received, the disabled organisations currently receiving an annual grant from his Department, giving the level of grant for the last financial year and the number of years for which a grant has been paid; and, for the five organisations receiving the largest grants, if he will provide the following information (a) objectives and functions and (b) annual income.

Mr. Newton: Information in the form requested could only be given at disproportionate cost. I would however refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 22 June 1984 at columns 316-20 when I listed grants made to voluntary organisations in the financial year 1983-84. The list includes the disabled organisations and comparable information has been published in the Official Report for earlier years—for 1982-83 on 26 July 1983 at columns 1028-32 and for 1981-82 on 11 May 1982 at columns 588-92.

Local Office Staffing

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what contingency instructions his Department has given for essential staffing levels in local offices of his Department in the event of an emergency leading to the need to introduce power cuts.

Mr. Whitney: No specific contingency instructions have been issued.

In the event of power cuts, the staffing levels of local offices would remain at normal strength, and measures would be taken to supply alternative sources of heating and lighting where necessary. It would be the responsibil a local office manager to decide on priorities i effectiveness of his office was impaired.

Heart Surgery

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for S Services how many patients are awaiting heart surge each health authority region in England; what i average waiting period in each region; and if he will a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The requested information i available centrally.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Stat Social Services what special provisions he intends to for health authorities requiring resources for exped treatment for patients on waiting lists needing open surgery.

Mr. John Patten: The provision of services patients needing open heart surgery is a matter for h authorities. We have asked health authorities to dev coronary artery surgery as a priority within the sector, but it is for health authorities to fund developments from within their financial allocations

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State Social Services what additional resources he intend provide for Guy's hospital for adults and babies awa heart surgery.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: South-East Thames regi health authority has four units for cardiac surgery adults at Guy's, Kings, St Thomas' and the B hospitals. More facilities are provided for cardiac sur in the south-east than in any other part of the countr is for the health authorities to divide the work load resources between these units which tend to compete each other and with other services.

We look to the regional health authority and Lewis and North Southwark health authority to resolve present overspending problems in the cardiothoracic at Guy's with the minimum effects on patient care.

Cardiac surgery for babies under one year is design as a supra-regional service and Guy's hospital is one of designated national centres. £952,000 has been prote within the South-East Thames region's allocation for provision of this service during 1985-86.

Ministers cannot provide additional funds to indivi units in individual hospitals in response to short-term much publicised local problems. It would not be sens or fair to finance the Health Service on this basis.

Benefits

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State Social Services if he has any plans to reduce benefits p out to social security claimants in respect of Christ bonuses and heating allowances.

Mr. Whitney: As the hon. Member knows, the so security system is under review at present and I do intend to anticipate the announcement of the outcom the review.

Mental Health Act Commission

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the findings from the Mental Health Act Commission's report on its code of practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Mental Health Act Commission is, at our request, preparing a draft of the code of practice provided for in section 118 of the Mental Health Act 1983, on the admission of patients under the Act and the treatment of patients suffering from mental disorder. I understand the Commission expects to submit its draft to us by the end of March. We shall then, as required by section 118, consult interested bodies, lay the code before Parliament for approval and publish it.

Psychosurgery

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of psychosurgical operations performed in hospitals in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will list them by type.

Mr. John Patten: The available information on numbers of operations is given in the table. Details of the specific type of operation performed are not collected centrally.

Psychosurgery operations performed in NHS hospitals in England and Wales

Year	Number
1979	70
1980	62
1981	59
1982	38
1983	37

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many amygdalectmies have been performed in hospitals in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally.

Guardianship Orders

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of guardianship orders invoked under the terms of section 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows: 30 new guardianship orders under section 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983 were made in the period 30 September 1983 to 31 March 1984. Later figures are not yet available.

Drugs Manufacturers (Inducements)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 25 February, Official Report, columns 71-2, (1) if he will itemise the admissible expenses for which general practitioners are eligible and, for each expense, give the average sum received by individual general practitioners and the total cost of such expenses to the National Health Service;

(2) what is the net income paid on average to a general practitioner and the total cost to the National Health Service of the income of all general practitioners within the service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The remuneration arrangements for general medical practitioners are designed to reimburse to the profession as a whole the costs they incur providing general medical services. Data on actual expenses are not known until three years after they have been incurred.

Some expenses are reimbursed directly to the doctors incurring them; the remainder are reimbursed indirectly on an average basis through fees and allowances. In the last financial year 1983-84 directly reimbursed expenses are estimated to have been £10,207 per doctor. The review body concluded that £9,290 per doctor should be reimbursed indirectly through fees and allowances in that year. The intended average net income was £20,160 from 1 April 1983 and £20,670 from 1 January 1984. Total expenditure in Great Britain in 1983-84 on general medical services including payments for drugs supplied by dispensing doctors was £1,099·572 million.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 25 February , Official Report, column 71-2, (1) if any savings on the adjustment of reimbursement prices paid to dispensing doctors will be made to the National Health Service;

(2) over what period of time and for how long dispensing doctors have been obtaining discounts on drugs costs from wholesalers and manufacturers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 25 February, Official Report, columns 71-2, where and how companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme advertise National Health Service medicines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this detailed information. Advertisements for medicines prescribed under the National Health Service are placed mainly in medical journals and professional magazines. Literature is also sent to doctors by post and through sales representatives.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, whether he has any information as to the manner in which representatives of companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme are remunerated in respect of the sales of National Health Service medicines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, whether he has received any representations at any time from companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme that expenditure on gifts or similar inducements should be an admissible expense under the scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the operation of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The non-statutory agreement embodied in the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme is designed to control the prices and profits, and the costs incurred in production and distribution, of National Health Service medicines. The scheme is reviewed from time to time as necessary.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what expenses are admissible expenses in the pricing of National Health Service medicines by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will itemise the same giving the value of the expense in each case for the last full year in which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to our Department being satisfied as to their reasonableness, all the usual costs of manufacture, research, distribution, and so on are treated as admissible expenses in the pricing of medicines under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme. In 1982, expenses as returned by the large companies (with sales exceeding £2 million to the National Health Service) before adjustments made by our Department were:

	£ million
Manufacturing	510·0
Distribution	42·7
Information	12·0
Sales Promotion	155·8
Royalties	23·0
Administration	153·9
Research and Development	218·3

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the National Health Service drugs bill is represented by sales promotion by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Sales promotion expenditure is controlled by an ad hoc formula the purpose of which is to limit admissible expenses to 10 per cent. of the value of the industry's sales to the National Health Service. From 1 April this limit will be reduced to 9 per cent.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has information that companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme offered gifts or similar inducements to general practitioners to persuade them to prescribe particular drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no specific information on the gifts or other inducements offered by pharmaceutical companies to general practitioners.

On the general matter of inducements and gifts I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) on 9 January at column 497.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the National Health Service drugs bill for 1982; and what proportion of that was represented by sales promotion expenditure expended by companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and what are the anticipated figures for 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The annual financial returns for 1982 from companies within the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme having individual sales to the National Health Service of £2 million or more showed total sales (United Kingdom) of £1,269 million. While expenditure on sales promotion as declared b companies was £155·8 million, the amount allowed admissible expense was reduced to some 10 per ce the sales total. We cannot at this stage estima corresponding figures for the 1985 returns. Howev are reducing the sales promotion allowance to 9 pe from 1 April.

NHS (Drugs)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Services what is the value on average of National Service drugs prescribed in the last full year for figures are available by (a) dispensing doctors a general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend a reply as soon as possible.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Services whether he is now in a position to advise authorities on policy regarding residential accommo in the light of the recent Rayner scrutiny.

Mr. John Patten: We expect to mak announcement within the next few weeks. In meantime, we hope authorities will continue to se properties that they identify as surplus to requirem and use the proceeds to develop services for patient

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Services if he will make available the comments of h authorities to the recent Scrutiny Report on resid accommodation for National Health Service worker

Mr. John Patten: We are expecting to mak announcement within the next few weeks which will into account the comments received from h authorities and from other bodies.

Specialist Claims Control Unit

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for S Services what areas were visited by the special cl control unit in Scotland in 1984; what conclusions reached; and when the unit next will visit the constitu of Edinburgh, Leith.

Mr. Whitney: The following local offices in Sco were visited by specialist claims control teams in 19

Arbroath		Cowdenbeath	I
	Glasgow (Maryhill)	Cumbernauld	John
Aberdeen (North)		Dumbarton	Kilmar
	Glasgow (Parkhead)	Dumfries	Kirk
Aberdeen (South)		Dundee (West)	Mothe
	Glasgow (Partick)	Edinburgh (East)
Airdrie		Edinburgh (South)	Pa
	Glasgow (Queens Park)	Elgin
Bathgate		Falkirk	Peter
	Glasgow (Southside)	Fort William	St
Campbeltown		Glasgow (Anniesland)
	Glasgow (Springburn)		Stra
Coatbridge	Inverness	Glasgow (Laurieston)

Benefit was adjusted in 1,001 of the 2,622 cases examined. There are no plans to visit the local office at Edinburgh (North), which covers Leith, during the course of the present programme which runs until the end of April.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether paragraph 23 of volume 1 of the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88", about increases in social security spending, covers child benefit.

Mr. Whitney: Yes.

Ancillary Services (Contractors)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list all those district health authorities with which he or his Department have had discussions or correspondence with regard to the awarding of in-house contracts for laundry, cleaning and catering services;

(2) if he will list all those companies known to be operating private contracts within the National Health Service indicating the services offered.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Health Service Contractors (VAT)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of value added tax so far refunded to his Department's district health authorities as a result of their using commercial contractors for laundry, catering and cleaning services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list all instances known to his Department of health authorities wholly or partly determining private contracts for catering, cleaning and laundry services;

(2) if he will list all instances known to his Department of district health authorities partly or wholly rescinding contracts with private companies for laundry, catering and cleaning services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not aware of any instance of a district health authority rescinding a contract with a private company since our circular on competitive tendering was issued in September 1983.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of money paid in default of contract so far paid by private contractors to district health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those district health authorities which have, to date, included conditions relating to wage levels when contracting out catering, cleaning and laundry services to the private sector.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Some health authorities were proposing to specify wage levels for contractors' staff but we informed them in October 1984 that it is quite wrong to interfere in this way in the relationship between a contractor and his employees. We are not aware how many health authorities who have let contracts included such conditions but none should have done so.

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those district health authorities which have so far failed to submit programmes for competitive tendering for hospital catering, cleaning and laundry services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The following district health authorities have failed so far to submit competitive tendering programmes to our Department:

Brent
Greenwich
Lewisham and North Southwark
Coventry
Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde
Sandwell
Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley
Salford
South Manchester
West Lancashire

We have made it quite clear to these authorities that we expect them to submit programmes in the near future and that we take a serious view of any failure to test and demonstrate the cost effectiveness of their support services. None of these authorities would find difficulty in spending savings from support service costs on improvements in patient care.

Bolton Hospital

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the development of the new Bolton hospital, giving the dates and financial support for the first stage of the new hospital.

Mr. John Patten: North-Western regional health authority received the second highest capital allocation in England. In the next few months it will be announcing when work is to begin on the redevelopment of Bolton general hospital.

Mental Health (Urgent Treatment)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any patient has received treatment under section 62 of the Mental Health Act 1983 with favourable irreversible physical or psychological consequences, or entailing significant psychological hazard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There is no statutory requirement for action taken under section 62 of the Mental Health Act 1983 to be recorded or reported. The Mental Health Act Commission are, however, monitoring the implementation of the Act closely, particularly as regards matters relating to consent to treatment, and no such case has come to their notice or to ours.

If the hon. Member would care to let me have details of any specific matter which he believes may give cause for concern, I shall be glad to look into it.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make available information on how the calculations were made which underlie his conclusion that £75 million can be saved during the financial year 1985-86 by introducing the limited list of drugs from 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to make the details of these calculations available because information about the prescribing volume and cost of individual drugs is of commercial value and it is not the practice to divulge it. £75 million is the best estimate by our officials of the savings that will be made in the hospital and family practitioner services in the United Kingdom. This figure will rise significantly in the near future as generic alternatives become available for some of the branded products on our selected list.

NHS (Spectacles)

Mrs. Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that the new arrangements to assist the visually handicapped and those needing complex prescriptions who will be unable to pay for the glasses they need will be introduced by 1 April when these aids cease to be available on the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regulations will be laid within the next few days dealing with entitlement and other provisions under the general ophthalmic services from 1 April.

The general range of optical appliances will continue to be available without charge to children and to people entitled to full remission of charges, and at reduced charge to those entitled to partial remission on income grounds.

A defined range of complex lenses will be available, at a charge which reflects full economic costs, to the visually handicapped and others who do not qualify for full or partial remission of charges.

The present arrangements for dispensing optical appliances through the hospital eye service will continue.

Appointments

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those bodies to which he appoints members.

Mr. Fowler: I refer the hon. Member to the Cabinet Office (MPO) booklet "Public Bodies 1984", published on 18 December last year, copies of which are in the Library. I also appoint members to Whitley Councils for the Health Services (Great Britain), to the Nursing and Midwifery Staff Negotiating Council and to the joint negotiating committee for professions allied to medicine.

Head Lice

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gives to local education authorities about the educational aspects of policy on the detection, control and treatment in schools of head lice in schoolchildren.

Mr. John Patten: The control of head lice amongst school children is primarily the responsibility of health authorities through the school health services. The Health Education Council, which is funded by this D has produced two pamphlets, for paren professionals, on this subject; both of these a to local education authorities.

Disabled People (Survey)

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of Stat Services if he will make a statement on the pro new full-scale survey of disabled people.

Mr. Newton: The survey is being condu Office of Population Censuses and Surv experience and expertise in this field acknowledged. Following OPCS's extensive and our Department's wide consultation wit organisations—to whom we are very gratef help—the main stage of the survey begins o This involves delivery of a short questionnaire addresses to identify samples of disabled children in the community to be interviewed f November this year. Next year the survey will to disabled people in institutions.

The main purpose of the survey is to obtai and comprehensive information about the disabled people, their circumstances and t Information of this kind is essential if we are t use of available resources for services and be reflect the needs of disabled people.

Mr. Ernest Trevor Smout

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary o Social Services when he expects the appeal by Trevor Smout, of Newtown, to be heard by t appeal tribunal; and if he will take steps to redu between the notification and hearing of appea

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 18 Feb c. 393]: A statement of his case was sent to Mr 12 February 1985 and the Department is requi to allow him 28 days to respond. If no furth required as a result of comments by Mr. Smo will be passed immediately to the Lord C Department to arrange the hearing. We would to take approximately three months.

The Department has for some time been about the increase in the time it is taking to pension appeals to a hearing. The process pr law and the general need to obtain further evi hospitals and consultants necessarily make the of an appeal for hearing lengthy. Unfortunatel been a shortage of suitably experienced doct type of work and considerable arrears of appeal built up, adding to the processing time. Ther some recent improvement in the arrears situa Pensions as a whole but the effect on the mo appeals work will be gradual.

Secure Accommodation

Miss Fookes asked the Secretary of State Services if he will take steps to introduce long-t accommodation for persons not suffering fr illness as defined by law but who nonetheles secure and sheltered environment for their own that of others.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 137]: The 1983 Mental Health Act specifies the circumstances in which a person may, on account of mental disorder, be compulsorily detained—where that is necessary for the health or safety of the person concerned or for the protection of other persons. A person not liable to detention under the provisions of the Mental Health Act may be admitted on an informal basis to a National Health Service hospital, whether or not the doctor concerned regards the patient's problems as constituting mental illness, if in his clinical judgment such an admission may be beneficial. Such treatment may involve some element of security, but the person concerned would be free to leave the hospital at any time. A number of NHS hospitals do have a "special care" ward providing structured environment and high level of supervision without relying on detention. Certain voluntary bodies cater for people with behavioural problems who are not mentally ill and are better cared for outside hospital. Parliament has not provided for the compulsory detention in hospital of someone who is not detainable under the Mental Health Act. Such a person cannot be detained except as a result of a judgment by a court.

We are reviewing the needs of, and provision and plans for "hard to place" clients, including those who are mentally handicapped.

Maternity Services Liaison Committees

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those district and regional health authorities which have so far not appointed non-medical members to their maternity services liaison committees;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure that district health authorities appoint non-medical members to their maternity services liaison committees;

(3) if he will set a deadline by which time district health authorities must have appointed non-medical members to their maternity services liaison committees.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 220]: The Maternity Services Advisory Committee strongly recommended that every district health authority should establish and maintain a maternity services liaison committee to help implement, in the light of local circumstances, the MSAC's advice on good practice. The committee should act as a multi-disciplinary forum, reaching agreement between the different professionals — midwives, nurses, and doctors — and drawing on the experience of users of the maternity services. The MSAC suggested that such a committee might wish to meet in two forms: as a professional group when clinical and confidential matters were to be discussed, and with a wider membership including lay people for all other purposes.

We have asked health authorities who have not already set up such committees to consider doing so, and we will be monitoring action taken on this, and other advice contained in the MSAC's three reports, through the accountability review process. Decisions on membership are for health authorities to take. We do not currently hold centrally information on how many committees have been established or on their composition.

NHS (Private Contractors)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those district health authorities which have either ceased or reduced expenditure on private contract services for laundry, catering and cleaning for each of the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following is the information requested derived from the annual accounts of health authorities for 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Expenditure figures for the two years are not entirely comparable as value added tax on these services became reclaimable with effect from 1 September 1983.

We do not hold information by districts for earlier years (that is prior to National Health Service restructuring).

Shellfish

Sir John Wells asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the value of commercial landings of oysters and of all other shellfish for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by postal code district, the latest unemployment figures within the Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy travel-to-work areas; and if he will show for each postal code district the change in unemployment over the preceding 12-month period.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not at present available for the revised travel-to-work areas. The table shows the estimated number of unemployed claimants by post-code sector in the former Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy TTWAs at 10 January 1985 and the change over the preceding 12 months.

Psychosurgical Operations

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of psychosurgical operations performed in Scottish hospitals in each of the last five years; and if he will define them by type.

Mr. John MacKay: Psychosurgery is performed very infrequently in Scotland and is not recorded as such in the Scottish hospital inpatient statistics. Information is, however, collated on operations involving division of the brain tissue and, by counting separately the numbers of such operations where there is also a diagnosis of mental disorder, it is possible to derive a number of operations which may be assumed to fall within the category of psychosurgery, though no information is available by type of psychosurgery. In the last five years for which figures are available, the number of such operations is as follows:

1978	2
1979	1
1980	2
1981	1
1982	1

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many amidalaectomies have been performed in Scottish hospitals in each of the last five years.

Mr. John MacKay: I assume that the hon. Gentleman has in mind amygdalotomy which is a rare form of psychosurgery. It is not possible to differentiate this operation from other operations involving the division of brain tissue, and no statistics on the number of amygdalotomy are available centrally.

Guardianship Orders

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of guardianship orders invoked under the terms of section 37 of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: Six such orders have been recorded by the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland since the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 came into operation on 30 September 1984.

Agricultural Colleges

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has assessed the compulsory redundancies in the agricultural colleges in Scotland if his proposed cuts in the agricultural services for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are implemented and the effect this would have in the rural areas.

Mr. John MacKay: The staffing implications of the planned reduction in funding depend on the outcome of current discussions with the Scottish agricultural colleges about ways in which they might accommodate reduced levels of funding in the years in question, and on the nature and extent of the contribution towards the cost of these services from those who benefit from them.

Agricultural Advisory Services

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what detailed consultation he has had with the National Farmers Union of Scotland on the analysis of the arrangements for agricultural advisory services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has been in correspondence with the president of the National Farmers Union of Scotland about the arrangements for agricultural advisory services in Scotland. The matter will be discussed at a meeting on 4 March between the union and officials of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has arranged to discuss it further with a union delegation on 22 March.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the consequences on the farming industry of the £3·4 million reduction for Scotland's agricultural advisory services in the rural areas for the years 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: It is the Government's aim that those who benefit from the agricultural advisory services should make some contribution towards their cost. The planned reduction in public funding in 1987-88 is therefore directed towards maintaining a strong and active service in future, financed jointly by Government and the industry itself. My officials are currently in discussion with the agricultural colleges which provide these services in Scotland to determine how best these changes may be made over the next two years.

Farm Incomes

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures for the decline in farm incomes in Scotland over the past 10 years compared with the remainder of the United Kingdom.

Mr. John MacKay: Estimated aggregate farming income in Scotland and in the United Kingdom as a whole has fluctuated, as shown in the table below, over the past 10 years. In real terms there has been a decline of 60 per cent. in Scotland and nearly 30 per cent. in the United Kingdom over the period, although the number of farmers sharing in these aggregates has also declined.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the reasons for the delay in the payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances for 1985 to the Scottish farming industry.

Mr. John MacKay: Payment of this year's hill livestock compensatory allowances commenced on 22 February, 12 days later than in 1984.

This year saw the introduction of six new rates of compensatory allowance, two in the new marginal land areas and four in the Highlands and Islands Development Board area. These, together with their associated payment limitations, necessitated considerable administrative changes, including alterations in the computer programs by means of which the payments are calculated and issued.

Despite starting 12 days later than last year, I am pleased to be able to say that, by Tuesday, 26 February, 5,358 payments had been issued compared with 5,636 payments by the end of February last year.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if arrangements, similar to those announced on 21 February regarding dispensing doctors in rural areas in the context of the proposed limited list, Official Report, column 1224, will apply in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: In his statement on 21 February my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services indicated that regulations on the subject of limited lists prescribing would also be introduced for Scotland. The Scottish regulations will make similar provision to those for England and Wales, including the provisions relating to dispensing doctors.

Property Revaluation

Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now prepared to postpone the 1985 revaluation of property.

Mr. Younger: No. The substantial task of revaluing every property in Scotland has now been completed; new valuation rolls are in the possession of rating authorities; and new valuation notices are, or very shortly will be, going out to every ratepayer in the country. I have no power to cancel the revaluation, and to make a—necessarily cumbersome and complex—attempt to delay its implementation would be unfair and undesirable.

Dangerous Materials

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to amend the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 to prevent warehouses storing non-hazardous materials being converted without planning consent to store dangerous materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: On 31 July last year we issued a consultation paper stating our intention to introduce legislation to provide that no building or other land shall be used, without the written consent of the planning authority, for any purpose which involves the manufacture, processing, keeping or use of a hazardous substance in such circumstances as will result in there being at any one time a specified quantity of such a substance in, on, over or under the land. It is our intention that legislation to this effect should be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what pesticides cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme there is no available data, or none was submitted to obtain clearance, on (a) carcinogenicity, (b) mutagenicity and (c) teratogenicity.

Mr. MacGregor: Data on all three elements must be submitted before a pesticide can be cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme.

Departments will assess the need for new data when they review existing clearances under the proposed statutory scheme where clearances granted many years ago may not meet current standards in this respect.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the presumed level of reporting of incidents involving toxic effects of pesticides on wildlife.

Mrs. Fenner: While my Department has no way of measuring the proportion of all incidents that are reported I am confident that significant incidents are generally brought to our attention.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the people currently involved in advising farmers on the need to apply pesticides, particularly in the commercial sector, have training in the recognition of pest problems and the assessment of their severity.

Mrs. Fenner: The most popular source of advice for farmers on the use of pesticides is the agrochemical merchants' representative.

Member companies of both the British agrochemical supply industry scheme and the British Agrochemicals Association require all staff who give advice on the use of pesticides to attend formal training courses and to attain a specified degree of competence. These organisations cover by far the major proportion of the trade.

Specialist advice is also available to farmers and growers from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Agricultural Products (Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing estimated expenditure in 1984 on milk and milk products under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget broken down into export refunds, storage, aids, and so on, compared with the amount appropriated; and if he will provide similar figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing estimated expenditure in 1984 on different meats under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget broken down into export refunds, storage, aids, and so on, compared with the amount appropriated; and if he will provide similar figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983;

(3) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing estimated expenditure in 1984 on sugar and sugar beet under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget broken down into export refunds, storage, aids, and so on, compared with the amount appropriated; and if he will provide corresponding figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983 together with the receipts from levies on the manufacture or sale of sugar substitutes;

(4) whether he will provide in the Official Report a table showing estimated expenditure in 1984 on the different vegetable oils and protein plants under the guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget broken down into export refunds, storage, aids and so on, compared with the amount appropriated; and if he will provide similar figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983;

(5) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing estimated expenditure in 1984 on cereals under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget broken down by type of cereal and in each case into export refunds, storage, aids and so on, compared with the amount appropriated; and if he will provide similar figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983;

(6) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1984 estimated expenditure under the guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget on wine, tobacco and other products listed under the same budget heading broken down into export refunds, storage costs, aids and so on, compared with the amount appropriated; and if he will provide similar figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983;

(7) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing estimated expenditure in 1984 under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section of the European Economic Community budget on the different fruits and vegetables compared with the amount appropriated; if he will break these figures down into expenditure on export refunds, storage, destruction, aid and so on; and if he will provide similar figures for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him earlier today.

Butter (Intervention Price)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the United Kingdom intervention price of a tonne of butter in 1984 compares with the price paid for the milk which was used in making it; and what was the average price received for butter disposed of in third markets by means of export refunds.

Mr. MacGregor: In 1984 the intervention price of butter (80 per cent. fat) was 3491·28 ecu/tonne (£2159·90/tonne) from 1 January 1984 to 1 April 1984 and 3119·0 ecu/tonne (£1929·58/tonne) from 2 April 1984 to 31 December 1984. The average price for milk for manufacture into butter in 1983-84 was 14·085 pence per litre of whole milk comprising of both butterfat and skim elements. Prices received for butter disposed of in third country markets are a matter for commercial negotiation. However the intervention price net of the export refund and United Kingdom monetary compensatory amount applicable on 22 February 1985 would indicate a price of around £1200/tonne.

Rape Seed

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums were paid by the intervention board for agricultural produce or any other public authority in 1984 to support the growing of rape seed; and if he will provide separate figures for storage, storage aid, export subsidies and so on, together with a comparison for 1970 and 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: Provisional expenditure figures for direct support for rape seed growing in 1984 are £64,068,550 for the production aid and £1,310 for export refunds. Comparable figures for 1979 were £20,049,352 and £441 respectively. No support buying was undertaken in 1984. In 1979 payments for purchases into intervention amounted to £292,387 and for storage to £5,162. No payments to support the growing of rapeseed were made in 1970.

Farm Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the years 1955, 1965, 1975 and 1979 to 1984 the proportion of farm output accounted for by crops, livestock, livestock products and horticulture, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows; only crop year estimates are available for 1955 and 1965.

Grain

Miss Maynard asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of grain stored in the European Economic Community on 30 November 1984; and what is the cost of storing such grain per day.

Mr. MacGregor: The value of cereals in intervention storage in the European Community on 30 November 1984 was 1949 mecu, applying the prices per tonne set out in the annex to Commission Regulation (EEC) 3248/84. Storage costs vary between member states and are not available.

Lupin Seed

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate for expenditure under the common agricultural policy for growing lupin seed in the current crop year; and whether he expects it to increase as rapidly in future years as expenditure on the production of rape seed.

Mr. MacGregor: In its preliminary draft, the Commission forecast that expenditure on the aid scheme for incorporating lupins into animal feed will total about 3 mecu in 1985. It would be premature to assess likely expenditure in future years, which will depend among other things on the progress of development work on new and improved varieties.

"Trade Patterns"

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date tables 1-6 in the memorandum on United Kingdom trade patterns submitted by his Department to the European Community Committee of the House of Lords published in its seventh report of Session 1983-84 on "Trade Patterns".

Mr. MacGregor: Tables 1-6 referred to were based on information available in the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", the latest volumes of which are in the Library of the House.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting held on 25-26 February.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made in the House earlier today.

Oysters and Shellfish

Sir John Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the value of commercial landings of oysters and of all other shellfish for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: Difficulties in collecting complete statistics on shellfish landings mean that available figures may significantly under-estimate the total landings in some instances. The available information is as follows:

Value of United Kingdom Landings by United Kingdom Vessels

(£'000)

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total amount collected, and the average per pound of meat, in respect of the export charge on sheepmeat in each year since 1979.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 583]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Amount collected £	Average p/lb
1980	NIL	NIL
1981	10,409,031	15·3
1982	6,862,009	16·6

Agricultural Production (Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each member state the amount spent under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section in 1983 compared with 1972 and 1979 together with the estimate for 1984; and if he will break the total down (a) by product and (b) by export refunds, storage aids and so on.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 584]:

Information on the amounts appropriated for the Guarantee Section of the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund may be obtained from the Community budgets for the years in question as published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The relevant documents have been deposited in the House of Commons Library under the following references:

1972 Budget—OJ. L202 of 4.9.72

1972 Budget (Supplementary No. 2)—OJ. L287 of 26.12.72

1979 Budget—OJ. L23 of 31.1.79

1984 Budget (Supplementary No. 1)—OJ. L329 of 17.12.84

Information on actual expenditure from the Guarantee Section and receipts of sugar levies for 1972, 1979 and 1983 is set out in the EC Commission's EAGGF Financial Reports which have been deposited in the House of Commons Library under the following references:

1972 EAGGF Report—R/731/74 of 20.3.74
1979 EAGGF Report (Guarantee) — 11488/80 of 19.11.80
1983 EAGGF Report (Guarantee)—9372/84 of 26.9.84
The 1984 report is not yet available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated expenditure for each of the principal products under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fu guarantee scheme in 1984 compared with the amou appropriated: and if he will provide corresponding figu for expenditure in 1972, 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 198 c. 584]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave h earlier today.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 1 March 1985

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judges

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor has any plans to review the arrangements for allocating judges to specific criminal cases; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The allocation of judges to specific criminal cases is the responsibility of the judiciary. It should remain so.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General what steps he has taken to recruit staff for the local offices of the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Attorney-General: Until the Prosecution of Offences Bill has received Royal Assent it is not possible to recruit staff for local offices of the Crown Prosecution Service. I have, therefore, taken no steps to do so. Ther are, however, six counties in England and Wales (Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Surrey, Leicestershire, North Yorkshire and Staffordshire) which currently do not have prosecuting solicitors' departments of their own. The Director of Public Prosecutions intends to set up local offices of his Department in these areas during 1985 and the Civil Service Commission is currently running an open competition for the head of office post in the first of these (the Hertfordshire district). These offices can be expected to form the basis for the district office of the Crown Prosecution Service when it comes into existence.

Legal Aid

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General how many applications have been made for legal aid in each of the last five years; how many were granted; and how many refused.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Made	Granted	Refused
1979	438,052	387,581	50,471
1980	489,663	430,320	59,343
1981	514,462	452,461	62,001
1982	541,215	479,950	61,265
1983	560,462	497,137	63,325

The number of refusals and grants of civil legal aid taken together do not match applications. The discrepancy is caused by applications being withdrawn before they have been considered and because some applications made in one year are not determined until the next. This difference does not arise with criminal legal aid, where statistics are recorded after the application is determined.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now intends to prepare and publish an updated review of projected housing need and demand in relation to effective supply from both public and private sectors as recommended by the Environment Committee in its first report of Session 1979-80.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend does not believe that global projections of housing need and demand, of the kind set out in the Green Paper on housing policy published by the previous Government in 1977, are of great help in decision taking. As far as the private sector is concerned, the housebuilding industry is in the best position to assess future market prospects. In the public sector, it is for local authorities to assess their local requirements; the Government take account of the views of local authorities, as reflected both in their individual housing investment programme returns, and through the local authority associations, when deciding on the total public expenditure provision for housing and on its allocation between authorities.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment upon what assumptions he determines current housing demand in relation to effective supply from both the public and private sectors; and to what extent future assumptions will take account of his Department's recent report, "Local Authority Empty Dwellings."

Sir George Young: My Department does not determine current housing demand in relation to effective supply. In the private sector, the housebuilding industry is in the best position to assess future market prospects. As regards the public sector, my Department takes account of many factors, including such facts as those reported in "Local Authority Empty Dwellings", in considering both the total public expenditure provision for housing and its allocation between local authorities.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider, in the light of his Department's recent report on "Local Authority Empty Dwellings", his response to the observations contained in the Environment Committee's third report of Session 1980-81 concerning the extent to which, in the Committee's opinion, housing expenditure was then being treated as a residual item in the public expenditure programme.

Sir George Young: At no time since 1979 has housing been treated as a residual item in the determination of the Government's public expenditure plans. In deciding what provision should be made for housing the Government have regard to a wide range of indicators of housing need, within an overall judgment of what the country can afford. The report on local authority empty dwellings recognises that a large proportion of long-term empty dwellings is awaiting expenditure on rehabilitation, but concludes that improved local management, combined with effective sales policies, could substantially reduce their numbers.

Licensed Premises (Rating)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to carry out the rating revaluation of licensed premises under the Rates Act 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: The provision in schedule 1 of the Rates Act 1984 relating to the method of assessing licensed premises between revaluations will not take effect until the next revaluation of non-domestic properties. An announcement on the timing of a non-domestic revaluation will be made in due course.

Ravenglass (Sludge)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if samples of the sludge from Ravenglass deposited in a Westminster street on 26 February are to be assayed; how the mass of slurry will be handled while the assessment is under way; if a specific search will be made for alpha emission; and how, and where, the mass will be disposed of.

Mr. Waldegrave: An initial check by geiger counter did not detect significant levels of radioactivity in the mud. However samples are now being thoroughly analysed and assayed. All forms of radioactivity will be covered. Meanwhile the mud is being temporarily stored in an enclosed container. Once the results of the analysis are available, appropriate arrangements will be made for disposal. It is not expected that this will pose any technical problem.

Acid Rain

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Gower on 14 January on the links between reintroducing a lime subsidy on upland soils and acid rain.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall reply shortly.

Audit Commission

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances he would propose to use his powers under section 22 of or schedule 3 to the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to give directions to the Audit Commission.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend has reserve and discretionary powers under section 22 and schedule 3 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982; any case would need to be considered individually on its merits.

Housing Stock

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answers to the hon. Member for Coventry South-East, on 26 February, he will give the total housing stock, and the percentages represented by the answers of 26 February, for Coventry, West Midlands and nationally.

Sir George Young: The percentages of the dwellin stock which were defective at 1 April 1984, are given the following table and are based on the total stoc estimate for Coventry provided in the authority's housin investment programme return and on the estimates mad by the Department for the region and for England.

	Coventry	West Midlands Region	Englan
Dwelling stock	119,874	1,975,000	Numb 18,420,0 Percentag of sto
Substandard dwellings: unfit	0·8	5·0	3·
fit but lacking one or more basic amenities	4·9	4·0	3·
Non-standard dwellings in need of renovations	11·8	14·0	12·

DEFENCE

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence i he will make a statement about the latest security positio at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Lee: The site has been cleared of trespassers, th temporary fencing and associated facilities are in place and the construction of a permanent fence is in hand. The site is guarded by the Ministry of Defence police. There have been a number of incidents of trespass and fence cutting but none has been of any significance and all i proceeding to schedule.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State fo Defence when he expects the new byelaw presently being drafted by lawyers employed by his Ministry to contro peace demonstrations at the proposed cruise missile base at Royal Air Force Molesworth to come into force.

Mr. Lee: Draft byelaws for the purpose of regulating the use of RAF Molesworth for defence purposes are currently being advertised for public comment. They will be made and come into force after any comments in response to the advertisement have been properly considered.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy not to make any change to their policy of non-production and non-storage of chemical and biological weapons in advance of the matter being debated in the House.

Mr. Stanley: The production and storage of biological weapons is not a policy issue as the United Kingdom is a party to, and co-depository of, the 1972 biological weapons convention which bans such action. On chemical weapons policy I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 10 January at column 901. The question of a debate would be considered by the Leader of the House in the usual way.

Royal Navy

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many commissioned (a) captains, (b) commodores, (c) rear admirals and (d) admirals there are currently serving with the Royal Navy.

Mr. Lee: The information is as follows:

	Numbers
Captains	296
Commodores	32
Rear Admirals	36
Admirals	4

In addition there are currently 10 vice admirals serving in the Royal Navy.

It should be noted that the rank of commodore is a temporary rank granted to captains holding certain appointments.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships are in service, in reserve or being refitted with the Royal Navy; what change in this figure will occur in the next five, 10 and 20 years, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The current strength of the fleet at frigate size and above is two ASW carriers, HMS Invincible and HMS Illustrious; HMS Hermes (on stand-by); two assault ships, HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid; 53 destroyers and frigates; four Polaris submarines and 28 nuclear powered fleet and conventionally-powered patrol submarines.

It is not the practice to give details of the forecast operational availability of warships for specific years. However, it remains the Government's policy that two carriers should be operational at any one time with a third in refit or stand-by, and to aim for a force level in the longer term of about 50 destroyers and frigates, all of which would be in the front line and none in the stand-by squadron. We are currently examining the provision of future amphibious capability once the existing assault ships, HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid, come to the end of their planned lives in the mid-1990s. The Polaris fleet will be replaced in the 1990s with a force of four Trident D5 missile submarines; and overall numbers of nuclear-powered and conventional submarines are likely to remain generally constant, although the fleet will contain a higher proportion of nuclear-powered submarines.

Redundancies

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has made any employee compulsorily redundant in 1985 or in the five preceding years.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Trident

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions will need to be made in his budget when the cost of Trident rises to a proportion of 6 per cent.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement told the hon. Member on 19 February at column 430 we expect Trident expenditure to reach 6 per cent. of the defence budget in its peak years, and this is already taken into account in our defence budget planning.

General Belgrano

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approximate total cost involved in answering parliamentary questions, preparing material for other Departments so to do and in preparing material for debates, surrounding all the allegations made about the sinking of the General Belgrano.

Mr. Heseltine: Parliamentary business concerning the sinking of the Belgrano and surrounding issues has, since the event, occupied a large amount of the time of Ministers and senior officials. No record has been kept of all of this effort and it is not therefore possible readily to provide an accurate estimate of the total cost. As an example of some of the work involved, Defence Ministers and the Prime Minister have answered more than 200 parliamentary questions on "Belgrano matters". The effect of all these inquiries has been to show that the Government took the appropriate measures to counter the threats to the task force, on the basis of military and other advice which no responsible Government could have ignored.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of (a) the minute dated 9 April 1984 to Mr. Ponting requesting a reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), (b) the minute dated 12 April 1984 from Mr. Ponting to the Secretary of State for Defence together with the proposed draft reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, (c) the minute dated 2 May 1984 to Mr. Ponting requesting a draft reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow's letter of 1 May 1984, (d) the minute dated 9 May from the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to Mr. Ponting, (e) the minute dated 9 May 1984 from Mr. Ponting to the Secretary of State for Defence, together with the draft reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow and Mr. Ponting's minute to the Prime Minister, (f) the minute dated 10 May 1984 from the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the Secretary of State for Defence, (g) the minute dated 11 May 1984 from the Secretary of State for Defence to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, (h) the minute dated 3 July 1984 from DS11 to DS5 relating to Mr. Ponting, (i) the minute dated 4 July 1984 from DS5 to DS11 relating to Mr. Ponting, (j) the minute dated 6 July 1984 from the head of DS11 to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces relating to Mr. Ponting and (k) the minute from the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the Secretary of State referred to on 18 February, Official Report, columns 745-46.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

I have already placed in the Library a copy of the request from my private secretary, dated 22 March 1984, to Mr. Ponting to provide a draft reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) of 19 March 1984. I have also provided a copy of the draft reply which Mr. Ponting recommended to me on 29 March 1984. These documents are relevant to the decision I took at the time on the handling of the hon. Member for Linlithgow's letter and, as I had to quote from them in the House in order to deal with assertions made by Mr. Ponting, I thought it right to make them available. As I made clear in the House, the essence of Mr. Ponting's subsequent minutes of 12 April 1984 and 9 May 1984 was that the information requested by the hon. Member for Linlithgow about the Belgrano's course and related matters was not classified and that, if it were sought in parliamentary questions, in Mr. Ponting's view, there would be no reason to withhold it. I also explained that that was not his original advice. I explained in the debate in the House on 18 February why I, as the Minister accountable to Parliament in this matter, replied as I did to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 18 April 1984. In that reply, I did not follow Mr. Ponting's revised advice adopted in his second recommended draft on 12 April. The Government had already decided to proceed on lines consistent with his earlier advice.

I have already placed in the House of Commons Library a copy of head of DS11's minute of 6 July 1984 since it was necessary for me to quote from it during the debate in order to dispose of the unfounded allegation that it showed that Ministers had sought to mislead Parliament. The other documents requested concerning the Foreign Affairs Committee memorandum were internal Ministry of Defence correspondence between officials.

Equipment Programmes (Cost)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total capital cost in 1984-85 prices of the following equipment programmes, including aircraft, initial spares and weapons and equipment fitted on the ships (a) anti-submarine warfare carrier programme, and (b) type 42 programme.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total capital cost in 1984-85 prices of the following equipment programme (a) original Polaris programmes, (b) the Chevaline programme and (c) the re-motoring programme for the Polaris missiles.

Mr. Lee: The capital acquisition cost of the original Polaris programme was some £330 million over the years 1963 to 1972. The information which would enable a detailed up-pricing of this figure is not available, but it is roughly estimated that exchange rate and price variations to bring it to 1984-85 prices would have increased by about tenfold. The capital cost of the Chevaline and Polaris remotoring programmes up-priced to 1984-85 prices would be some £2,000 million and £400 million respectively. All the figures use the exchange rate of £1=$1·38 used for this year's recosting of the defence programme.

Tornado

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total capital cost of the Tornado programme at 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Lee: The total estimated production cost to the United Kingdom of the Tornado aircraft programme is £6,554 million at forecast average 1984-85 prices. Development cost estimates for the project are still classified. Other related infrastructure costs are also excluded.

ROF Euxton

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State Defence what was the value of surplus Army equipm destroyed at the royal ordnance factory at Euxton sinc January.

Mr. Lee: I am not aware that any surplus equipm of recent Army origin has been destroyed at the ro ordnance factory at Chorley (Euxton) since 2 Janu 1985, although I understand that some items of world two vintage may have been destroyed during site cleara in preparation for rebuilding work. I suggest the h Member writes to the chairman if he wishes to ob further details.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State Defence why surplus Army uniforms, boots, overco and blankets have been destroyed at the royal ordna factory at Euxton since 1 January; and if he will mak statement.

Mr. Lee: The reason for the destruction of any ite of Army clothing or bedding at the royal ordnance fact at Euxton is, since 2 January 1985, the concern of Ro Ordnance plc and not the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State Defence how many blankets, sheets, boots and overcoa respectively, have been destroyed at the royal ordna factory at Euxton since 1 January.

Mr. Lee: The quantities of any blankets, sheets, bo and overcoats destroyed at the royal ordnance factory Euxton since 2 January 1985 are the concern of Ro Ordnance plc and not the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State Defence whether it is normal practice to dispose of surp military clothing by destroying it at royal ordna factory, Euxton.

Mr. Lee: No.

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State Defence what arrangements exist for informing loc authorities in Scotland when military low flying below t normal minimum of 250 ft is due to take place.

Mr. Lee: Military flying at heights below 250 ft normally authorised only in special training areas whi have been established over some of the most sparse populated areas of the United Kingdom. Local authoriti were informed about these areas when they were fi established.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State f Defence what percentage of low flying exercises in t Highlands restricted area is conducted below the norm minimum of 250 ft.

Mr. Lee: Less than 5 per cent.

Sea-skimming Missiles

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State f Defence what is the principal means of defence again sea-skimming missiles which it is intended to fit to typ 22 Batch III frigates and early vessels in the type 23 clas

Mr. Heseltine: It is intended to fit the Seawolf poi defence missile system both to the type 22 Batch I frigates and the early type 23s, but the type 22 batch III will receive Seawolf in its latest conventionally launched version, rather than the vertically launched version, as I said in reply to my hon. Friend on 28 January at column 25. The intention is to fit the vertically launched version, which is currently under development, to the early type 23 frigates. In addition, the type 22 batch III ships will be fitted with the Goalkeeper close-in weapon system to provide a last ditch defence against sea-skimming missiles.

US Mutual Defence Assistance pogramme

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the latest United States mutual defence assistance programme equipment disposal deposit account will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The account for the year ended 31 March 1984 has been published today as Cmnd. 9448.

This account receives the proceeds, less allowable expenses, of sales of equipment and material originally supplied by the United States during the 1950s under the mutual defence assistance programme. The funds are used, following consultation and agreement with the United States authorities, for United Kingdom projects for the defence of the NATO area additional to the defence effort of the United Kingdom, or for such other projects as may be mutually agreed. Receipts into the account have diminished in recent years and in 1983-84 totalled £5,308, though they will be greater in 1984-85. After consultation with the United States authorities the Government have decided as a measure of administrative economy to discontinue publication of the annual account as a Command paper. The Government will however arrange for any future account to be placed in the Library of the House should an hon. Member so request. The Comptroller and Auditor General will continue to audit and certify the account.

West Germany (Border Security)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what artificial barriers exist on the West German border with Eastern Europe to deter incursions by hostile tanks.

Mr. Stanley: There are no such barriers in place in peacetime. It is not the practice to comment on wartime plans.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what specific actions have been taken by the United Kingdom in pursuit of its obligations under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty.

(2) what action Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1980 to reduce their stocks of nuclear weapons in accordance with the provisions of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Stanley: There is no obligation placed on nuclear weapon states in the non-proliferation treaty to reduce their stocks of nuclear weapons unilaterally. Article VI of the treaty commits all parties to negotiations in good faith on measures to halt the nuclear arms race and relating to nuclear disarmament. The first priority must be for reductions in the arsenals of the US and USSR, which hold the vast majority of such weapons. The UK has strongly supported US efforts to achieve agreements aimed at doing this and fully shares the objectives of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on earth, at limiting and reducing nuclear arms and at strengthening strategic stability.

SCOTLAND

Aerial Spraying (Speyside)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotand when he will publish the findings of the Forestry Commission control experiment involving the aerial spraying of 142 hectares of land in Speyside in 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: The findings will be published by the Forestry Commission in a research and development volume later this year.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what effects were expected following the aerial spraying of 142 hectares of land in Speyside as part of a control experiment by the Forestry Commission in 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: There was no evidence that aerial spraying of forests with fenitrothion had any adverse effect on bird populations, but this was a control experiment and it would have been wrong to anticipate the results.

Shellfish

Sir John Wells asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the value of commercial landings of oysters and of all other shellfish for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his answer, 28 February 1985]: The information is as follows:

Value of shellfish landings in Scotland by United Kingdom vessels:

	Oysters	Other shellfish	Total shellfish
1980	—	19,368,066	19,368,066
1981	—	21,084,289	21,084,289
1982	420	23,753,808	23,754,228
1983	125	29,174,081	29,174,206
1984	—	33,376,181	33,376,181

PRIME MINISTER

Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report a table showing output per head for the whole working population for the latest 12 months for which figures are available as a percentage of 1973 and 1979; and if she will provide similar figures excluding the production of oil and gas.

The Prime Minister: Figures of output per head in the United Kingdom are usually published on the basis of numbers employed, that is, employees in employment plus self-employed persons. The working population includes the claimant unemployed. An output per head series compiled on the definition requested for the whole economy is shown below. As there is no way of allocating all the unemployed to individual industries, it is not possible to compile figures on this definition below whole economy level.

The comparison requested is shown on published basis as follows:

Output per head (1980 = 100)

	Of the working population—whole economy	Of numbers employed Whole economy	Wh excludi of mi
1973	99·6	95·7
1979	103·7	102·3

Agricultural Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the Government have carried out a review of the direct and indirect costs of the common agricultural policy to the United Kingdom and of the likely increase in costs in the future in the absence of measures to put a stop to the growth in agricultural output.

The Prime Minister: I agree that it is essential that the cost of the CAP must be contained. That is why at our instigation the Council of Ministers has adopted conclusions of budgetary discipline, including a financial guideline for agriculture which provides, broadly, that CAP expenditure can only increase at a rate less than the rate of growth of the Community's own resources base. The costs of the CAP to the United Kingdom will be further mitigated by the agreement reached at Fontainebleau on budgetary imbalances.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report a table showing the annual average increase in gross domestic product in real terms, excluding the production of oil and gas, for the decades ended in 1984, 1974 and 1964, respectively; and if she will include similar figures for manufacturing output.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is as follows:

Average percentage growth rate per year over period

	1954-64	1964-74	1974-84
*Gross domestic product †excluding extraction of mineral oil and natural gas	+2·8	+2·3	+0·7
Manufacturing output	+3·4	+2·5	−1·2

* Based on the output measure of constant price GDP, which is the appropriate measure for comparison by industry.

EC (Agriculture Support)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minist she will publish in the Official Report a table sh 1983 and 1984 what each member state receive EEC by way of support from agriculture, the p of the total, and the amount paid into the EEC as a percentage of own-resources payments.

The Prime Minister: The following table se information requested for 1983. Equivalent fi 1984 are not yet available.

USA (Imports)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minis assurances she sought from President Reagan on h visit to the United States of America that no pro measures will be imposed on imports to the Unit of America from the United Kingdom following t appreciation of the United States dollar against t sterling.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Lad Statement I made to the House on 26 February a 173-186.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister what criteria were taken into account when deciding on the relative cut in expenditure on the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in England, Wales and Scotland, respectively; and why the percentage cut in Scotland is greater than in England and Wales.

The Prime Minister: The Government's expenditure plans 1985-86 to 1987-88 published in January 1985 provide for a reduction in expenditure by the agricultural Departments on advisory services to farmers by £20 million in 1987-88. This reduction reflects the Government's aim that industry should make a greater financial contribution towards the cost of services from which it benefits and is provisional and depends on progress towards achievement of this aim. My right hon. Friends, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Scotland agreed that the proposed reduction would be shared pro rata to the planned expenditure by their Departments on Advisory Services in 1987-88. On that basis it is proposed that the planned expenditure of £40 million by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on advisory services in 1987-88 will be reduced by £16·6 million and the planned expenditure of £8·2 million by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland will be reduced by £3·4 million. Thus the percentage cut in Scotland is no greater than that in England and Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bophuthatswana

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what respect Bophuthatswana fails to satisfy the accepted Foreign and Commonwealth Office criteria for the recognition of a sovereign state.

Mr. Rifkind: We do not recognise Boputhatswana as an independent State on the grounds that it does not enjoy genuine independence.

European Council

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the European Council; and what is its relationship with other European Economic Community institutions.

Mr. Rifkind: The European Council was set up by Heads of Government at the Paris summit in December 1974

"to ensure progress and overall consistency in the activities of the Communities and in the work on political co-operation".

The relationship of the European Council with other community institutions is set out in the solemn declaration of 19 June 1983, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Heads of Government Meetings

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis the United Kingdom participates in decisions by European Economic Community Heads of Government meetings which do not stem from obligations under the basic European Economic Community treaties.

Mr. Rifkind: The basis on which the European Council meets is set out in the solemn declaration of June 1983, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Decisions in the field of political co-operation are implemented as part of the foreign policy of each member state. Decisions which fail to be implemented by means of Community instruments become the subject of normal Council procedures and parliamentary scrutiny procedures in this country.

Torture (UN Convention)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intend to sign and ratify the United Nations convention against torture; whether Her Majesty's Government support the principle of an optional protocol to the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We hope to sign the United Nations convention against torture shortly. We shall have to consider what reservations, interpretative declarations or domestic legislation may be required before we can ratify. We shall also need to consult the dependent territories, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

We are still considering the optional protocol, which has not yet been the subject of detailed discussion at the United Nations.

Falklands Conflict

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what time and on what date the Foreign and Commonwealth Office first learnt of the press conference held in Lima by President Belaunde Terry on 2 May 1982 at which he announced that Britain and the Argentine had agreed to cease hostilities and were studying proposals formulated by the United States Secretary of State.

Mr. Renton: The Peruvian President's press conference started at 1800 peruvian time (2300 GMT) on 2 May 1982. Her Majesty's ambassador in Lima's telegram reporting it was sent at 0144 GMT on 3 May 1982. The Peruvian President announced proposals, but no agreement.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Training)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of the course work and the practical work, respectively, of teacher training colleges is devoted to acquainting students with the special factors relevant to the teaching of pupils from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Dunn: The criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training require that students should be prepared to teach the full range of pupils, to respond flexibly to their particular needs, and to guard against preconceptions based on race or sex. Teacher training institutions adopt various approaches to the promotion of an awareness of the needs of ethnic minority pupils: a number seek to ensure that it permeates all aspects of the curriculum, while others devote a special course unit to this aspect of training. Through practical work institutions are expected to seek to offer their students a broad range of experience in schools, though their scope for ensuring that students gain experience of teaching children from ethnic minority groups will vary according to their location. My right hon. Friend will give careful consideration to any recommendations on teacher training made by the committee of inquiry into the education of children from ethnic minority groups chaired by Lord Swann.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if there is any racism awareness training available for teachers in maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that a small number of in-service training courses concerned with "racism awareness" are currently available and that there are differing views about the value of such courses. My right hon. Friend expects to consider questions of teaching approaches and training needs in the light of the report of the committee of inquiry into the education of children from ethnic minority groups chaired by Lord Swann.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional amount would be paid to a qualified teacher at the starting point of grade 1 and to a qualified headteacher at the highest point of school group 14, respectively, if the current pay claim by teachers were accepted.

Sir Keith Joseph: The teachers' current claim is that all teachers should receive the same increase of £1,200 pa from 1 April 1985.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average salary of full-time primary and secondary school teachers, excluding heads and deputy heads, in maintained schools in England and Wales for each year since 1973, in current prices and constant 1983-84 prices.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

A1 (Anglo-Scottish Border)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects the Anglo-Scottish border on the A1 to be clearly indicated.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department is arranging to have a stone carved, vandal proof sign erected at the Anglo-Scottish border on the A1. We shall endeavour to have the sign in place within the next four months. I am writing to the hon. Member.

Bitumen

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the rise in the schedule price of bitumen since the start of 1984; and what impact this will have on the volume of road maintenance and road construction in 1985-86.

Mrs. Chalker: Based on schedules of prices issued by some major producers, bitumen prices have risen in the range of 30 to 38 per cent. since the beginni The price of bitumen is only one among m which influence the overall costs of road cons maintenance. The net effect on the trunk road is expected to be less than 1 per cent. which be offset by the continuing trend of keen ten

DVLC (Costs)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary o Transport what was the annual operating cost and vehicle licensing centre in 1982, 1983 respectively.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The approximate t operating the driver and vehicle licensing including its local office network, was £91·3 1982-83 and £102·3 million in 1983-84. Th cost for 1984-85 is £108·8 million.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Tamper-proof Me

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary Transport if any progress has been made in d tamper-proof mechanism on fuel-injection equ heavy goods vehicles.

Mrs. Chalker: No. At present it does possible to overcome the practical problems for tampering whilst at the same time permitting adjustments to be made.

Pilotage

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary Transport what representations the General British Shipping has made to Her Majesty's G about the reorganisation of pilotage since 1983 will place copies of such representations in th

Mr. David Mitchell: Since 1983 we hav four representations from the GCBS wholly concerning the reorganisation of pilotage. In a GCBS has made representations on a numb pilotage orders and byelaws providing for reo in particular pilotage districts; and I and my off met the GCBS from time to time to discuss mutual concern, including pilotage. The m representation contains the GCBS's commen "Consultative Document on Marine Pilotage" December, and with its agreement I am placing these comments in the Library.

Gatwick (Signposting)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for if he will take steps to secure the signposting o airport on main roads leading to it from Ke central London area.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall answer this question

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Department if he will arrange for his Departme sending acknowledgement postcards, other sealed envelope, when those cards refer to the name and addresses of constituents concerning whom hon. Members have been in correspondence.

Mr. Leon Brittan: I am not persuaded that the additional expenditure involved in placing all acknowledgement cards in sealed envelopes would be justified. I have, however, made special arrangements for the hon. Member's post to be dealt with in that way.

Immigration (Entry Clearance)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the certified copies of the sponsored passports relating to the entry clearance required by the fiancé of Miss Mossarat Zahra Abbas of 21 Longton road, Stone, have now been received by the authorities in Islamabad.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that the entry clearance officer in Islamabad received a certified copy of Miss Abbas's current passport but that she has not provided copies of previous passports on which she had travelled. As further information is required before a decision can be taken on the application of her fiancé, Mr. Sadat Ali Shah, arrangements are now being made for Miss Abbas to be interviewed here.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish in the Official Report for each of the years 1979 to 1984 the number of telephones which were tapped on grounds other than (a) terrorism directed from Ireland and the middle east and (b) murder, theft and similar criminal activities without any evidence of political motive.

Mr. Brittan: No. Successive Governments have accepted the conclusion of the 1957 Committee of Privy Councillors under the chairmanship of Lord Birkett that there are powerful arguments against disclosing statistics of authorised interception. Exceptions to this policy have been made only in the Birkett report itself (Cmnd. 283) and in the 1980 and 1985 White Papers on the "Interception of Communications" (Cmnd. 7873 of April 1980 and Cmnd. 9438 of February 1985). To give statistics which distinguished certain authorisations on national security grounds from other authorised interception would be particularly harmful since (in the words of paragraph 121 of the Birkett report):

"it would greatly aid the operation of agencies hostile to the state if they were able to estimate even approximately the extent of the interceptions of communications for security purposes."

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy of referring to the Parole Board the cases of life sentence prisoners who have already spent long periods in custody.

Mr. Brittan: On 30 November 1983 I informed the House of my policy on life sentence prisoners. The first stage in the formal review by the Parole Board machinery is the reference of the case to the local review committee at the prison at which the life sentence prisoner is held. The date of this first formal review is normally set for three years before the expiry of the period thought necessary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence which I decide after consultation with the judiciary. When this period is longer than 20 years, however, I have decided that the date of the first formal review should nonetheless still be set after 17 years in custody or at, or close to, the date when the case would again have been considered by the now disbanded joint parole board-Home Office committee. Both the prison staff and the prisoner are, however, informed that reviews set in these special circumstances do not in any way imply that 20 years has been set as the period necessary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence.

In accordance with this policy, I am asking the LRCs at the prisons in which Ian Brady and Myra Hindley are detained to consider their cases as soon as possible and for the Parole Board subsequently to make its recommendations to me. The review of these cases does not mean either that the periods of detention necessary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence have been completed or are near completion; or that the Parole Board will recommend the release of either prisoner; or that I would necessarily accept such a recommendation if it were made.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report, for each of the past five years, the total income that the British Broadcasting Corporation received from television licences and the amount of licence revenue paid into Government funds from gross licence revenue.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The BBC's licence fee income and the gross television licence fee revenue were as follows:

	BBC Income £ Million	Gross Revenue £ Million
1979-80	398·8	428·9
1980-81	503·3	532·1
1981-82	557·4	602·4
1982-83	696·8	740·0
1983-84	697·9	762·8

The difference between the two figures takes account of a complex series of adjustments in respect of over or under payments in individual years.

Civil Defence Adviser (Letter)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the letter set out by Mr. Eric Alley, civil defence adviser to the Home Office, on 9 November 1984 was sent with his authorisation; and if he will publish the text of the letter and the enclosures in the Official Report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The adviser's letter, which did not require authorisation and did not state Government policy, has my full support. It was intended to make available a contribution to the debate on the nuclear winter hypothesis in response to requests for information from county emergency planning officers. Whilst it would not be appropriate to reproduce the letter in the Official Report I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

Cash Limit

Mr. Ryder asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has plans to alter the cash limit relating to Class IX, Vote 7.

Mr. Brittan: Reduced requirements this financial year, mainly on capital expenditure on police technical services and training and on accommodation, enable me to announce a reduction in the cash limit for this Vote from £304,452,000 to £294,452,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Soil Survey

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he took before announcing his decision on 18 January to reduce his Department's funding of the Soil Survey of England and Wales to satisfy himself that the survey would have access to adequate funds from other sources to enable it to continue.

Mr. Jopling: Our consideration of the work of the Soil Survey indicated that a wide range of organisations in both the public and private sectors make use of the information and expertise which it provides. We believe this offers scope for the survey to develop these links and to operate more commercially in the future.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the main achievements so far of the Soil Survey of England and Wales.

Mr. Jopling: The work of the survey has provided a scientific basis for the classification of soils and an inventory of information which provides a valuable database. It has recently completed soil maps at a scale of 1 : 250,000 covering England and Wales. It has also undertaken a range of other mapping work and integrated soil, crop and climate studies.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he undertook before his announcement to the House on 18 January, Official Report, column 248, concerning the proposed reduction in funding for the Soil Survey of England and Wales.

Mr. Jopling: In considering the future funding of the Soil Survey there were consultations with the Agricultural and Food Research Council and the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food. My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister of State, also met members of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants representing the staff of the Soil Survey.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to other EEC countries which have national soil surveys in progress or completed.

Mr. Jopling: I understand that a soil survey map is now in preparation for the whole of the European Community at a scale of 1 : 1 million and that this is likely to be published shortly. In addition individual member states prepare national maps at varying scales.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he made any assessment of the possible implications for redundancies before he took his decision to reduce the level of his Department's funding of the Soil Survey of England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The decision to maintain funding at the planned level in 1985-86 and to give notice of the level of commissioned work in 1986-87 was intended to give the Soil Survey and the Agricultural and Food Research Council an opportunity to develop alternative sources of funding and to minimise the implications of the change for the staff involved.

WALES

Assisted Areas

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for the counties of South Glamorgan, Gwent, Powys, Gwynedd and Clwyd the percentage of the working population that resided in assisted areas eligible for regional development grant previous to the changes that took effect in the assisted area map on 29 November 1984; and what is the equivalent percentage figures after those changes have been introduced.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The relevant percentage coverage for the counties of South Glamorgan, Gwent, Powys, Gwynedd and Clwyd is as follows:

	Before 29 November 1984	From 29 November 1984
Gwent	97	31
Powys	15	5
Gwynedd	68	23
Clwyd	80	84

The information relates to the economically active population.

Hill and Marginal Land

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many acres of hill and marginal land were reclaimed in Wales in the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Separate records are not kept of the acreage of hill and marginal land that is reclaimed in Wales. The following figures show the amount of grant that has been paid on reclamation work under the farm capital grant schemes during the last seven years in the less favoured area of Wales. Statistics for earlier years are not available.

Year (January to December)	Amount paid £
1978	47,038
1979	50,693
1980	78,822
1981	62,187
1982	95,038
1983	147,621
*1984	135,692

* To end September only.

Lime Subsidy

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to introduce a lime subsidy scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans to introduce a lime subsidy scheme, but support for liming as a capital improvement in the less favoured area continues to be available under the capital grant schemes.

Natural Woodland

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to safeguard natural woodland in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Forestry Commission is developing policy proposals for broadleaved woodland in the light of responses to its consultative paper "Broadleaves in Britain". The best and most practical means of safeguarding ancient semi-natural broadleaved woodland is one of the important questions being covered. My right hon. Friends and I expect to be in a position to make a statement by the summer recess.

Unemployment

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to meet representatives of Preseli district council to discuss the unemployment situation in North Pembrokeshire; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans at present for such a meeting. Development prospects in the area benefit from the continuing work of the Welsh Development Agency and the Wales Tourist Board as well as receiving assistance as an intermediate area and from European sources.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to meet representatives of Ceredigion district council to discuss the unemployment situation in the Teify valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans at present for such a meeting. The various initiatives set in hand in June last year with the aim of creating employment opportunities in the Teifi valley are progressing satisfactorily. The Dyfed county council, Welsh Development Agency, Wales tourist board, Mid-Wales Development and others are participating fully. These initiatives are in addition to programmes of aid from Government, statutory agencies and European sources.

Drainage Grants

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been paid in drainage grants to farmers in Wales during the last year; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The amount paid in drainage grants under the farm capital grant schemes to farmers in Wales during the past nine years is as follows:

Year (January-December)	Amount paid £
1976	1,144,041
1977	1,400,585
1978	1,669,755
1979	1,805,068
1980	2,565,198
1981	2,496,439
1982	4,206,184
1983	4,762,150
1984 (to end September)	5,060,190

The information for 1975 is not available.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to help pig producers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no specific plans to help pig producers. Returns to producers have been higher in recent months than during the corresponding period a year earlier.

Land Bank

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to take steps to introduce a land bank in the current year to help new entrants to farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans to do so.

Secretary of State (Official Visits)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each county in Wales the number of official visits that he has made for each year since his appointment.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have made numerous official and private visits to each county in the Principality.

Health Service Commissioner (Investigations)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases were investigated by the Health Service Commissioner in each of the area health authorities in Wales in the year ended 31 March 1983; what were the results of those investigations; and what actions were subsequently taken.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of households and the rate per 1,000 population in each local authority who received assistance with the provision of disabled persons (household aids) in (a) 1982-83 and (b) 1983-84.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

Provision of Aids

Local authority	Number of cases of assistance during 1982-83	Rate per 1,000 population	Number of cases of assistance during 1983-84	Rate per 1,000 population
Clwyd	4,423	11·2	7,812	19·7
Dyfed	3,411	10·2	4,358	13·0

South Glamorgan	1,879	4·8	2,383	6·1
West Glamorgan	1,821	4·9	2,038	5·6

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of households containing disabled children and the rate per 1,000 child population in each local authority who received assistance with the payment of telephone rentals in (a) 1982-83 and (b) 1983-84.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is collected in terms of the numbers of children assisted and the figures are given in the following table:

Assistance with telephone rentals

Local Authority	Number of cases of assistance during 1982-83	Rate per 1,000 children aged under 16	Number of cases of assistance during 1983-84	Rate per 1,000 children aged under 16

Public Bodies (Remuneration)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report, for each public body to which he makes appointments, the financial remuneration paid to each member for each year since 1979, separately distinguishing between expenses and income.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Particulars of financial remuneration paid to each member of each of the public bodies appointed solely by me are included where appropriate in the publication Public Bodies which has been updated annually since 1982 and copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. The remuneration paid at 1 July 1984 is included in "Public Bodies 1984" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on 18 December 1984. Details of remuneration paid prior to 1982 are not available in readily accessible form and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Information on expenses paid to individual appointees is not held centrally.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report for each county the number of children taken into care in the years 1982, 1983, and 1984.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information available is given in the following table and refers to the most recent care episode of each child who came into care during the 12 months ended 31 March.

Children taken into care

	1982	1983	1984
Clwyd	243	198	146
Dyfed	140	125	110
Gwent	377	379	315
Gwynedd	145	147	99
Mid Glamorgan	436	404	328
Powys	39	62	55
South Glamorgan	360	342	320
West Glamorgan	221	188	189

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the information known to him regarding visits to Wales by overseas visitors for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on the numbers of overseas visitors and their spending is obtained through the international passenger survey—a survey carried out for the Department of Trade and Industry by the Office of Population Censuses. The estimates are based on interviews with a random sample of passengers entering and leaving the United Kingdom.

The details relating to visitors to Wales have to be treated with caution because of the small sample size. Figures for the period 1974-1983 (the latest date for which the information is available) are as follows:

Overseas visitors to Wales	Number (000s)	Revenue (£ million)
1974	260	20
1975	280	30
1976	320	50
1977	390	100
1978	660	100
1979	530	100
1980	400	100
*1981	400	50
1982	440	50
1983	510	75

* Direct comparisons of estimated overseas revenue are not possible for the years prior to 1981 owing to changes in the method of collection. Estimates for 1980 and before are nominal and should be regarded as broad approximations only.

The survey collects information about the countries of origin of visitors. Figures for 1982 showed the proportions of visitors to Wales as:

North America 24 per cent., European Community 44 per cent., other Western Europe 7 per cent., other areas 25 per cent. A similar analysis has not been made for other years and could only be done at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Entertainment Allowance

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the total entertainment allowance of his Department for the years 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 19 June 1984 at column 87.

Patient Committees

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has regarding the development of patient committees in Wales, whose establishment was outlined in paragraph 11.34 of the Royal Commission on the National Health Service, Cmnd. 7615; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is no centrally held data about patient committees in Wales, but I am aware that seven such committees are affiliated to the National Association of Patient Participation whose administration costs are supported by a central government grant.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research Projects

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of resources he proposes to devote to research projects undertaken by the National Physical Laboratory, the National Engineering Laboratory, the Warren Spring Laboratory and the Laboratory of the Government Chemist in the next three years.

Mr. Butcher: This financial year the total cost of the four laboratories will be about £61 million. However, they expect to earn around £17 million for repayment work from both the public and private sectors. Their net cost will therefore be in the region of £44 million. There are currently no plans to change this level of support.

Information Technology

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he will seek with the information technology skills shortage committee about the effects of the shortage of manpower on the future of information technology in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: As chairman of the committee, I keep my colleagues in the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of Education and Science, and the Department of Employment fully informed of its views on the question of information technology manpower shortages.

Science and Technology

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the resources devoted to science and technology research as a percentage of his Department's total budget in each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: Most of the Department of Trade and Industry's scientific and technological assistance is provided for development work as well as research and it is not possible to disaggregate the research element. This assistance accounted for 6·3 per cent. of the Department's expenditure in 1979-80, 6·2 per cent. in 1980-81, 6·2 per cent. in 1981-82, 12·0 per cent. in 1982-83, 21·3 per cent. in 1983-84 and 24·8 per cent. (estimated) in 1984-85.

BSC (Refractory Division)

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will refer any proposed sale of the British Steel Corporation's refractory division to Hepworth's to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, with particular regard to future patterns of capacity, sales, market trends and imports.

Mr. Fletcher: The proposed merger is currently being considered by the Office of Fair Trading. My right hon. Friend will announce his decision as soon as practicable.

BT (System Purchase)

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will ask the Director General of Telecommunications to investigate the implications of British Telecom's decision to buy an alternative to system X.

Mr. Pattie: No.

Cotton Velvet

Mr. Fox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department is continuing the special monitoring of imports of cotton velvet from Turkey which was in force during 1984.

Mr. Butcher: Yes, the special monitoring of imports of cotton velvet from Turkey is continuing.

Mr. Fox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing United Kingdom imports of cotton velvet under heading 58.04 6900, and the average import price per square metre in each month of 1984 for which figures are so far available.

Mr. Channon: The information relating to Tariff heading 58.04 6900 (within which cotton velvet cannot be separately distinguished) is as follows:

1984	Value £ million (cif)	Quantity square metre (thous)	£ per square metre
January	1·5	704	2·19
February	1·7	829	2·00

Trade Statistics

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom had a trade imbalance in visible trade in 1984 but had a positive trade balance in 1979 or 1974, giving the relevant amounts, respectively.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

British Overseas Trade Board

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will revise the projected net cash budgets of the British Overseas Trade Board for the next four years to take account of the fall in the value of the pound sterling.

Mr. Channon: No. The Government place great importance on the restraint of public expenditure through cash limits and the BOTB budget cannot be exempt from the economies necessary to bring this about.

Knickers, Pants and Briefs

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) by how much imports of Portuguese knickers, pants and briefs, MFA category 13, exceeded the permitted quota in the period 1 October to 31 December 1984; and what action he proposes to take as a result;

(2) if the voluntary restraint arrangement to curtail the importation of Portuguese knickers, pants and briefs, MFA category 13, to 1·6 million pairs in the period from 1 October to 31 December 1984 was observed.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

International Commercial Arbitration

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what attitude Her Majesty's Government are taking towards the draft model law on international commercial arbitration which is to be considered in June by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law.

Mr. Channon: The Government have given cl attention to the deliberations of the working group UNCITRAL which has drawn up the draft model law. T text has been given a wide circulation in the Uni Kingdom and my Department has received comme from a number of individuals and organisations. Followi consulation with the Lord Chancellor, I have n established a Committee to consider these comments a to recommend what approach the United Kingdom sho adopt at the meeting in June and thereafter. The memb of the Committee will be:

Mr. Justice Mustill (Chairman), Mr L W M Alexander, R J Ayling, Mr W C Beckett CB, Mr S C Boyd QC, Mr Carpenter, Mr Clifford Clark MC, Mr J H Farr, Professor R Goode, Mr J M H Hunter, Mr R A MacCrindle QC, Mr J McCartney, Mr J Murray QC, Mr K S Rokison QC, Mr P Withers CBE and Mr S A Parker (Secretary).

Its principal terms of reference will be:

"1. To consider the draft model law on internatio commercial arbitration adopted by a working group of the Uni Nations Commission on International Trade Law in Febru 1984 and, in the light of any representations made by Brit interests, to advise the Secretary of State for Trade a Industry:—

(a) upon any modifications which the Commit considers should be proposed by HMG to the text the draft model law prior to its adoption by Commission;

(b) upon whether, and if so to what extent, the provisi of the model law should be implemented in Engla and Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland and up what measures should be taken for that purpose; what arrangements should be made to examine a aspects of this question, notably those which may ha different implications for the system of arbitration the three law districts.

2. To examine the operation of the Arbtration Acts 1950-19 in the light of the model law and to recommend to the Secreta of State any legislative or other steps which the Committ considers should be taken to improve the system of arbitrati in England and Wales.".

It is possible that these terms of reference may need be adjusted to respond to developments in UNCITRA My decision to appoint this Committee reflects the ve considerable impact which I believe the model law cou have on international commercial arbitration, both in th country and abroad. The text which the working group h produced is an impressive document, but it is too early say whether, with or without any improvements the Unit Kingdom may propose, it will find favour here or in oth countries.

EMPLOYMENT

Apprenticeships

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State f Employment (1) how many formal apprenticeships we available in the field of (a) telecommunications a (b) information technology, respectively in 1984; and ho many it is estimated that there will be available in 198

(2) how many formal apprenticeships are expected be available in 1985 in technical subjects;

(3) how many formal apprenticeships there we available in 1984 in (a) manufacturing and (b) oth sectors; and how many of these were in technic occupations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not availabl

With regard to the area of information technolog traditional apprenticeship is not the most common meth of skills training, although such skills are being incorporated into apprenticeship training programmes. Similarly, technical skills are more usually gained through full and part-time technical college courses leading, for example, to qualifications from the Business and Technical Education Council.

The number entering traditional apprenticeships will become increasingly irrelevant as a measure of the real level of skills training being undertaken by industry because of both the reform of existing training arrangements and the substantial provision of initial skills training now taking place under the youth training scheme.

Young Persons

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has conducted into the reasons why many employers in both public and private sectors have failed, despite advertising and the offer of pay and conditions agreed with the trade unions, to find young applicants for training and work.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Such research and surveys as are available show that the main reason why some vacancies are hard to fill is a shortage of suitably-qualified applicants. The Government's training policies are designed to help overcome that problem. However, if my hon. Friend will let me have details of specific cases I will gladly look into them.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of employees in employment in March 1974, in March 1979, and at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the estimated numbers of employees in employment in Great Britain for the dates specified. The figures are seasonally adjusted.

	Number
March 1974	22,214,000
March 1979	22,531,000
September 1984	20,701,000

Accidents (Reporting)

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements exist for reports of accidents to be made by employers to the Health and Safety Executive other than fatal accidents, serious injuries and dangerous occurences, as defined by the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no formal arrangements for the reporting of accidents by employers direct to the Health and Safety Executive other than those made by the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions are given to Manpower Services Commission staff as to the information on the health and safety record of individual schemes and projects on the youth training scheme that may be given to the Commission's area manpower boards when they are considering those schemes and projects for renewal; whether details of particular accidents may be disclosed to area manpower boards in such circumstances; and whether he is satisfied that area manpower boards can adequately fulfil their supervisory function on the basis of the information supplied.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 18-19]: Officials of the Manpower Services Commission are instructed to inform area manpower boards of any health and safety problems which may have occurred on a scheme that is being considered for renewal. Commission officials can give statistical information as well as general information on specific incidents involving health and safety. Information which might prejudice subsequent legal proceedings is not normally disclosed. I am satisfied that area manpower boards are supplied with appropriate information to enable them to carry out their job effectively.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what details of severe and fatal accidents on the youth training scheme it is the practice of the Manpower Services Commission (a) to disclose and (b) not to disclose to (i) outside individuals and organisations and (ii) the Commission's area manpower boards; and what the reason is for disclosure or non-disclosure in each instance.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985 c. 18-19]: It is the practice of the Manpower Services Commission to disclose statistical information on fatalities and major and minor injuries arising out of accidents to trainees on the youth training scheme. In addition, area manpowr boards are provided with information about individual severe and fatal accidents but normally without disclosing identifying details which might prejudice any subsequent legal proceedings.

ENERGY

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, columns 355-56, 18 February, he will list (a) the precise dates on which the safeguard proposals to Euratom, covering Sellafield and Springfield mixed civil-military sites were made, (b) the text of the proposals referred to above and (c) any written response Euratom has made to either proposal.

Mr. Goodlad: Proposals for Sellafield and Springfields were put to Euratom on 26 February 1981 and 24 August 1982 respectively; as yet we have received no written response from Euratom to these proposals, but as I stated in my reply of 18 February 1985 to the hon. Member we are engaged in discussions with the Commission.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, pursuant to the answer on nuclear safeguards, Official Report, 18 February, column 353, he will explain what is meant by routine declarations made about United Kingdom facilities to Euratom;

(2) whether, pursuant to the answer, 18 February, Official Report, column 353, he will give details of the other safeguard activities to which he referred in setting out the activities his Department undertakes in order to fulfil the obligations with regard to nuclear materials accountancy and nuclear materials safeguards.

Mr. Goodlad: Under Commission Regulation (Euratom) No. 3227/76 the following information is to be communicated regularly to the Commission by each undertaking using nuclear material:

(i) an annual outline programme of activities;
(ii) programmes for taking physical inventories and for reactor shutdown;
(iii) monthly inventory change reports — showing all movements of nuclear material into and out of each material balance area;
(iv) material balance reports and physical inventory listings for each material balance area;
(v) advance notification of exports and imports.

Other safeguards activities undertaken by operators of United Kingdom nuclear facilities involve:

(a) provision of the information listed above;
(b) provision to Euratom of the technical characteristics of facilities;
(c) preparation for, and implementation of procedures for, inspection of the facilities by Commission inspectors on a regular basis.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Industrial Revenue Bonds

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been made to the Government on the relative merits of introducing legislation to permit the issuance of tax-free industrial revenue bonds to finance new business development.

Mr. Peter Rees: Over the years my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations about industrial revenue bonds.

Wages and Employment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the increase in net exports and expenditure by companies referred to in paragraph 4.04 of his paper on wages and employment would offset the whole of the initial fall in private consumption in his studies and simulations; if he will publish the relevant figures in the Official Report; and if he will set out information predicted by these studies and simulations on the changes in the figures for manufacturing output, investment in plant and machinery, total investment and trade in manufactures.

Mr. Peter Rees: The effects on net trade, company sector and personal sector expenditure, and private consumption in simulations of lower real wages under various assumptions about fiscal and monetary policy are contained in tables A to D of annex B of the recent paper by Treasury officials on "The Relationship between Employment and Wages". The other information requested by the hon. Gentleman is shown in the following table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor Exchequer what are the estimated margins of error re to in paragraphs 4.02 and 4.03 of his paper relationship between wages and employment.

Mr. Peter Rees: The margins of error referre paragraph 4.02 of the paper can be derived fro estimated standard errors of the employment fun corresponding to the real wage elasticities of −½ an These are contained in the studies by Nickell and An (1983) and Layard and Nickell (1984) respectivel estimates of the margins of error in simulations Treasury model are available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor Exchequer what were the elasticities of dema imports and exports of manufactures used in his simu of the relationship between wages and employment

Mr. Peter Rees: In the Treasury model the dema exports of manufactures is measured by the level of trade and the demand for imports of manufactur various domestic activity variables (manufacturing o stockbuilding, consumers' expenditure on clo durable, and other goods, and investment in machinery and vehicles). Details of the elastici exports of manufactures with respect to world trade in the simulation can be found on page 6 of Gover Economic Service working paper No. 71, "Her Maj Treasury Macro-Economic Model: Supplement t 1982 Technical Manual". Details of the import elast can be found on pages 45 to 48 of "Her Majesty's Tre Macro-economic Model Technical Manual 1982". C of both publications are in the House of Commons Li

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor Exchequer what is the nature of the increase in con expenditure referred to in table 2 of his paper on wage employment; and if he will publish a detailed break in the Official Report.

Mr. Peter Rees: The increase in company expenditure referred to in table 2 of the paper on wages and employment consists of investment and stockbuilding. The breakdown is shown below. Columns do not sum to the total because of rounding.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the items listed in table 3 of his paper on the relationship between wages and unemployment a breakdown for each year covered by the simulation; and if he will add figures for the exchange rate, long-term interest rates, and purchases of gilt-edged stock.

Mr. Peter Rees: Most of the information requested is contained in tables A and C of Annex B in the paper by Treasury officials on "The Relationship between Employment and Wages". Additional information is shown in the following table.

The hon. Gentleman should also note that there is an error in table 3 of the paper. The figure for "Real Wage Bill" in the second column should read −1·4 and not −0·4.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 21 February, Official Report, column 568, giving statistical information about public expenditure, if he will reproduce the table showing the indices, where appropriate, in real terms.

Mr. Peter Rees: The indices in real terms based on 1978-79=100 are as follows:

Investment Income

Mr. Silvester asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the loss of tax revenue if the investment income of husband and wife were taxed independently is attributable to persons over retirement age.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1985, c. 402]: This would depend on the particular regime for independent taxation of the investment income of husband and wife. My reply of 5 February 1985, c. 522, provided an estimate of £320 million as the total cost at 1984-85 levels for the income election described in paragraphs 46 to 50 of the Green Paper "The Taxation of Husband and Wife" (Cmnd. 8093). About £110 million of this is in respect of taxpayers over 65.

Family Income

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answers to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) of 6 February 1984, Official Report, columns 439-42 and 15 February 1984, Official Report, columns 203-4, concerning income statistics, to show net earnings at the lowest decile, median and highest decile of the earnings distribution for each year since 1978 for different household types, using constant April 1984 prices; and whether he will also give the same information for the following additional household types: (a) a married couple with two children, where one partner works full-time and the other part-time and (b) a married couple with both partners in full-time work.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1985, c. 403]: Information in the following tables is based on estimates of earnings for those in full time work p adult rates (with pay unaffected by absence). Employees (Company Shares)

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation whereby employers offering approved share option provisions may have the right to buy back employees' shares when their employment comes to an end.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 211]: I have noted my hon Friend's suggestion.

Inland Revenue Staff

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 402, on what dates the last two reviews of arrangements for emergency staffing in the Inland Revenue took place.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 261]: When the present standing arrangements were introduced in January 1979, it was provided that any material changes in the numbers of essential staff requiring emergency heating and lighting would be notified as they occurred to the Property Services Agency. There have however been so many changes in Revenue offices in recent years that it was deemed advisable to re-issue the instructions relating to essential staff. This was done in January 1985.

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 402, whether the arrangements for emergency staff in the Inland Revenue are reviewed at national or regional level in so far as they affect district offices.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 261]: Instructions on the calculation of numbers of essential staff in connection with the provision of emergency heating and lighting are issued by regional offices.

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, column 402, why the regional controller, north-west, Inland Revenue, in a letter to district officers referred to staff levels in an emergency such as a dispute in the power industry leading to electricity cuts or a tanker drivers strike.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 261]: All Inland Revenue offices have standing instructions, dating from January 1979, to follow in the event of an emergency. These include the determination of essential staffing levels requiring emergency heating and lighting in the event of interruptions to power supplies.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security (Equality of Treatment)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many claims by (a) married women and (b) cohabiting women, under the directive on equal treatment for men and women in social security matters, have been successful; and what are the four most common reasons for refusal;

(2) how many claims have been made to his Department by (a) married women and (b) cohabiting women, on behalf of a couple under the directive on equal treatment for men and women in social security matters.

Mr. Whitney: In the case of supplementary benefit, by January 1985 14,300 claims had been made by married and co-habiting women, of which about 5,800 were successful. No records are kept of the reason for refusal, but the reason would be either that the couple's income was too high for the claim to succeed or that the woman failed to qualify to be the claimant under the conditions set out in the Supplementary Benefit (Aggregation) Regulations. In addition, in about 2,500 cases there had been a change of claimant to the woman partner.

In the case of family income supplement, it is estimated that by January 1985 about 10,000 claims had been made by married and co-habiting women, of which about 3,000 were successful. The four main reasons for refusal are that (1) the claimant's partner was only temporarily not in work; (2) earnings were in excess of the prescribed amount; (3) the claimant was not in full-time work; and (4) the couple had no dependent children.

The records do not distinguish between married and co-habiting women.

In the case of national insurance benefits it is regretted that no information is available because of industrial action by computer staff.

Heroin Addiction

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional measures are being considered to combat heroin addiction.

Mr. John Patten: Government measures against drug misuse were outlined in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department to my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) on 31 January at column 243. The education and prevention campaign referred to in that reply was launched on 27 February.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much is spent annually to combat drug abuse.

Mr. John Patten: The cost of services to combat drug abuse are not identified separately in the accounts of health authorities or estimated costs of family practitioner services. Under a central funded initiative an additional £10 million is available over three years for projects providing services for drug misusers. Also £2 million has been allocated for a major education and prevention campaign which was launched on 27 February.

Mobility Allowance

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Wales were in receipt of mobility allowance in 1983 and 1984; in what age groups; and how many people applied but were refused, or failed to qualify.

Mr. Newton: The available information is as follows:

	1983
Number of recipients (at end of year)	23,700
Number of claims (disallowed during year)	5,000

I regret that the information requested about a is not available.

Kidney Donor Cards

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Se State for Social Services how many kidney do were issued in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 19

Mr. John Patten: Kidney donor cards were after 1981. They were succeeded by multi-or which allowed potential donors to indicate whi they were willing to donate. The number of ca by the Department since 1980 has been as follo

	Kidney	Multi-organ
1980	11,211,000	6,144,000	17
1981	1,654,900	16,817,800	18
1982	—	1,100,000	1
1983	—	1,822,200	1
1984	—	12,615,000	12

Private Residential Care Homes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State f Services how many private residential care ho been de-registered since 1 January.

Mr. John Patten: No notifications have beer since 1 January 1985.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of Social Services if he will publish in the Officia for November 1982, 1983 and 1984 the unemployment benefit for (a) a single person married couple as a percentage of average ear male manual workers in Wales.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is the table. The figures are based on estimated earnings for male manual workers in Wales, deri the "New Earnings Survey" for April each interpolation using the Department of Empl monthly indices of average earnings in Great Figures for November 1984 are provisional.

November of	Single Person	Ma Co

General Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of Social Services if he will publish in the Officia the information known to him, for each of the years, where general practitioners' surgeries h closed for failing to reach acceptable standards.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no specific close the practice premises of a general practitioner where they are not deemed by practioner committee to be proper and sufficient. Such a matter would fall to be dealt with under the Service Committees and Tribunal Regulations 1974.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is taking steps to seek to improve the standards of general practitioner records and to seek to ensure their maintenance and in a form which facilitates linkage with hospital records and those kept by other health workers in the community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: General medical practitioners are required under their terms of service to keep adequate records of the illnesses and treatment of their patients on forms supplied for the purpose by the family practitioner committees. We are currently studying the requirements for exchanges between family practitioner services and hospital and community health services. We are also considering in the light of the recent report of the collaboration working party ways in which GPs and others in the health service can improve communications and the shared use of information, whilst respecting and protecting the confidentiality of health information.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce legislation to introduce a compulsory retirement age for general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still considering this question.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the full costs of attendance of general practitioners receptionists at training courses are now met by the family practitioner committee or health authority concerned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under the provisions of the statement of fees and allowances a general medical practitioner is eligible to receive by way of direct reimbursement 70 per cent. of the cost of sending a member of his staff on a course specifically designed for the training of receptionists and organised by one of the approved bodies. The balance of the cost is indirectly reimbursed on an average basis through the expenses element in the gross capitation and other fees paid to the general practitioner. To the best of my knowledge all family practitioner committees comply with these arrangements.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the efficiency of general practitioners in recording the incidence of notifiable diseases.

Mr. John Patten: We have no evidence to suggest that the arrangements for reporting notifiable diseases are not working efficiently.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to remove the statutory obligation on medical practitioner committees to make appointments to single-handed general practitioner posts even if no suitable applicant is available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not aware of any particular problem which has arisen under the present arrangements, which have existed for many years. We will, however, consider the need to remove this obligation from the Medical Practices Committee when a suitable opportunity arises.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is monitoring the activities of family practitioner committees and health authorities in discharging their duties to ensure that patients are seen by their general practitioners in surgeries of an acceptable standard.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The terms of service of general medical practitioners require them to provide proper and sufficient accommodation at their practice premises and it is for the family practitioner committee to judge whether this obligation is met in individual cases. We issued further guidance to FPC's on the discharge of these responsibilities in December 1984. It allowed a withholding or abatement of rent and rates reimbursement where premises do not reach an acceptable standard. We shall be reviewing the effects of introducing the revised standards at the end of this year. Surgery accommodation in health centres is mainly a matter for health authorities and, with few exceptions, it is of an acceptable standard.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is taking steps to introduce a system similar to the Scottish system for recording all information about the dental treatment of children in England.

Mr. John Patten: The systems for recording information about the dental treatment of children in the General Dental Services are already similar in England and Scotland. Because of the substantially larger number of estimate forms involved, however, it is not possible at present for the Dental Estimates Board in England to link the forms relating to individual children when they have been treated by more than one dental practice. The possibility of achieving such linkage is however under consideration. In the Community Dental Service returns are made in Scotland for each individual course of treatment whereas in England statistics are aggregated. The provision of statistics in the community dental service is being examined as part of the overall review of Health Service information.

Health Education Council

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the funds his Department has made available to the Health Education Council for each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The Health Education Council is funded jointly by the Department, the Welsh Office and the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland. Total Government funds allocated to the Council for each of the past five years are as follows, with the Department's contribution shown in brackets.

	£ million	£ million
1981-82	5·0	(4·7)
1981-82	6·6	(6·1)
1982-83	8·6	(7·9)
1983-84	9·3	(8·6)
1984-85	9·6	(8·9)

This represents a rise of 89·4 per cent. in the Department's contribution over the five years.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total annual Government funding for the Health Education Council in each of the years since its formation; and for what purposes these funds are intended.

Mr. John Patten: Total Government funds allocated to the Health Education Council in each of the years since it was set up are as follows:

The Council undertakes a wide variety of health education programmes and carries out the planning and promotion of health education activity at national level in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Sodium Valproate

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if any measures have been taken to warn physicians and surgeons who may have cause to prescribe sodium valproate in any of its forms of its possible adverse effects associated with (a) emotional upset, (b) psychosis, (c) hyperactivity, (d) aggression and (e) behavioural problems.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No, but as I mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member on 29 January at columns 167-8 changes to the data sheet for Epilim (sodium valproate) to include information for prescribers on psychiatric adverse reactions associated with the product are being considered by the licence holder in consultation with the licensing authority. A revised data sheet should be issued soon.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent evaluation has been carried out by the Committee on Safety of Medicines on the use of sodium valproate; and if he will publish its latest findings.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Committee on Safety of Medicines constantly monitors reports of adverse reactions associated with sodium valproate and assesses whether action on its safety is required. The latest information from the committee on the safety of this drug was contained in the January 1983 edition of "Current Problems" which was issued by the Committee to doctors and pharmacists in the United Kingdom. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans he now has for the disposal of 21 national reassessment centres;

(2) which organisations, including local a service departments and voluntary organi been approached with a view to the purchas buildings occupied by the national reassess

(3) what alternative opportunities w available to those who presently reside in reassessment centres.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Membe hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 5 February 1985 at co The process of consultation to decide alternative provision is just beginning and we to add to that reply.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretar Social Services (1) what savings he estimate (b) running costs, (c) repair costs and (d) the of buildings from the closure of 21 national centres;

(2) if he will list the animals now cared f reassessment centres; and what plans he location following the closure of the centre

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Membe as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretar Social Services what organisations he co responsible for the provision of help for youn use the national reassessment centres.

Mr. Whitney: Young people are n admitted to resettlement units which are homeless people without a settled way of life are admitted special attention is given to th may be assisted to return home or referred agencies for young people. The consultatio is just beginning will consider forms of provision for people without a settled way o early to say which organisations will e involved in making that provision.

Re-establishment Centres

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretar Social Services what alternative training p provided in place of the 500 training places in Government reassessment centres.

Mr. Whitney: Re-establishment centres v to restore work habits and confidence in p employability had deteriorated as a result unemployment. In recent years increasing also been made by the Manpower Services C help people who have not worked for a long have fallen out of the routine of work. increased provision furnishes opportunities individuals who would previously have establishment centres. The community provides 130,000 places and many projects by organisations with a particular conc disadvantaged people. The voluntary project currently supports about 300 projects design unemployed people with constructive activiti help them to find work or obtain tra preparation training, designed to help unemp become more employable and trainable, is for some 23,000 people in 1984-85 and it is by 1986-87, 50,000 of those who participate in the community programme should be able to receive work preparation and basic skills training. In addition, long-term unemployed people who are disabled or who have a health problem which limits the type of work they can do can be considered for a course of employment rehabilitation.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he will make available the 1983 estimated figures for the take-up of social security benefits;

(2) if he will conduct a survey into the amount of housing benefit that goes unclaimed.

Mr. Whitney: Estimates of the take-up of supplementary benefit and free welfare milk in 1983 are expected to be available later this year. It is hoped that an estimate of the take-up of one parent benefit in 1983 can be made by the end of this year. So far as family income supplement is concerned, it is hoped that an estimate of take-up based on 1983 and 1984 family expenditure survey data will be available early in 1986. Because of the introduction of housing benefit it is difficult to use the family expenditure survey data collected during 1983 to obtain reliable estimates of housing benefit take-up. I will however write to the hon. Member about this. We expect to be able to make estimates of the take-up of housing benefit for 1984 early next year. These estimates will include some information on about the amount of unclaimed housing benefit.

Heating Additions

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will conduct a survey into the take-up of heating additions by (a) pensioners and (b) others.

Mr. Whitney: No. I refer the hon. Member however to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mrs. McCurley) on 25 February at column 75, which I indicated the measures taken by the Government to promote take-up. In December 1983 about 60 per cent. of supplementary benefit claimants were getting heating additions compared with about 53 per cent. in December 1978 and we estimate that over 90 per cent. of supplementary pensioners now get heating additions compared with about 71 per cent. in December 1978. We expect to spend some £140 million more in real terms on heating additions this financial year than was spent in 1978-79.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the results of his review of the operation of the formula for exceptionally severe weather allowances.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my ho Friend's reply to him on 18 January at column 261. W shall announce the conclusions of our review of soci security benefits within the next few months.

Educational Videos

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of Sta for Social Services what was the total amount spent b (a) his Department and (b) the Health Education Counc on contributions towards the production of education videos in each of the last three years for which figures a available.

Mr. John Patten: The total amount spent by t Department and the Health Education Council on t production of educational films-videos over the last thr years is as follows:

	DHSS	Health Education Council
1982-83	176,300	70,000
1983-84	97,300	28,000
1984-85	121,100	25,000

In addition, over the period 1982 to 1984 the Counc contributed £230,000 to the production of eight televisi programmes on nutrition for Channel Four, from whi videos have been produced for use by health workers a schools.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of Sta for Social Services what was the total amount spent by (his Department and (b) the Health Education Council the purchase and distribution of educational videos in ea of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: Neither the Department nor t Health Education Council purchases outside educatio films-videos. The total amount spent on distribution ov the last three years is as follows:

	DHSS	Health Education Council
1982-83	28,700	6,000
1983-84	27,000	7,319

* Estimated to the end of the financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of Sta for Social Services if he will list the titles and produce of all educational videos whose production has be wholly or in part sponsored by (a) his Department and the Health Education Council in each of the last three yea for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows:

"Let's Talk About Love"

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the Health Education Council declined to make any contribution towards the production or distribution costs of the recently released video produced by the organisation Family and Youth Concern, entitled "Let's Talk About Love"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The video film "Let's Talk about Love" was produced by the research and education trust of The Responsible Society. I understand that the Health Education Council, in considering an approach for help in funding the production, asked for certain changes in the proposed script. The Responsible Society decided however to proceed without the Council's assistance.

NHS (Drugs)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value on average of National Health Service drugs prescribed in the last full year for which figures are available by (a) dispensing doctors and (b) general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 274]: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev Martin Smyth) on 11 February at column 79.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 4 March 1985

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Official Secrets Act

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General if, under the provisions of section 36(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1972, he will seek the opinion of the Court of Appeal on the point of law which arises on the judicial interpretation in the Ponting case of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

The Attorney-General: No.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer on 18 February about the number of outstanding right-to-buy applications, Official Report, column 335, what action he is taking to ensure Welwyn Hatfield district and other local authorities speed up their processing.

Sir George Young: The figures for outstanding right-to-buy applications shown in the Official Report, at column 335, are taken from statistical returns provided by local authorities. Welwyn Hatfield has subsequently amended its figures to show that as at March 1984 there were 1,160 outstanding cases (not 1,558). These figures can, however, only be used as a very crude indicator of possible delays in processing applications because they do not distinguish between cases awaiting action by the tenant or the authority, and in 761 of the 1,044 outstanding cases at March 1984 applicants had received their section 10 notice (which notifies them of the price of the dwelling) but had neither accepted the offer nor withdrawn their application.

While we have no reason to consider that tenants of Welwyn Hatfield are currently experiencing delays in the processing of their right-to-buy applications, where delays do arise, or are suspected, the Department takes this up with the authority concerned and, where appropriate, monitors monthly progress in detail.

Empty Dwellings (Greater London)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated annual loss of rents from public sector empty dwellings in Greater London and in each of its component boroughs and the City in each of the last six years.

Sir George Young: On the basis of information provided by local authorities in their housing subsidy claim forms, the figures for 1980-81 to 1984-85 are set out as follows. They take no account of the cost of housing benefit which would have been payable to tenants. Information for earlier years is not available.

* 1984-85 figures are local authority estimates.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated annual loss of rates from empty dwellings in (i) the private sector and (ii) the public sector in each of the boroughs in Greater London and in the City of London in each of the last six years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The estimates total annual loss of rates on collection for each local authority is published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in its annual publication 'Rate Collection Statistics' (the latest edition relates to 1982-83). Separate figures for private and public sectors are not available centrally.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many official gipsy sites have been established on green belt land since the passing of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government that where official gipsy sites exist on green belt land, the occupants are allowed to carry on businesses from those sites.

Mr. Macfarlane: The management of official sites is a matter for the responsible local authorities, which will normally define in their tenancy agreements the activities that may be carried on upon such sites, having regard to the terms of any planning permission granted or deemed to have been granted for the use of the land.

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government for official gipsy sites to be established within the green belt.

Mr. Macfarlane: Local authorities are advised in DOE circular 28/77 that it may be necessary to accept the establishment of gipsy sites in areas of open land (including green belts) particularly where they come close to urban fringes in order to prevent unauthorised camping in far less suitable places. They are also advised of their special obligation to ensure that the arguments in favour of departing from the development plan are convincing.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reason the Adam Smith Institute was included amongst the list of organisations from which comments have been invited on the paper, "Competition in the Provision of Local Authority Services."

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: It is normal practice to circulate consultation papers to organisations which have either expressed or have a known interest in the subject matter.

Disabled Persons (Building Regulations)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for th Environment when he intends to lay before the House statutory instrument amending building regulations t cover facilities for disabled people.

Mr. Gow: I intend to lay before the House before th end of this month a statutory instrument amending th building regulations so as to require the provision of acces for disabled people to all new shops and offices and to nev single storey public buildings.

General Needs Housing Association

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary o State for the Environment how many tenanted houses o General Needs Housing Association houses have been sol to sitting tenants in England with a discount; and wha proportion this is in percentage terms and numbers of th total stock of General Needs Housing Association houses

Sir George Young: No information is held centrally or housing associations sales completed in England with a discount on market valuation. However, between April 1979 and September 1984, 6,910 housing association dwellings were sold to sitting tenants in England, representing 1·7 per cent. of the housing associations' fair rent stock at 1 April 1984. In addition, 25,360 co-ownership sales were completed during that period.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has made, is conducting, plans to make, or is aware of, concerning the long range transport of pesticides in the atmosphere.

Mr. Waldegrave: The long-range transport in the atmosphere of some organo-chlorine pesticides is a recognised phenomenon. A report commissioned by my Department last year from the Institute of Offshore Engineering of Heriot-Watt university contained information of the aerial transport of organo-chlorine pesticides in the context of inputs of these and other substances into the North Sea. My Department is currently considering whether or not further research is needed to refine the estimates given in that report.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning a recent study by the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States of the economic disbenefits of pesticide use; and what studies his Department has made, is conducting, or plans on this subject.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not clear to which report this question refers. My Department has not conducted studies in this area and has no plans to do so.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce environmental quality objectives for pesticide levels in air and water.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no evidence that ambient levels of pesticides in air are a cause for concern. Quality objectives would therefore be of little value. Quality objectives are, however, a well-recognised feature of our system for ensuring water quality. In the context of the EC Directive 84/491/EEC, environmental quality standards have been set for the isomers of hexachlorocyclohexane in water and the Council of Ministers is also considering proposals for similar directives covering DDT and related substances, pentachlorophenol and dieldrin, endrin and aldrin.

In addition, my Department is currently considering the need for quality standards in the aquatic environment appropriate to a range of quality objectives for a number of pesticides which are in the "grey list".

Derelict Land

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to be able to announce additional derelict land allocations for 1985-86 for uncommitted schemes which can be commenced in that financial year;

(2) if he plans any changes in the system of making derelict land allocations;

(3) what representations he has received regarding the present system of making derelict land grant allocations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend announced the derelict land grant allocations for 1985-86 on 7 February. Approvals for uncommitted schemes will be made in line with available resources and priorities. We are in constant touch with the local authorities and other bodies over various aspects of the derelict land grant programme. I have no immediate proposals to change the current system.

Local Government Structure

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a general study of the powers and duties of local government; if he will give consideration to extending single tier local government along the lines of his proposals for creating such a structure within the metropolitan areas; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government examined the statutory duties of local authorities very thoroughly shortly after taking office and there are no plans for a further fundamental review of the type which my hon. Friend appears to have in mind. The Government's conclusions about the structure of local government generally are set out in paragraph 1.5 of the White Paper "Streamlining the Cities" (Cmnd. 9063) published in October 1983.

Lindane

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what advice the Nature Conservancy Council gives to householders or wood treatment companies regarding the treatment of timbers in roof spaces with the pesticide Lindane where bats may be present;

(2) what studies his Department has made, plans, or is aware of, regarding the effects of the pesticide Lindane on bats in roof spaces;

(3) in which European countries Lindane is banned or restricted for use in treating timbers in occupied buildings.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Nature Conservancy Council recommends the use of synthetic pyrethroids such as permethrim and cypermethrin when timber preservation problems arise in houses where bats are present. Tests have shown that these to be as effective in controlling woodworm as the more common chemicals while remaining relatively harmless to bats.

Research undertaken by the Vincent Wildlife Trust at Aberdeen university, which indicates that Lindane is lethal to bats, has been of great assistance to the Nature Conservancy Council in formulating its advice given to householders and timber treatments companies. Lindane has been cleared for use within Great Britain under the pesticide safety precautions scheme but information regarding use within other European countries is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Housing Associations (London)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing association developments in London are (a) for black tenants and (b) for white tenants.

Sir George Young: This information is not available.

Rate Limitation Order

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received as to the estimated number of manual and officer grade posts which will be lost in the local authorities named in the Rate Limitation Order as a result of its implementation.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received no complete information of this kind. It is for each selected authority to decide how to live within its rate and precept limit.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are employed as (a) home helps, (b) street sweepers, (c) dustmen and (d) care attendants in each of the authorities listed in the Rate Limitation Order.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many school-leavers and apprentices were taken on by each of the local authorities listed for rate limitation in 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not available centrally.

Refuse Services

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those authorities that have placed their refuse services out to private contractors; how many staff were employed at the date of privatisation; and what information he has as to the number subsequently employed by the contractor.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department does not collect systematic information on this subject but a list which includes known contracts for refuse services appears in the magazine Contract Services.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the individuals and institutions he has invited to give evidence to his inquiry into local government finance.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: At this stage the local government finance studies are internal to the Department and we are therefore not engaged in formal consultation or taking of evidence. Where individuals or organisations have nevertheless expressed a wish to feed in their views, I have said that we are prepared to receive written material on an informal basis. Once proposals have been formulated there will of course, be full consultation before any question of legislation arises.

Olympic Games

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the implications for the construction industry of hosting the 1992 Olympic Games in the north west of England.

Mr. Macfarlane: Any such estimate would be premature in advance of the assessment by BOA officers referred to in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 25 February at column 61.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the method by which fluoride is added to water supplies; what safeguards are involved; what variations in the method exist in different parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: About 95 per cent. of fluoridation plants use hexafluorosilicic acid supplied as a 20 per cent. solution in water; the remainder use disodium hexafluorosilicate supplied as a powder.

All the plants using the acid have a "day" tank which holds about one day's requirement of acid, and can be filled only once in any 24-hour period. At small waterworks the acid is diluted with water in an automatic failsafe chemical diluter. The acid or the diluted acid is them injected into the water by a dosage pump in proportion to the water flow through the works. The dosage pump is designed to work close to its maximum output. The majority of plants have an automatic continuously recording fluoride monitor which signals an alarm or stops fluoridation should the fluoride concentration in the water entering supply start to exceed a preset value of between 1·2 mg/l and 1·5 mg/l.

A few large manned works which store the water before supply rely on frequent manual sampling and analysis for fluoride.

There are thus three safeguards to ensure that consumers do not receive over-fluoridated water: the use of a "day" tank; a controlled dosing pump operating near its maximum capacity; and monitoring arrangements whether automatic or not.

Hampton Court Palace

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State f Environment whether he will make a statement c future use of empty apartments at Hampton Court p

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department, with the agre of the keeper of the Privy Purse, proposes to comm consultants to advise on the feasibility of le apartments in Fountain court at Hampton Court pal substantial companies. Twelve apartments are at p vacant and require major refurbishment.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police Unit C11

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the H Department if he will call for a report from Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the e of investigations carried out by the Metropolitan p unit C11 into elected representatives of the people; a he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. In police investigations crime it is immaterial whether or not a person holds el office.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the H Department whether Metropolitan police unit investigations are limited solely to those suspecte involvement in major crime; and if he will list the cr where court proceedings have ensued with which i been involved in investigations since its inception.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The investigations to which branch contributes all concern very serious offences as homicides, sexual assaults, armed robberies, trafficking and arson. It would not be practicable to details of the cases in which prosecutions have res from investigations to which C11 branch has contrib

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the H Department to what factors he attributes the greater for experiments on living animals to test house substances in 1983 over 1982; and if he will ma statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have no information on this p additional to that contained in my reply to the Member's question of 4 February at column 376.

Carr-Gomm Charity

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State fo Home Department how much money his Department given, either directly or indirectly, to the Carr-Go charity in each of the last three years.

Mr. Mellor: Grants totalling £4,525 in 1982 £12,948 in 1983-84 and £21,023 to date in 1984-85 h been paid in respect of beds reserved for ex-offende accommodation which the society provides in Lon East Anglia and Tyneside.

Drugs (Licence Fees)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State fo Home Department why he proposes under the Misus Drugs (Licence Fees) (Amendment) Regulations

(S.I., 1985, No. 138) to raise licence fees to doctors prescribing controlled drugs by 14 per cent.; what was the total income from fees collected under regulation 3(1) of the Misuse of Drugs (Licence Fees) Regulations 1979 in 1983-84; and to what purpose the money so collected is put.

Mr. Mellor: The current regulations would have the effect of increasing the fees for licences to produce, supply and possess controlled drugs for commercial purposes; they do not apply to doctors, who do not require a licence to prescribe controlled drugs (except when prescribing heroin, cocaine or dipipanone to an addict). In the financial year 1983-84 the total revenue from such fees amounted to approximately £203,000. In line with the Government's policy on fees, this revenue offsets the costs associated with operating the licensing system.

Cornwall (Electoral Districts)

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to confirm the electoral districts relevant to the Cornwall county council elections.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend made an order implementing the Local Government Boundary Commission for England's final proposals for new electoral arrangements for the county of Cornwall, with modifications, on 25 February 1985. The order will come into full operation at this year's county council elections in May.

Siren Warning (Lancashire)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the circumstances regarding the sounding of the four minute warning siren in north east Lancashire on Thursday 28 February.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The sirens were sounded because of a fault in the testing procedure during the installation of new equipment. The fault is now being remedied.

Sex Offenders (Treatment)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what treatments, psychological and physiological, are currently being administered to (a) people serving prison sentences for sex offences and (b) people convicted of sex offences who are currently on probation conditional upon receiving some form of medical or psychiatric treatment; and if any of these treatments is administered specifically to secure an early release from prison or as an alternative to a prison sentence;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government issued any guidelines on accepting requests from, or on behalf of, people convicted of sex offences for medical treatment to be administered instead of a prison sentence;

(3) what procedure exists to ensure that proper consent is obtained from prisoners, or people convicted of sex offences awaiting sentence, to medical treatment aimed as an alternative to prison custody;

(4) how many people convicted of sex offences are currently on probation conditional upon their receiving some form of medical or psychological therapy.

Mr. Mellor: I will reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any members of the Home Office research unit have been involved, within the last three years, in the development of therapies such as behavioural therapy aimed at treating sex offenders.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Charities

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications the Charity Commissioners have received in each of the last five years for registration under the Charities Act 1960.

Mr. Mellor: I am informed by the Charity Commissioners that during the years 1980-84 the following number of applications for registration under the Charities Act 1960 were received:

	Number
1980	3,977
1981	3,548
1982	3,700
1983	3,701
1984	3,939

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charities have been deregistered by the Charity Commissioners in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of charities removed from the register of charities held by the Charity Commissioners is published in the annual report of the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales each year. They were as follows:

	Number
1980	210
1981	254
1982	196
1983	190
*1984	126

* Not yet published.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the real exchange rate, measured in terms of export prices, for the main manufacturing countries listed in table F2 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" in (i) the fourth quarter of 1976, (ii) the first quarter of 1979 and (iii) the latest quarter in each case for which figures are available, together with the increase in the real value of sterling against each currency from the fourth quarter of 1976 to the latest available date.

Mr. Fletcher: The information is in the table.

Information Technology

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number of British companies and universities currently being represented in information technology programmes being arranged by the European Community.

Mr. Butcher: The main information technology programme organised by the Community involving companies and universities is the European strategic programme for research and development in information technology (Esprit). The Community is also responsible for the regulation on Community actions in the field of microelectronic technology, and the multiannual data processing programme. Excluding the latter for which contracts have not yet been let, 31 United Kingdom companies, 19 academic institutions and seven other organisations (such as research associations) are currently participating in these programmes.

Alvey Programme

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the production sectors that have chiefly benefited from the information technology Alvey programme and the level of controlled television cameras and digital telephone exchanges developed for Malawi.

Mr. Butcher: The Alvey programme is designed to promote long-term strategic research into key enabling information technologies rather than for specific production sectors. While much of the work will be of relevance for manufacturing industry, the microelectronics and computer sectors are those most directly affected.

As part of its contribution to world communications year in 1983 the United Kingdom Government arranged for the supply, installation and maintenance of three rural digital exchanges to the Malawi Department of Posts and Telecommunications. This Department is not aware of any United Kingdom involvement in the development or supply of controlled television cameras to Malawi.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications were submitted to his Department in 1984 for grants from the Alvey programme; and what proportion of such applications were turned down.

Mr. Butcher: Since applications started being r in September 1983 the Alvey directorate has recei formal applications for support, 126 of which ha turned down to date.

Companies Act 1980 (Prosecutions)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State fo and Industry how many successful prosecutions the been under section 75 of the Companies Act 198 is satisfied with the workings of the Companies A in practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: There have been no prosecution section 75 of the Companies Act 1980. The work United Kingdom company law are kept under revi we are always willing to consider constructive sugg for improvement.

Manufacturing Trade Figures

Mr. John Evans asked the Secretary of State fo and Industry, pursuant to the answer to the hon. M for St. Helens, North on 21 February, Official R column 564, what were the levels of manufa exports for each year from 1973 to the present tim if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom Exports of Manufactures

1973	9·9	83·(
1974	13·4	88·4

Inmos

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for and Industry what discussions he has had with the U

States Government over their claim that Inmos needs United States approval in the form of a licence to re-ship its own technology from the United Kingdom to other destinations.

Mr. Fletcher: Our objections to the extraterritorial application of US export controls are well known to the US Administration. But I am not aware that Inmos are experiencing particular difficulties from this cause.

British Tourist Authority

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the value in real terms of the total funds available to the British Tourist Authority as compared to the funds available to it in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following table shows the sums provided for the financial years 1980-81 to 1983-84 inclusive deflated to constant 1980 prices using the implied UK market price GDP deflator. Figures for 1984-85 on a comparable basis are not yet available.

Year	Amount £'000
1980-81	14,230
1981-82	14,690
1982-83	15,375
1983-84	13,670

These figures do not fully reflect the changes in the real level of purchasing power of the BTA overseas since they do not take account of rates of inflation in different countries or fluctuations in exchange rates between sterling and relevant foreign currencies, or changes in the level of the BTA's income derived from trade sources.

Grant-in-aid provision for 1985-86 for the British Tourist Authority will be contained in the Supply Estimates to be published later this month.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he has reduced the funds available to the British Tourist Authority in real terms; and what services he expects they will have to delete from their operations to take account of this situation.

Mr. Butcher: The BTA's grant-in-aid was cut in 1983-84 to take account of the planned reduction in the BTA's activities as announced by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 16 March 1983 at column 39 in reply to a written parliamentary question. Since then the level of BTA's grant-in-aid has in cash terms broadly been maintained. Within the overriding need to control the level of public expenditure, the Government have maintained their commitment to the tourist industry and welcome the continued growth in this important sector of the economy.

Quality Assurance Campaign

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what extent he has promoted overseas the quality assurance campaign; and what has been its extent.

Mr. Butcher: In its initial stages the national quality campaign has concentrated on increasing United Kingdom industry's awareness and use of sound quality management methods. This work has recently been extended to include activity aimed at inducing greater employee involvement in the pursuit of quality competitiveness. The programme as a whole is currently intended exclusively for United Kingdom consumption and no specific overseas promotional efforts are envisaged in the immediate future. However, the Department of Trade and Industry's register of quality assessed United Kingdom companies already offers home and overseas markets the growing evidence of United Kingdom quality capability.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated annual cost per person in the working population living in the designated areas of providing regional assistance at current levels;

(2) if he has made any representations to the European Community asking for some flexibility with the 35 per cent. figure which is the announced European limit to the proportion of the population that can live in designated areas;

(3) if he knows the proportion of the population of each member country of the European Community which lives in designated areas; and if any of them exceeds the 35 per cent. maximum figure permitted;

(4) what is the exact percentage of the working population living in areas that are designated as assisted areas.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

COCOM Agreement

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if there has been any further delay in bringing into operation the Export of Goods (Control) Order enacting the COCOM agreement of 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade has nothing to add to the answer he gave the hon. Gentleman on 8 February at columm 743.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to answer the letter on the COCOM agreement sent to him by the hon. Member for Yeovil, dated 22 January.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade expects to reply to the Member very shortly.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account he takes, in formulating his policy on the renewal of the general agreement on tariffs and trade multi-fibre arrangement, due to expire in 1986, of the level of employment in the United Kingdom in the textile and clothing industries and of its regional distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: In formulating our policy in what regime should succeed the current multi-fibre arrangement, the Government will take full account of the level of and trends in employment in the textile and clothing industries, bearing in mind the likely causes of such trends. The possible effects on the regional distribution of employment of a particular import policy regime will also be taken into account.

EC Research Subsidy (Leather)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take up with the European Commission the subsidy provided to research in leather in Italy by a levy on imports.

Mr. Fletcher: My understanding is that a levy is imposed both on domestic production and on imports. If the hon. Member has any particular problem in mind and sends me details, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade would be happy to consider the matter further.

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been (a) the level of exports and (b) the balance of trade in pharmaceutical products in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Fletcher: The information is as follows:

Value £ million

	United Kingdom exports (fob)	Crude balance
1980	745	+522
1981	852	+554
1982	978	+603

False and Misleading Price Information (Review)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations have been conducted on the inter-departmental working party's review of legislation on false and misleading price information; what action he now intends to take; and if he will consider extending the review to cover consumer price indications for real property, including new houses.

Mr. Fletcher [pursuant to the reply, 25 January 1985, c. 541-2]: As indicated in my announcement on 3 May 1984 at columns 205-6, consultation took place on the recommendations in the working party's report and on his comments on some of those recommendations. The responses from a wide cross-section of trade and consumer interests showed general agreement on the need for improved legislation in this area with a view both to removing the complexities of the existing law and to controlling more effectively certain practices which are widely held to be potentially misleading.

A strong majority of those responses were in favour of the central recommendation of the Report that the existing legislation should be replaced by a general prohibition on false and misleading price information with the necessary supporting detail being provided by a statutory code of practice. A clear majority view also emerged in favour of each of the other provisional proposals on which my statement of 3 May 1984 had invited views.

The Government will introduce legislation which closely follows the majority view emerging from these consultations as soon as parliamentary time is available.

The basic provision of the Bill will be a prohibition on false and misleading price inf Provided that a sufficiently clear and precise practice can be established (and discussions on representatives of interested parties will now b my Department) most of the necessary support will be in this form rather than in the legislation i Bill will therefore include powers for the Secretar to draw up a statutory code of practice (adm evidence, but not in itself mandatory) with the the Director General of Fair Trading and in co with representatives of interested parties; and power to make regulations by order.

The Bill will also provide that any such Cod laid before Parliament and be subject to resolution before coming into operation. On points on which the consultation invited comm Bill will provide for enforcement of the legis continue to be by trading standards offic (prosecution in Scotland remaining in the han procurators fiscal); for a single defence of having reasonable precautions and exercised all due though without prejudice to the availability general defences under the criminal law; for the trial on indictment (in England and Wales) to and for the coverage to be wider than the legislation.

One important aspect of this proposed wider is that the new framework will extend to the d bureaux de change of commission charges and buying and selling rates, an area where some have evoked criticism from many overseas visit

Renewable Energy (Research and Develop

Mr. Tony Speller asked the Secretary of Energy what consequences he expects to flow proposed 40 per cent. cut in funding on the r energy research design and development progra

Mr. David Hunt: There is no such propo Department has no plans at present for any specifi in funding for the renewable energy resea development programme, but I will consider car recommendations made by ACORD after its for review of renewables.

Torus Consortium

Mrs. Short asked the Secretary of State fo which European Governments are represented in European Torus consortium.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Governments r ted in the joint European Torus undertaking are

Belgium	Italy
Denmark	Luxembourg
France	The Netherlands
Germany	Sweden
Greece	Switzerland
Ireland	United Kingdom

Coal (Pithead Price)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest average pithead price of coal produced in the United Kingdom; how this compares with the price of coal imported into the British market from the United Kingdom's principal competitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Current average pithead list prices are as follows:

	£ per tonne
Bituminous house coal	59
Industrial coals	35-71
Power station coal	43

No price comparisons are available for imported power station coal, since there have been no imports during the strike. It appears that prices for imported domestic and industrial coals in recent months have in some cases been well above those of United Kingdom supplies, partly due to the strength of the US dollar. The present exchange rate, if it were to persist, would give United Kingdom coal a new competitive edge, provided always that the industry could satisfy its customers as to security of supply.

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the division in responsibility between his Department and British Nuclear Fuels plc with regard to the storage, export and accounting of plutonium.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 February 1985 at column 353 and the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office at column 359. The Department is consulted by the Department of Trade and Industry on the issue of licences for BNFL's exports of nuclear materials.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington of 18 February, Official Report, column 725, if he will list the names of the leaders of the insulation industry, and the companies to which they belong, who have expressed their considerable gratitude and enthusiasm for all that his Department is doing in the field of energy efficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I and my Department are in regular contact with the Buildings Energy Efficiency Confederation and many other trade associations and individual companies within the insulation industry, which have expressed their enthusiasm for my energy efficiency initiatives. It would not be appropriate to name individuals or companies.

EMPLOYMENT

Catering Industry

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Employment what number and percentage of staff in the catering industry who were found by the Wages Inspectorate to have been underpaid have subsequently received their entitlement; and how much money was involved.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1983, the pay of 81,615 workers covered by the three wages councils for the hotel and catering trade was checked; 8,630 or 10·6 per cent. were found to have been underpaid, and 6,905 or 80 per cent. received arrears of pay amounting to £831,018.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the additional employees who gained employment over the last 12 months were male full-time, male part-time, female full-time and female part-time, respectively; how many of these jobs were taken by people who had previously claimed benefit; and by how many the population of working age increased in the past 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is estimated that between September 1983 and September 1984 the numbers of full-time female and part-time female employees in employment in Great Britain increased by 15,000 and 174,000 respectively, while the number of male employees in employment decreased by 86,000. Separate estimates are not available for full-time and part-time male employees. Over the same period the numbers of full-time females, part-time females, and males in the employed labour force (which additionally includes the self employed and Her Majesty's forces) are estimated to have increased by 54,000, 207,000 and 81,000 respectively.

The Department's statistics do not show the destinations of people who cease claiming unemployment benefit. Between June 1983 and June 1984 it is estimated that the population of working age in Great Britain rose by about 200,000.

Construction Industry (Death and Injuries)

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of deaths, (b) the number of serious injuries and (c) the number of those employed in the construction industry for the years 1979 to 1984, inclusive.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information for incidents reported to the Health and Safety Executive for 1979-83 is as follows. Information for 1984 is not yet available.

Construction industry: Great Britain—1979-83

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983*
Deaths to employees	128	134	106	100	118

* Provisional.

† Before 1981, deaths to non-employees were reported on a voluntary basis only and are therefore not directly comparable with figures for 1981 to 1983 which are based on reports resulting from a specific requirement under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (NADOR) 1980.

‡ Numbers of major injuries as defined in NADOR were not collected before 1981.

Average Wage

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the average wages paid to (a) manual workers and (b) non-manual workers in (i) Scotland and (ii) England and Wales in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information on the average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees working a full week, distinguishing males and females, and manual and non-manual employees, in Scotland and in England and Wales are published in tables 108, 109, 111 and 112 of part E of the annual reports on the new earnings survey between 1979 and 1984, copies of which are in the Library.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the average rate of unemployment in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each of the last six years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of unemployment rate for unemployed claimants in Scotland and the United Kingdom are available in the House of Commons Library. Comparisons are affected by the 1983 Budget provisions which enable some men, mainly aged 60 an receive the long-term rate of supplementary national insurance credits without having to si unemployment benefit office.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of Employment if he will list the numbers in the age categories: (a) 16 to 18-year-olds, (b) 18 olds, (c) 25 to 50-year-olds and (d) those over age who were (i) registered as unemployed an Government training scheme in (1) Scotland United Kingdom at the latest available date equivalent date in each of the last six years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon as soon as possible.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of Employment if he will list the number of unem each of the member countries of the Organi Economic Co-operation and Development at available date and on the equivalent dates in e last six years; and if he will also express these percentage rates of unemployment for the concerned.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the information. The unemployment figures are comparable owing to national differences in co definitions.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the average rate of unemployment in each of the member countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in each of the last six years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the information. The unemployment figures on definitions are not fully comparable owing to di in coverage. The OECD standardised rates take ac these differences as far as possible.

Pesticides

Mr Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to ensure the withdrawal of organochlorine pesticides for the use of timber treatment in roof spaces and other building timbers and to encourage the use of alternatives.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to withdraw the use of all organochlorine pesticides for treatment of timber in roof spaces or other building timbers but the use of such substances which are persistent has been severely restricted. Those in use the United Kingdom have received clearance under the pesticides safety precautions scheme which sets out precautions necessary to ensure safe use. The Government's policy has always been to encourage the industry to use less hazardous alternatives as they become available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to improve the monitoring of pesticide incidents affecting the public.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Every incident involving pesticides brought to the attention of HM Agricultural Inspectorate by a member of the public is given most careful consideration and investigated in depth whenever possible. All reported accidents are investigated. Enforcement action may follow the investigation of an incident or accident.

Whenever appropriate, investigations are carried out in conjunction with the employment medical advisory service.

Details of incidents are reported to the agricultural poisons appraisal panel, amongst whose functions is the medical evaluation of the incident.

The Health and Safety Executive and the Health and Safety Commission's agriculture industry advisory committee are well aware of public concern about the use of pesticides and the use of all chemicals on farms is currently the subject of special consideration by a working group 'Chemicals in Agriculture'.

The Agricultural Inspectorate will be featuring the safe use of pesticides as part of a campaign 'Your Health' which began last week and which will be seen by the public at major agricultural shows during the year.

Trends in pesticide use are kept under constant review.

Wages Councils

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report for the latest available date, the wages set by each of the wages councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Wages councils determine minimum pay rates and other conditions of service for many different categories of workers and for a variety of circumstances. For this reason, it is not practicable to publish the statutory minimum rates which are set out in full in the orders made by the councils. Copies of the wages orders are available in the Library.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in circumstances where Manpower Services Commission staff report to area manpower boards that a youth training scheme trainee has suffered an accident, there are standing instructions as to the form in which such information may be given, and, in particular, whether the information may be given orally or in writing.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1985, c. 18-19]: Local staff of the Manpower Services Commission are instructed to give only information to area manpower boards about individual accidents on the youth training scheme. Identifying details which might prejudice any subsequent legal proceedings are not normally disclosed.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Manpower Services Commission's memorandum 511/3, supplement 4, which gives information on accidents to area manpower boards.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 129]: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) on 28 February 1985 at column 226.

THE ARTS

National Theatre

28. Mr. Dubs asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will make a statement on the future of the National theatre.

Mr. Waldegrave: My noble Friend believes that the very substantial grant made available by the Arts Council to the National theatre, supplemented by box-office receipts and sponsorship, will enable it to continue its important and successful contribution to theatre.

South Bank Board

29. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he will make a statement on the setting up and membership of the South Bank Board.

Mr. Waldegrave: The establishment of a board of management is dependent on the progress of the Local Government Bill. The Arts Council is not presently empowered by its Royal Charter to establish such a board. Appropriate amendments to the charter will first have to be approved.

Heritage Provision

30. Sir David Price asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts why the provision for the heritage in "The Government's Expenditure Plans" (Cmnd. 9428-II) has been set at £2 million for 1985-86; and why there is no capital provision.

Mr. Waldegrave: The heritage provision for 1985-86 is £3 million to the National heritage memorial fund and £2 million for acceptances in lieu of tax. The annual allocation of funds must depend on what can be afforded, but as the House will know, an extra £25 million is to be made available this year to the National Heritage memorial fund to meet special needs.

Arts Sponsorship

31. Mr. Freud asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts, if he will estimate the revenue that will accrue to the arts from sponsorship in the year 1985-86.

Mr. Waldegrave: Business sponsorship of the arts has risen from £500,000 in 1976 to £15 million in 1984. I expect this increase to continue, but it is not possible to estimate future figures for any given year.

West Midlands Regional Arts Association

32. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what increment will be allocated to the West Midlands Regional Arts Association for the 1985-86 financial year; to what extent this takes into account the previous financial year's rate of inflation; and what consideration was given to the requirements of the five regionally-based symphony orchestras before his decision was taken.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Arts Council's grant to west midlands arts for 1985-86 will be in two parts a basic grant of £1·145 million which provides a 3·1 per cent. increase over the current year's allocation to take account of inflation, and an additional sum, to be announced at the end of March, as a share of the £3 million available for the council's development strategy. The needs of the regionally-based symphony orchestras have been considered separately from the grants to regional arts associations.

Grant Allocations

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what representations he has received from Northern, Greater London and West Midlands arts about their grant allocations for the 1985-86 financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Korea

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the possibility of the reunification of South Korea and North Korea based on the concept of confederation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Our view is that the reunification of the Korean peninsula is primarily a matter for the Koreans to pursue through direct contacts between the two sides. The meetings last November marked a welcome step in contacts between north and south. It is regrettable that this process has received a setback as a result of the recent North Korean insistence on postponement.

Diplomatic Posts

Mrs. Renée Short: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he sought with representatives of British export companies prior to his recent announcement of the closure of some overseas diplomatic posts; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for this decision.

Mr. Renton: We had the interests of British exporters very much in mind when considering the lists of posts to be closed. The views of the DTI were sought before final decisions were taken. Both they and our officials are in close touch with industry and its representative bodies on the importance of our commercial services in different parts of the world.

The reasons for the closures were given in my right hon. and learned Friend's statement to the House on 22 November 1984 at columns 623-31.

UN Decade for Women

Mr. Forth: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the composition of the British delegation to the United Nations end of Decade for Women conference; how large a delegation he intends to appoint; and what estimate he has made for expenditure planning purposes of the likely cost of sending the delegation.

Mr. Renton: We hope to announce the composition of the delegation shortly. The size of the delegation is likely to be similar to that of our delegations to the two previous conferences of the United Nations Decade for Women, though there may be some reduction in the number of supporting officials.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has allocated just over £15,000 for the cost of sending those members of the delegation for which it is responsible.

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation

Mr. Deakins: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is North Atlantic Treaty Organisation policy to criticise all countries that disregard their obligations not to threaten or to use force on those who violate the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of other countries.

Mr. Luce: The North Atlantic allies condemn the threat or use of force in violation of obligations under the United Nations Charter and the Helsinki final act. In their communiqué of 14 December 1984, NATO Foreign Ministers declared that it was unacceptable that the Soviet Union

"continues to violate the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Afghanistan" in disregard of these obligations.

Mr. Deakins: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any North Atlantic Treaty Organisation communiqué has criticised United States policy in Nicaragua or elsewhere in the Third world.

Mr. Luce: No.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what have been the figures for crime committed in the Falkland Islands in respect of offences of violence, drug taking and illegal immigration in the most recently available annual period; and if he will make a statement on the trend in these figures.

Mr. Renton: In the last 12 months there have been 14 convictions on charges of violence and four on drugs offences. We are not aware of any prosecutions under the immigration ordinance. Levels of crime remain low, viewed in relation to the presence in the Islands of over 2,000 unaccompanied construction personnel.

El Salvador

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to provide military training for Salvadorean officers in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) on 15 February at column 302.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's intention to send official observers to the forthcoming constituent assembly elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Renton: We are carefully considering the possibility of appointing official observers.

British Embassy School, Bonn

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the future of the British embassy school in Bonn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The British embassy school in Bonn is not the direct responsibility of Her Majesty's Government. The general management of the school is vested in a school committee, of which the chairman is appointed by HM ambassador. I am told that the committee is at present changing its constitution to that of a registered association (Eingetragene Verein) under Federal German law.

TRANSPORT

Drink-drive Campaign (Cost)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost to his Department of carrying out the stay low drink-drive campaign for Christmas 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: The cost of this campaign, including research, production and media cost, was £1·22 million.

A40

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is planning the closure of the carriageway crossings of the A40 between Wheatley and Oxford.

Mrs. Chalker: We are planning the closure of the gap at the junction of the A40 with the B4027 road to Islip, in order to improve safety and traffic flow. Draft orders, which will be open to objection in the usual way, will be published later this year. The situation at the Forest hill turn is under consideration. When traffic signals are operating for the Park and Ride entry at Risinghurst, it is proposed to ban right turns for eastbound traffic on the A40 at the gap opposite Neilson's offices. These manoeuvres will then take place at the traffic signals a short distance to the east.

Civil Aviation Policy

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has received from British Airways, following the publication of his recent White Paper on "Civil Aviation Policy", concerning their proposals to help independent airlines by means of route development subsidies at regional airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department is discussing with the Civil Aviation Authority and British Airways how services which merit support might be selected. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish phase I of the feasibility study for a second crossing of the Severn.

Mrs. Chalker: I wrote to the hon. Member about this on 11 February. As I told him, we are presently considering this detailed and complex report very carefully and will publish it just as soon as we can.

Lost Vessels (Inquiries)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all United Kingdom registered vessels lost at sea in unexplained circumstances in the last five years; what inquiries were set up into their disappearance; and what was the result of the inquiry in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell: I will answer this question shortly.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the circumstances in which the fishing vessel 'Mhairi L' was lost; whether any other vessel was involved; what are the terms of reference to his Department's inquiry into the loss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department has appointed a principal marine surveyor under section 728 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 to investigate the circumstances attending the loss of the Fishing Vessel Mhairi L. There is no evidence at the moment to suggest any other vessel was involved. I wish to express my deepest sympathy to the families and relatives of those who lost their lives in the tragic loss of this vessel.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the largest section of motorway currently in use without a service area; and when he expects a service area to be provided to serve this section.

Mrs. Chalker: There is at present no service area on the 90 miles of motorway between the northern end of M11 and the M20 at Maidstone, via M25. We intend to have one service area at Birchanger on M11, to be operational by about early 1987, and another at Thurrock on M25, to be open a little later. Proposals are also being developed for service areas on the M20.

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects motorway service areas to be in operation on the M11, M18, M20, M23, M25, M40, M50. M54 and M180 motorways, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My present programme is for the development of up to 14 new motorway service areas in England. A new service area at Ferrybridge at the junction of M62 and A1 will open in early April. Four service areas are planned for M25. I hope to see the one at South Mimms opened by the time the motorway is completed, with the other three following as quickly as possible. I intend also to complete the provision of services on the major feeder motorways to M25. I hope to see Birchanger on M11 opened by about early 1987. Proposals are also being developed for a site on the M4 near Reading; for up to three sites on M20; and for three sites on M40. It is not yet possible to predict when these sites will open.

In addition, I intend to up-grade the Brent Knoll rest area on M5 to a full motorway service area by about late 1986.

Apart from Ferrybridge, the development and opening of all these service areas depends on the completion of all necessary planning and compulsory acquisition procedures, as well as engineering and construction works. I have no proposals at present for motorway service areas on M18, M23, M50, M54 and M180.

Gatwick (Signposting)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make steps to secure the signposting of Gatwick airport on main roads leading to it from Kent and the central London area.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her reply, of 1 March 1985, c. 310]: Gatwick airport was added to the list of approved destinations on primary routes in 1982. It is also one of the key destinations for signs on the M25. Additional signs to the airport will be provided at the M20-M26 junction this summer and on the A21 (Sevenoaks bypass) to the south of the A25, as part of the signing associated with the M25 Swanley-Sevenoaks link currently under construction.

Signing on non-trunk roads both in Kent and Greater London is a matter for the local highway authorities.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Soil Survey

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the functions of the Soil Survey of England and Wales include the survey of minerals below the subsoil.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the Agricultural and Food Research Council that the soil survey makes observations to 1·25 metres depth. Occasionally the survey samples the soil and describes it to a greater depth in order to determine the nature of its parent material. In some districts, studies of this kind have contributed substantially to our knowledge of sand and gravel resources.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a map showing the most up-to-date state of the national soil survey, together with the relevant statistical data.

Mr. Brooke: The Agricultural and Food Research Council is arranging for such a map to be placed in the Library. The statistical data are voluminous and it would be helpful if my hon. Friend could indicate his requirements in that area more precisely.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Soil Survey of England and Wales was set up; and what are its precise objectives.

Mr. Brooke: The soil survey of England and Wales was established in 1939, though it did not operate during World War 2 and eventually began operations in 1946. Its headquarters is at the Rothamstead experimental station, Hertfordshire, which is a state-aided agricultural research institute supported by the AFRC.

The overall aim of the survey is to evaluate the soil resources of England and Wales and to contribute to their efficient and careful use. More specifically the objectives are to:

—Assemble information about soil types, their distribution and variability throughout the landscape;
— Organise the information in terms of a national classification system;
—Produce maps to show the spatial distribution of soil types;
—Liaise with users in the interpretation of information for specific purposes;
—Develop a soil information system.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost of the Soil Survey of England and Wales.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that, on the basis of full economic cost which is the Agricultural and Food Research Council's normal method of assessing the cost of commissioned research work, the current annual cost of the survey is £1·7 million.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what areas have so far been reconnaissance-surveyed by the Soil Survey of England and Wales; and at what cost;

(2) what areas have so far been surveyed in detail by the Soil Survey of England and Wales; and at what cost.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that the whole of England and Wales has been surveyed at a reconnaissance level (1 : 250,000); this part of the work began in 1978 and took five years at a total cost of about £6·5 million. About 20 per cent. of the country has been surveyed in detail (1 : 25,000 to 1 : 63,360) at a cost of about £5·5 million over the last 12 years.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many people are currently employed on the Soil Survey of England and Wales.

Mr. Brooke: Sixty-nine.

Teachers (Pupil Contact Hours)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the average number of pupil contact hours per week by teachers in 1969, 1974, 1979 and 1984 in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The average number of pupil contact hours per week by teachers in maintained primary schools in England in 1979 and 1984 are estimated to have 693 and 665 respectively. The correspondingly information for teachers in maintained secondary schools was 491 and 473. Comparable information for 1969 and 1974 is not available.

Bursaries

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of BSc undergraduate and MSc postgraduate university courses have had a reduction in bursaries provided by the Medical Research Council in the last two years.

Mr. Brooke: The main source of support for undergraduate students in the science, as in other disciplines, is mandatory awards administered by local education authorities. However, the Medical Research Council (MRC) makes available a limited number of intercalated awards to medical and dental schools, to enable certain students to take an honours science degree. The allocation of intercalated awards to individual courses and students is a matter for the school concerned. In each of the academic years 1983-84 and 1984-84 the MRC provided 380 such awards.

In 1983-84 the council awarded 105 advanced course postgraduate studentships among 52 MSc courses. In 1984-85 the same number of studentships was distributed among 53 courses.

European Organisation for Nuclear Research

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the French Government about United Kingdom membership of the European Organisation for Nuclear Research in Geneva and the salaries of British research staff there.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the cost-of-living bonuses which have been given to British researchers participating in the European Organisation for Nuclear Research.

Mr. Brooke: British members of the staff of the European Organisation for Nuclear Research (CERN) receive the same annual adjustments to their salaries as all CERN staff members of whatever nationality. The adjustments are decided by the Council of CERN, taking into account an annual index which is determined by increases in the cost of living in Geneva and any real net increases in local and central government salaries in Switzerland. In the last four years, these adjustments have been as follows:

Year	Index	Increase actually awarded
	per cent.	per cent.
1982	5·42	4·97
1983	4·81	3·50
1984	3·79	3·00
1985	4·39	4·39

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources he will make available to the Science and Engineering Research Council to enable it to participate in the European synchrotron radiation source.

Mr. Brooke: Synchrotron radiation complements neutron beams as ways of facilitating research in condensed matter. Both techniques require large and expensive facilities. The proposed European synchrotron radiation facility (ESRF) is one of a number of existing or proposed international, or potentially international, facilities which might contribute to such research. An agreement between European countries on the shared use and funding of all such facilities is desirable; discussions to that end have been held, and continue.

Meanwhile it is not necessarily the case that participation in the ESRF would of itself require significant additional resources; for instance, United Kingdom participation in the ESRF might be achieved at little or no additional cost the United Kingdom if other European countries agreed to participate in the SERC's spallation neutron source. if the ESRF did require additional resources, it would be for the SERC, and beyond that for my right hon. Friend advised by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, to decide what priority to give it in relation to other calls on, respectively, SERC's grant-in-aid and the science budget as a whole.

Burnham Committee

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of members of the Burnham committee are representatives of his Department.

Sir Keith Joseph: In addition to the independent chairman, the Burnham Primary and Secondary Committee has 59 members (32 on the teachers' panel and 27 on the management panel) and the Burnham Further Education Committee has 34 members (17 each on the teachers' and management panels). I have two representatives on the management panel of each committee.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he takes in determining the appropriate weighting of the representation of the teachers' unions on the Burnham committee, to satisfy himself as to the accuracy of their membership figures; whether for this purpose he takes account of the extent to which the total membership figure of a union may include persons who are either students or retired; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have not myself been involved in a review of the membership of the Burnham Primary and Secondary Committee. During the review conducted by my predecessor in 1979-81, the teacher associations were asked to submit membership figures for 31 December 1979 on a common basis, showing the number of fully paid-up members employed by LEAs in England and Wales for the provision of primary or secondary education. This allowed account to be taken of students and retired teachers in membership. I explained my position on reviewing Burnham membership on 19 February, at column 847.

Education Costs

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in descending order the cost per pupil per annum for each local education authority of (a) primary education, (b) secondary education, (c) sixth form education and (d) higher education.

Mr. Dunn: The net cost per primary and secondary school pupil in each local education authority is given in the following table. There is no separate information on the costs of sixth form education. Expenditure on higher education cannot meaningfully be attributed to individual local education authorities on a per student basis.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give the number of schools wishing to participate in the assisted places scheme for which he has relaxed the requirement concerning the percentage of aided pupils entering the scheme who formerly attended maintained schools.

Mr. Dunn: Schools entering the scheme are expected to comply with the conditions relating to the proportion of assisted pupils from publicly-maintained schools. Any subsequent difficulties are considered as they arise.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research has been carried out by his Department into the effects on comprehensive school sixth-forms of the operation of the assisted places scheme at schools in their locality; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has monitored the numbers of pupils transferring to assisted sixth form places from publicly-maintained schools. The numbers involved are negligible for individual maintained schools and cannot be considered a threat to their sixth forms.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the educational background of pupils currently receiving education under the assisted places scheme, specifying what evidence is available to his Department on the type of school attended prior to taking up the assisted place.

Mr. Dunn: At the time of their selection, 69 per cent. of assisted pupils were attending publicly-maintained schools, and had done so for at least two years.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the percentage of school income currently represented by money received under the assisted places scheme to schools participating in this scheme.

Mr. Dunn: At a typical participating school, I would estimate that payments in respect of remitted fees for assisted pupils represent about 11 per cent. of its fee income.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department concerning the occupation of parents of pupils currently educated under the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence is collected by his Department to enable it to assess the success of the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The success of the scheme lies in the manifest widening of opportunities available to bright children from low-income families.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average annual cost to his Department of an assisted places secondary school place; and how this compares with the average annual capitation for a maintained sector secondary school place.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sixth Form and Tertiary Colleges

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of pupils entering sixth form colleges and tertiary colleges from the private sector.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the proposed closures of grammar schools which have been refused by his Department since 1979, in each case stating the local education authority and year of decision.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many grammar schools have (i) closed and (ii) merged as a result of falling sc rolls in areas which have retained selection in each since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: Closures of grammar schools in a retaining selection, where the proposals were made sc as a result of falling school rolls, have arisen only w my right hon. Friend or his predecessor appr proposals for amalgamations. Since 1979 the numbe grammar schools which have merged or will amalgar as a result of approved proposals and determination local education authorities is as follows:

Number of grammar schools involved in mergers

Year	Number
1979	Nil
1980	2
1981	2
1982	5
1983	Nil
1984	6

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Educa and Science (1) what study his Department has mad educational attainment in comprehensive school s forms in those areas which retain a selective secon system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has made any study of the impac falling school rolls on educational provision in those a which have retained grammar schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend keeps such mat under regular review. However, it is for local educa authorities, in consultation with the governors voluntary aided and special agreement schools, to t a view of the form and pattern of secondary educa best suited to local circumstances and the preference parents.

School Meals

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State Education and Science what information he has as to number of schools privatising school meals in each of education authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that in Merton and Ealing school meals are supplied by private contractors; tha Hereford and Worcester all school meals are supplied private contractors or self-help groups and Lincolnshire and Dorset have put part of their school me provision in the hands of self-help groups. A number other LEAs are known to be considering privatisati Information as to the number of schools involved is collected centrally. Information for Wales is responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary State for Wales.

Teachers (Pay Dispute)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State Education and Science how many schools were closed the last week of February due to industrial action by National Union of Teachers or the National Association Schoolmasters and the Union of Women Teachers; how many schoolchildren were in the schools affected

Sir Keith Joseph: The 27,000 primary and secondary schools maintained by 104 local education authorities in England and Wales cater for about 8·3 million pupils and employ about 420,000 full-time teachers. Comprehensive information about the extent and effects of recent industrial action in these schools is not available centrally. The National Union of Teachers called on members in 212 schools with a total of some 147,000 pupils to strike on 26, 27 and 28 February. Reports to the Department from local education authorities indicate that by no means all of these schools had to close altogether.

It is estimated that about 600 schools in England were closed for part or in a few cases the whole of 26 February, the day on which the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers called a national half-day strike. In addition the education of many thousands of children has been disrupted in other schools as a result of action short of strikes called by the National Union of Teachers. The Government deplore the fact that children's education is being disrupted in this way.

Student Grant

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the student maintenance grant for 1985-86; and when he expects to announce the figure.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend has received some 11,000 representations since he announced the proposed changes in student grants for 1985-86 last November. The Government have announced that the main rates of grant will be increased by around 3 per cent. in 1985-86. Details of those rates will be issued as soon as practicable.

Pupils (Cost)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list average expenditure per pupil for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 179]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I have given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow).

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list average teachers' salaries for Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 179]: Up to date information is not available. The following average salaries for public sector school teachers and college and university lecturers have been derived from various UNESCO and European Community publications:

*£000s

	1979	1980
Belgium	11·9	N/A
Canada	†11·9	N/A
Denmark	7·0	N/A
France	7·7	10·9
West Germany	12·5	14·3

NORTHERN IRELAND

Transport Costs (Study)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost to public funds of the research study of transport costs in peripheral regions commissioned by the Department of Economic Development and others; how he assesses the value of the research and report to Northern Ireland; and what measures will follow to redress the disadvantage to the economy of the province of transport costs higher than elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Boyson: The overall cost of the study was £50,000 with £12,500 each being contributed by the Department of Economic Development and the Industry Department for Scotland and £25,000 by the European Commission.

The research and the report are helpful in providing an analysis of the transport costs incurred by firms in Northern Ireland and comparing these with the equivalent costs for certain other regions of the United Kingdom. The study has been valuable in helping to resolve some of the uncertainties and misconceptions which surround this issue, and it is worth noting that the report has concluded that measurable transport costs are on average not significantly higher in Northern Ireland than in the other regions. The report has, however, drawn attention to other less readily quantifiable factors involved in Northern Ireland's peripheral location.

The report is being studied in detail and it is too early to indicate what lessons may be drawn from the study by Government.

Ice Rink (Castlereagh)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the proposed ice rink by Castlereagh borough council is being considered for either (a) a Government grant or (b) a Government loan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: In view of the limited funds available for sport and recreation provision I do not see any prospect of being able to give any financial assistance.

No application has been received from Castlereagh borough council to borrow from the Government loan fund for this purpose.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the tender, accepted by Castlereagh borough council, for the proposed ice rink requires Government approval.

Mr. Chris Patten: No.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated final cost of the proposed ice rink complex by Castlereagh borough council; and what is the projected effect on the rates in the borough.

Mr. Chris Patten: These are matters for Castlereagh borough council.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the proposed ice rink by Castlereagh borough council has received final planning permission.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the proposed ice rink by Castlereagh borough council has been given final approval by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 12 February 1985 the Department of the Environment sanctioned Castlereagh borough council to raise a loan to finance the cost of constructing an ice-rink complex. The Department is not involved in giving any other approvals.

Prisoners

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the numbers of male and female prisoners in Northern Ireland prisons at the end of each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Prison Population

Date	Male	Female	Total
31 December
1975	2,648	87	2,735
1976	2,520	65	2,585
1977	2,795	84	2,879
1978	2,733	80	2,813
1979	2,576	76	2,652
1980	2,365	56	2,421
1981	2,394	50	2,444
1982	2,294	54	2,348
1983	2,283	43	2,326
1984	2,003	35	2,038

The figures up to 1979 include borstal trainees; the figures from 1979 onwards include persons detained in young offenders' centres.

Terrorists (Trial Costs)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total cost of the trials of persons charged on the evidence of converted terrorists at the latest date.

Mr. Scott: The information sought is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Wages Council Regulations (Breaches)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employers in Northern Ireland were found by wage inspectors to be paying less than the statutory minimum remuneration or breaking other wages council regulations in each of the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: The information requested is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983
1. Paying less than statutory minimum remuneration	39	33	39	34
2. Breaches of other wages council regulations	321	365	253	445

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of Sta Northern Ireland how many employers who were fo have been in breach of the wages councils regulati each of the last five years were fined; and how many made to pay arrears.

Dr Boyson: No employers were fined. Numbers to pay arrears were as follows:

	number
1980	39
1981	33
1982	39
1983	34
1984	52

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of Sta Northern Ireland which industries in Northern Irela covered by the work of wages councils.

Dr. Boyson: There are 9 wages councils in No Ireland, as follows:

(1) Baking wages council
(2) Boot and shoe repairing wages council
(3) Catering wages council
(4) Clothing manufacturing wages council
(5) Laundry wages council
(6) Linen and cotton handkerchief and household and linen piece goods wages council
(7) Paper box wages council
(8) Road haulage wages council
(9) Sugar confectionery and food preserving council

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of Sta Northern Ireland what is the current statutory mini remuneration laid down by each of the wages counc Northern Ireland for a 40-hour week.

Dr. Boyson: The following table illustrates the cu adult statutory minimum remuneration. In some indu there is a range of statutory minimums in accordance gradings laid down by the relevant wages council. table shows the highest and lowest of these.

Wages council	See foot-note	Highest minimum £	mi
Baking	(a)	96·39

Notes:
(a) Based on a normal working week of 39 hours.
(b) Based on a normal working week of 37½ hours.
(c) Based on a normal working week of 40 hours.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employees and employers come under the scope of each wages council in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: The numbers at 31 December 1984 were:

Wages council	Employers	Employees
Baking	265	550

Road Lighting

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of road lighting lanterns in use on urban roads are fluorescent; and what is their age.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is estimated that 12½ per cent. of the road lighting lanterns in use on urban roads in Northern Ireland are fluorescent. The average age of these fluorescent lanterns is approximately 15 years.

General Needs Housing Association

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tenanted houses of General Needs Housing Association houses have been sold with a discount to sitting tenants in Northern Ireland; and what proportion this is in percentage terms and numbers of the total stock of General Needs Housing Association houses.

Mr. Chris Patten: To date registered housing associations in Northern Ireland have sold at a discount, 128 dwellings providing general family accommodation to sitting tenants. This represents 6 per cent. of the total stock of such dwellings, which now totals 2,024.

WALES

Wrexham Maelor Hospital

13. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the cost of building the new Wrexham Maelor hospital.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The current estimates, inclusive of works, fees and equipment, are £14,596 million for the main hospital building and £2,309 million for the residential accommodation.

Redundancies

14. Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many redundancies have been declared in Wales since 1979; and of these how many manufacturing jobs were lost.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Between May 1979 and December 1980, 89,014 redundancies were notified in Wales, 53,115 being in the manufacturing industry. Between January 1981 and December 1984 the figures, which were collected on a different basis, were 88,406 in Wales, of which 48,919 were in the manufacturing industry.

IDC Ltd.

15. Mr. Abse asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that the settlement of his claim against IDC Ltd., in respect of defective construction work at the Bangor nurses' home, Ysbyty Gwynedd, does not contain any stipulations about confidentiality of any of its terms similar to the settlement made in relation to the University of Wales hospital.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The claim against IDC has been made by the Welsh Health Technical Services Organisation which will not enter any agreement that would preclude reporting the terms of the settlement to Parliament.

South Glamorgan (Land Sale)

16. Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the sale of education committee land in South Glamorgan.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: In addition to letters from my hon. Friend and my hon. Friends the Members for Cardiff, West (Mr. Terlezki) and the Vale of Glamorgan (Sir R. Gower), my right hon. Friend has received 36 letters about the most recent South Glamorgan proposals.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are unemployed in (a) Gwent and (b) Wales compared with 1979 as a total and a percentage; and of the total unemployed how many are long-term unemployed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: On 10 January 1985 there were 29,602 unemployed claimants in Gwent. A comparable claimant-based figure for 1979 is not available. The figure for registered unemployed in January 1979 was 15,968. For Wales as a whole for the same dates, the figures on a claimant-based claculation were 185,529 and 86,416 respectively, an increase of 114·7 per cent. The latest figures for the long-term unemployed relate to January 1985, when 75,697 had been unemployed in Wales for over one year.

Milk Quotas

19. Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusions he has reached concerning proposals to make the transfer of milk quotas more flexible.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, announced in his statement to the House on 28 February measures agreed at the recent Council of Agriculture Ministers to introduce greater flexibility into the quota arrangement. The provision which enables producers to switch between their wholesale and direct sale quotas according to the needs of their businesses will be particularly welcome.

Free School Meals

Mrs. Ann Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of pupils received free school meals in Wales for the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 in the following age groups (a) four to eight years, (b) nine to 12 years and (c) 13 to 16 years and by local education authority.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Information on the receipt of school meals by age of pupil is not available centrally. The total numbers of pupils receiving free meals at nursery, primary, secondary and special schools—on a specific day in the autumn of each year — are published annually in "Statistics of Education in Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

Teacher-Pupil Ratios

Mrs. Ann Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average teacher-pupil ratios for Wales in the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 198 in maintained primary schools and maintained schools by local education authorities.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The inform follows:

At January each year	Pupil-teacher ratios with Primary schools	Sec
1979	22·0
1980	21·9
1981	21·7
1982	21·9

New Schools

Mrs. Ann Clwyd asked the Secretary of Wales how many new schools were built in Wal 1973 to 1979 and 1979 to 1984; how many ar for building in the period 1985 to 1988; and if them in the order they were built, with their lo type, nursery, primary, secondary.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The informa available in the form requested.

From the financial year 1972-73 to 19 numbers of new primary and secondary maintai projects started in Wales were as follows, by authority:

Proposals for school building for future years are a matter for the local authorities concerned.

Boundary Review

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the instances since 1979 when he has overturned the Boundary Commissioners' local community review; which community authorities were involved; what was their political composition; and which of them protested against his decision.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proposals of the Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales arising from the special community reviews of Welsh districts are made jointly to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. We are empowered to accept its proposals, with or without modifications, or reject them. In no case have we rejected them. However, in the 32 decisions that have been announced since 1979 we have made 72 modifications to certain detailed proposals, in 26 districts. Some 140 community councils have been affected. The political composition of community councils is not known to our Departments.

Few community councils have protested against decisions to modify the commission's proposals. A greater number have objected to particular decisions where proposals have been accepted.

Building Land

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will take to increase the supply of land available to house builders in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In September 1984 the Welsh Office issued circular 47/84 "Land for Housing in Wales" reminding local authorities of their responsibility to ensure that there is an adequate supply of land available for housing. County structure plans should show how future housing requirements can best be met and the Welsh Office will be looking to see that this is achieved in the current round of structure plan reviews. The circular also advised local authorities that where the supply of land is found to be inadequate to meet the structure plan provision for housing, authorities should consider what steps to take, including expediting planning applications and allocating additional land through the preparation and adoption of local plans. The Land Authority for Wales with its powers to acquire and dispose of land for development can also play a significant role in making more housing land available.

Planning Appeals

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average amount of time between an appeal to his Department against development control refusal by a local planning authority, or a national park authority, and the determination of that appeal.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The information requested is not available in terms of average times. The standard measure is that of the median. In 1984 the median times taken to decide appeals under sections 36 and 53 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 in Wales were as follows:

	Appeals decided by: Secretary of State	Inspector weeks	weeks
Inquiries	32*	30
Written representations	48†	21

Note: Median times are derived by ranking all cases in order of times taken and by taking the middle case as being representative of all.

General Needs Housing Association

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many tenanted houses of General Needs Housing Association houses in Wales have been sold to sitting tenants with a discount; and what proportion this is in percentage terms and numbers of the total stock of General Needs Housing Association houses.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The total number of dwellings sold by housing associations in Wales to sitting tenants under the Housing Act 1980 was 106 at September 1984; a further 743 sales of co-ownership dwellings had been completed by that date. Detailed information on discounts is not held centrally, but apart from those made by charitable associations all these sales are likely to have attracted discounts. These sales represent 5·3 per cent of Welsh housing association stock of some 16,000 dwellings. No information is available on the proportion of these dwellings which are classified as "General Need".

Public Bodies

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a list of the names of individuals that he has appointed to public bodies in Wales between May 1979 and 31 December 1983, together with individuals appointed to public bodies in Wales which he has (a) made jointly with other Ministers and (b) been consulted about.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

M4 (Design Life)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 89, what is his estimate of the reduction in the design life of the carriageways of the M4 since the transfer of heavy freight from rail to road during the coal industry dispute.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The design life of some parts of these carriageway pavements was already exceeded before the additional traffic arose. It is estimated that the theoretical design life of more recently constructed sections could have been reduced by around 2 per cent. as a result of the transfer.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 89, what is his assessment of the effects on the surface of the M4 east of Newport of the transfer of heavy freight from rail to road during the coal industry dispute; when these sections are to be resurfaced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: It is not possible to isolate the effects on the surface of the M4 of this transfer. Measures are to be taken to strengthen the older sections of the M4 carriageways between junction 22 (Newhouse) and junction 24 (Coldra) which have now exceeded their original design life. It is currently planned to commence these works in May.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers employed in the Welsh textile and clothing industry for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 238]: The numbers employed in the textile, leather and clothing industry (Orders XIII-XV SIC(68)) were as follows:

	Number
December 1979	27,500
December 1980	23,000
September 1981	19,800

Since 1981 textile and clothing workers have been counted as part of other manufacturing industries. The latest quarterly estimates for this group, based on recent revisions to labour force surveys, was as follows:

	Number
December 1981	72,000
December 1982	67,000
December 1983	65,000
September 1984	67,000

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Harvest Intervals

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the extent of non-compliance with recommended harvest intervals in the farming community.

Mrs. Fenner: Pesticide residue levels in foodstuffs are monitored under a programme carried out by the Government's working party on pesticide residues. Levels found in food in the United Kingdom are generally well below internationally accepted maximum residue limits and studies over 20 years have shown a steady decrease in the exposure of the United Kingdom population to persistent pesticide residues in food.

Agriculture (Wages and Employ

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether h to date the figures shown in appendices Government economic service working pa wages and employment in agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requ in the following tables:

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recommendations he has issued to the Agricultural and Food Research Council in respect of employment of resources and manpower within the constraints of the budget which he plans to allocate to it during the next three years.

Mr. Jopling: My Ministry commissions research with the Agricultural and Food Research Council on a customer-contractor basis. We shall be finalising our commissions for 1985-86 with the council shortly. Thereafter we shall be discussing our requirements for future years when we have had the advice of the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food on the allocation of research resources.

Foodstuffs (Exports)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1981 to 1984 and to the latest available date exports of basic foodstuffs by the European Economic Community and the amount spent by way of export restitutions on the same basis as that given on 4 December 1981, Official Report, column 266.

Mr. MacGregor: The following table updates as far as possible the information given in the reply of 4 December 1981. The latest available information on exports from all Community countries relates to the period January to March 1984:

Imported Foodstuffs

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what respect the formula for calculating the United Kingdom levy on imported foodstuffs under the common agricultural policy has been changed since the answer of 22 December 1981 to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, columns 360-62.

Mr. MacGregor: The method of calculating the levy applicable in the United Kingdom remains as explained by my right hon. Friend in his reply of 22 December 1981 at column 362. However, when the monetary compensatory amount (MCA) is negative, as at present, the MCA is deducted from the levy. The MCA and monetary coefficients set for the United Kingdom are, of course, subject to variation.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amounts held in intervention in the European Economic Community under the common agricultural policy at the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 14 January at column 30. The note referred to in that reply was updated on 1 February.

European Community Levies

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date his answer of 20 July 1983, Official Report columns 133-36 concerning the effective incidence of the European Economic Community levies on prices, by including figures for the first Tuesday in July 1984 and the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows. I must once again remind the hon. Member that the "world" prices derived for this calculation do not represent those which might obtain were more supplies obtained from non-Community sources.

United Kingdom Levy as Percentage of (a) the Intervention Price in the United Kingdom and (b) the World Price

Per cent.

	3 July 1984		13 February 1985
	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)
Beef and veal	69	154	68	142
Pigmeat	26	28	24	24
Poultrymeat	—	18	—	17
Eggs	—	98	—	34
Butter	62	127	67	146
Skimmed milk powder	69	161	62	121
Common wheat	54	66	33	33
Barley	51	60	37	40
Sugar	77	224	77	213

Notes:

* "Intervention prices" have been taken as:
Beef and veal—intervention price converted to carcase equivalent using 54·4 per cent. killing-out coefficient.
Pigmeat—lowest intervention price.
Butter—intervention price for 82 per cent. butter.
Skimmed milk powder—intervention price.
Common wheat—reference price for wheat of minimum bread-making quality.
Barley—intervention price.
Sugar—intervention price for white sugar plus storage levy.
There are no intervention prices for poultrymeat and eggs.

† "World prices" have been calculated by subtracting the common levy in ECU from the threshold guide price in ECU. The beef price is also adjusted for duty. In the case of pigmeat, poultrymeat and eggs the "world price" has been taken as the sluicegate price less supplementary levy where appropriate.

‡ The levies taken are at the full rate. In the case of beef, butter and sugar the United Kingdom obtains a large proportion of its supplies at reduced rates of levy.

Dairy Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether she will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the number of jobs which have been lost as a result of the reduction in dairy output, distinguishing between agriculture and processing, the amount of compensation paid under the terms of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the amount of compensation so far committed to farmers under the £50 million scheme.

Mr. Jopling: No. The available information is not in sufficient detail to enable an estimate to be made of job losses or to calculate the redundancy payments directly attributable to the reduction in dairy output.

The amount of payments so far committed under the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme is slightly under £27 million.

Waste (Sea Disposal)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proportion of loads of (a) sewage sludge, (b) industrial waste and (c) dredged spoils destined for sea disposal were sampled in each of the last five years; (2) what proportion of sewage sludge was dumped at sea in each year since 1970.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has made, is conducting, plans to make or is aware of, concerning the effects of organo-phosphorus pesticides on birds.

Mrs. Fenner: The investigation of reported wildlife incidents by the Agriculture Departments enables us to assess the direct effects of pesticides on birds and other animals.

The replacement of persistent organochlorine compounds by less persistent organo-phosphorus pesticides did result in some problems involving particular species of birds. Our surveillance allowed action to be taken quickly to reduce these identified risks.

My Department is also investigating the effects of pesticides on bird behaviour and is funding a field study of the effects of insecticide use in forestry on bird population.

I refer the hon. Member to the paper entitled "The Environmental Cost of Pesticide Usage in the United Kingdom" which was placed in the Library of the House recently.

PRIME MINISTER

European Community (Policy Review)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will report on the progress made as a result of the radical review by the European Community Commission of Community policies in 1980-81 mentioned in her answer of 5 June 1980, Official Report, column 778.

The Prime Minister: The review led to the negotiations launched by the European Council in Stuttgart in June 1983. With the successful conclusions of these negotiations at Fontainebleau, the Community has agreed:

(a) a radical reform of Community budget arrangements;
(b) a system for keeping spending, particularly on agriculture, under control.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what is the expected increase in own resources of the EEC in the current year in real terms; what this represents in terms of 1984 European currency units; and how much of this amount would go to agriculture if the share taken by agriculture remained the same as in 1984.

The Prime Minister: The expected increase in 1985 in the total revenues available to the Community within the existing 1 per cent. VAT ceiling is 3·3 per cent. in real terms, equal to 840 mecus in 1984 values. Of this 588 mecus would be spent on agriculture if the agricultural share of the budget remained at its 1984 level.

Teachers (School Meals)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister, further to her reply to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir. B. Rhys Williams), 12 February, Official Report, column

102, what the £38 million spent on providing teachers with free school meals represents per teacher who receives free school meals; and whether this amount is tax-free or declared as part of earnings.

The Prime Minister: The estimate of £38 million was based on the number of teachers who took a "free" meal on the day of the annual census. Information is not available on the number of free meals take per teacher per year.

Taxability depends on the particular circumstances, but generally subsidised or free meals are not chargeable to tax where the employee is earning less than £8,500 per year or where the meals are provided on the employer's premises for employees generally.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Prime Minister what was the average presence per night during January by the Scottish Office, Northern Ireland Office and Welsh Office Ministers in Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales, respectively.

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, on Monday, 25 February 1985 at column 39; the Secretary of State for Scotland on Thursday, 21 February 1985 at column 575; and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on Wednesday, 13 February 1985 at column 180.

VE Day

Mr. George Robertson asked the Prime Minister if any formal or informal request was made by the Government of the Soviet Union to bring to Britain for the anniversary of VE Day, the Sword of Stalingrad presented to that city by Sir Winston Churchill; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received no such request. However, I understand that the Soviet authorities have indicated informally to the Imperial War Museum that it might be possible to borrow the Sword of Stalingrad for inclusion in an exhibition which the museum plans to mount in May.

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will specify, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) Official Report, 19 February, columns 406-7, the date of the start of the production period for plutonium for defence requirements to which she referred in describing the plutonium production for defence purposes that followed the initial stoppage after the then Prime Minister's statement of 21 April 1964.

The Prime Minister: It is not in the national interest to give details of the production of plutonium for defence purposes.

British National Oil Corporation

Mr. Ian Lloyd asked the Prime Minister whether any review of the British National Oil Corporation is taking place within her policy advisory group; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to publish the specific subjects on which the policy unit advises me. In the course of its normal duties, the policy unit provides advice on a wide variety of issues.

Ministry of Defence (Cleaners)

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister what representation she has received from the Transport and General Workers Union concerning the dismissal of cleaners at the Ministry of Defence; what reply she has sent; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received one letter from the Transport and General Workers Union and one letter from a Member of Parliament. I understand that the subject was also raised with my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House on Thursday 21 February. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement has been investigating this matter and is, I understand, replying today on my behalf to the letters to which I have referred.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister how, pursuant to her answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 133-34, the severe limitation on the amount of fluoride which could enter the water supply at any one time in the event of a malfunction in monitoring equipment is achieved; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The amount of fluoride entering the supply at any one time is limited by the design of the dosing pump and the existence of a "day" tank with a maximum capacity of one day's supply. At sources which produce a steady flow of water, the pump operates near to its design capacity. At sources where the flow is variable a flow meter regulates the amount of fluoride. If the flow meter breaks down the dosing pump stops.

SCOTLAND

Drug Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to expand the number of drug rehabilitation centres; and what is the projection of the numbers needing treatment.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) on 20 February at columns 459-62. No firm estimate can be given of the number of drug misusers who may seek treatment.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many rehabilitation centres for drug addicts are presently operating in Scotland; and how many addicts are registered at each.

Mr. John MacKay: As part of the Government's information and education campaign against drug misuse which was launched on 27 February, the Scottish Health Education Group has published a pamphlet listing services available for drug misusers. A copy of this pamphlet, which is entitled "Drug Abuse—a Register of Helping Agencies" has been placed in the Library.

It is not the function of these centres to maintain a register of drug misusers.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health board area the number of private hospitals, giving the number of beds in each hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is as follows:

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State fo Scotland what was the total number of jobs in Scotland i manufacturing industry at the latest available date and o the equivalent dates in (a) 1955, (b) 1965, (c) 1975 an (d) 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Estimates of employees i employment in manufacturing industry for 1955 are n available on a comparable basis to estimates for 1965 an subsequent years. From 1965 estimates are available fo June each year, and for 1965 and 1975, based on the 196 standard industrial classification, are 725,000 and 637,00 respectively. Estimates for June 1975, 1979 and 1984, based on the 1980 standard industrial classification, are 644,000, 606,000 and 437,000 respectively. The estimate for September 1984, the latest available date, is 436,000. The estimates for 1984 are provisional, and are not seasonally adjusted.

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his estimates of the number of jobs in Scotland associated with North sea oil and gas in each of the past six years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Employment in firms in Scotland identified by the Manpower Services Commission as being wholly related to North sea oil and gas activity is estimated to have been as follows for the period 1979 to 1984.

June	Thousands
1979	41·8
1980	46·3
1981	49·6
1982	58·3
1983	63·3
1984	64·0

Recent forecasts of oil and gas reserves by both the Department of Energy and the oil industry itself augur well for future levels of oil-related employment in Scotland.

Immigration and Emigration

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the level of (a) immigration into Scotland and (b) emigration out of Scotland in each of the past six years for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: Estimates, which are subject to sampling error, particularly in relation to migration with countries outside the United Kingdom, are given in the table. They are for the period 1 July to 30 June in each case.

Estimated migration

Labour Statistics (Glasgow)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what has been (a) the average number of unemployed in the city of Glasgow and (b) the average number of vacancies advertised in jobcentres in the city of Glasgow, in each of the last six years for which figures are available;

(2) if he will list the number of people in (a) the city of Glasgow and (b) Scotland who have been unemployed for (i) less than one year, (ii) more than one year but less than two years, (iii) more than two years but less than three years and (iv) more than three years at the latest available date; if he will list the numbers unemployed in these categories on the equivalent dates in each of the last six years; and if he will further break down the figures for the city of Glasgow into the following age groups (a) 16 to 18 years, (b) 18 to 25 years, (c) 25 to 50 years and (d) over 50 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's letter to him of 22 October. The information is available in the House of Commons Library, with the exception of the vacancies information which is available only according to the numbers notified, not advertised. Furthermore the unemployment figures are not directly comparable due to the change in the basis of the count in October 1982.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of redundancies notified in the city of Glasgow in each of the past six years for which figures are available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The table shows the number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers, which were notified to the Manpower Services Commission as having occurred in the former Glasgow travel-to-work area (TTWA) during the years 1979-84. Comparable figures for the Glasgow city area could only be made available at disproportionate cost.

	Redundancies Glasgow TTWA
1979	11,399
1980	17,793
1981	15,095
1982	11,512
1983	8,863
1984	*5,879

Note:
Glasgow TTWA comprised the jobcentre areas of Glasgow city, Barrhead, Clydebank, Cumbernauld, East Kilbride, Kilsyth and Kirkintilloch.
* Provisional.

Training Schemes (Glasgow)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in each of the following age categories in the city of Glasgow were on Government training schemes at the latest available date and on the equivalent date in each of the last six years (a) 16 to 18-year-olds, (b) 18 to 25-year-olds, (c) 25 to 50-year-olds, and (d) over 50-year-olds.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that information by age group is not available by individual Government training scheme nor aggregated for the city of Glasgow for the period requested. However, at the end of January 1984 and January 1985 (the latest date for which comparative figures are available) there were respectively 5,842 and 6,324 young people (generally 16 and 17-year-olds) on the youth training scheme and 890 and 721 adults on the training opportunities scheme in the city. In addition Glasgow residents are participating in or will have benefited from training programmes run under the Manpower Services Commission's direct training services, the priority skills national grants programme, the open tech programme and through industrial training boards.

Skillcentres (Strathclyde)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many skillcentres there are in Strathclyde region: and if he will give the number of training opportunities provided at each skillcentre.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are five skillcentres and two annexes in Strathclyde region. The table shows the number of training opportunities purchased by the MSC at each in 1984-85.

General Needs Housing Association

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland hwo many tenanted houses of General Needs Housing Association houses have been sold to sitting tenants in Scotland with a discount; and what proportion this is in percentage terms and numbers of the total stock of General Needs Housing Association houses; and which housing association houses have been involved.

Mr. Ancram: The total of houses sold to sitting tenants with a discount up to 31 December 1984 is 45. Details of the sales are given in the following table. This total represents less than 1 per cent. of the housing association general needs stock in Scotland.

EC Grants (Edinburgh)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, with reference to his reply on 4 February, Official Report, column 428, publishing a table of European Economic Community grants in the Edinburgh area, whether he will give further information on (a) what infrastructure projects are involved and (b) which industrial projects are involved.

Mr. Younger: The table shows commitments from the European regional development fund (ERDF) for infrastructure and industrial projects in the present Edinburgh travel-to-work area during the period 1975-84. ERDF assistance for industrial projects represents a reimbursement to the United Kingdom Government of regional aids to industry.

"Broadleaves in Britain"

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the non-governmental organisations which have requested the Forestry Commission that they be given an opportunity to have detailed discussions with the Forestry Commission on the consultation paper "Broadleaves in Britain" but which the Forestry Commission has not met for such discussions; and if he will seek to ensure that the Forestry Commission agrees to meet these organisations for such discussions;

(2) if non-governmental conservation organisations are to be given the same opportunity to have detailed discussions individually with the Forestry Commission on the consultation paper "Broadleaves in Britain" as has been given to other non-governmental organisations.

Mr. John MacKay: In the course of drawing up draft policy proposals for broadleaved woodlands for discussion at the seminar to be held on 8 May, the Forestry Commission has not only had the benefit of the many comments it received in response to its consultative paper, but has also had meetings to discuss certain ideas with a number of selected government and non-government organisations. Not all the bodies participating in these discussions had requested meetings with the commission, nor did the commission find it necessary to have meetings with all the bodies that had asked for them. The bodies in the latter category are: The Council for the Protection of Rural England, Friends of the Earth, the North York Moors national park and the Yorkshire Dales national park.

I see no justification for intervening in the commission's handling of this exercise.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the governmental and non-governmental organisations with which the Forestry Commission has had discussions on the consultation paper "Broadleaves in Britain" since the paper was published.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission has had discussions with the following organisations:

Government organisations
Countryside Commission, Countryside Commission for Scotland, Nature Conservancy Council.
Non-Government organisations
Timber Growers UK, British Timber Merchants' Association (England and Wales), Institute of Chartered Foresters, National Farmers' Union, Country Landowners' Association.
In addition, the Forestry Commission is currently having discussions with a number of Government Departments.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the proportion of broadleaved to coniferous trees at which the Forestry Commission will consider a woodland to be a broadleaved woodland for the purposes of the "Broadleaves in Britain" review and for the purposes of administering the guidelines on woodland management proposed in the review;

(2) if he will define, for the purposes of the Forestry Commission's "Broadleaves in Britain" review, the term broadleaved woodland.

Mr. John MacKay: The generally accepted definition of broadleaved woodland is woodland that is predominantly broadleaved in character. The question of the acceptable proportion of conifers to broadleaves in a range of circumstances is still under consideration as part of the review.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private woodlands foresters were employed by the Forestry Commission at district level in (a) April 1980 and (b) June 1984, after forest and district reorganisation; and how many will be employed in June 1985 after conservancy reorganisation.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Conservation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy with regard to conservation issues and bodies.

Mr. Ancram: In the exercise of his functions and in responding to representations from conservation bodies my right hon. Friend has particular regard to the conservation of the natural beauty and wildlife of the countryside.

Chief Inspector of Prisons (Reports)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether reports have been received from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland on the Barlinnie special unit, on Friarton young offenders institution, on Glenochil young offenders institution and detention centre and on Polmont borstal.

Mr. Younger: HM Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland has submitted to me reports on his inspections of the Barlinnie special unit, on Friarton young offenders' institution, on Glenochil young offenders' institution and detention centre, and on Polmont borstal. I have today placed copies of the reports in the Library, together with my response to the recommendation he has made; and am sending a copy to the Members in whose constituency the establishments are located; to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs; to the chairman of the Scottish all-party penal affairs group and to other interested bodies. Copies may also be purchased from my Department.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security (Equality of Treatment)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to monitor the operation of the directive on equal treatment for men and women in social security matters; and what types of statistics are being compiled by his Department.

Mr. Whitney: Normal managerial monitoring arrangements are being complemented with studies by the Department's policy inspectorate. In the case of supplementary benefit and family income supplement records are being kept of the number of successful and unsuccessful claims by women for themselves and their partners, and in the case of supplementary benefit the number of cases in which there has been a change of claimant from the man to the women. In the case of national insurance benefits statistical returns have been amended to reflect the equal treatment provisions.

NHS (Managers)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that National Health Service general managers who have previously been administrators understand the distinction between administration and management.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes.

Re-establishment Centres

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual cost of running re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: The approximate annual cost of running re-establishment centres is £2 million.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what monitoring of the direct savings arising out of his amended limited list will be undertaken.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: General practitioner prescribing is already monitored and will continue to be so.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to discuss the implications of his amended limited list on the dental profession with the dental formulary sub-committee of the joint formulary committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The detailed views of the dental profession were taken into account in producing the final version of the list. Our Chief Dental Officer wrote to the chairmen of the dental formulary sub-committee of the joint formulary committee on 21 February 1985 giving details of the amended limited list and expressing willingness to discuss with the committee how best its professional expert advice could be used in the future administration of the list.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why, in relation to his amended limited list, doctors will be required to write out a prescription for some generic substances when only patent protected brands are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Few of the drugs on the extended list are under patent, though many are currently available only as branded products. Such drugs will be described by their generic or approved names wherever possible as this will lead to savings when, in due course, unbranded equivalents became available. Where brand names are included in the list it is because there is at present no non-proprietary name for the drug in question.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies he intends to conduct in order to monitor the extent of television promotions of drugs and the demand for drugs not available on prescription within the National Health Service in connection with his proposed limited list after this has been implemented on 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to monitor the extent of television advertising of drugs which are no longer available on National Health Service prescription. It is entirely a matter for manufacturers how much they spend on this or any other way of advertising such drugs. No special steps will be taken to monitor non-NHS sales of drugs, for which detailed information is not in any case available.

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the medical profession subsequent to his statement in the House on 21 February on limited list prescribing about (a) the adequacy of the revised limited list and (b) poss exemptions from the limited list; and if he will ma statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received no representations from the medical profession.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for So Services if he will answer questions about the total nur of prescriptions issued for drugs which are no longer t available on National Health Service prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not disclose prescri figures for individual named drugs because information is of commercial value.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for So Services what was the aggregate number of prescript dispensed, subdivided by category of product, for products to be excluded from National Health Ser prescription under his limited list proposals in the last for which figures are available; and what percentage total and by category, these prescriptions constituted o National Health Service prescriptions dispensed in category.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In England in 1983, the last for which information is available, the numbers prescriptions for those medicines to be excluded f NHS prescription from 1 April 1985 by category, those numbers as a percentage of the total numbe prescriptions in each category, were as follows:

	Column 1 Number of prescriptions for excluded medicines	Colu Column 1 percentage prescript
Analgesics for mild to moderate pain	12,052,000
Antacids	5,182,000
Benzodiazepines	18,925,000
Bitters and tonics	904,000
Vitamin preparations	4,506,000
Cough and cold remedies	15,599,000
Laxatives	1,204,000
Total	58,370,000

All figures are estimates based on a 1 in 200 sample prescriptions dispensed by retail chemists and applia contractors. The figures are rounded to the nearest 1,0

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for So Services what proportion of the estimated savings of million from the imposition of his limited prescribing will result from the withdrawal from National He Service prescriptions of substances which can be obtai without any prescription but which, prior to introduction of the limited list, could be issued prescription at a doctor's discretion.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information could obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for So Services how Distalgesic is to be prescribed by gene practitioners following the introduction of the Natio Health Service limited drugs list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Distalgesic is a brand name a tablet containing a mixture of two drugs which is out patent. It will not be prescribable as a branded product the National Health Service after 1 April, but the particu combination of drugs that it and other brands contain will continue to be prescribable as "dextropropoxyphene and paracetamol tablets". When a pharmacists receives such a prescription he will dispense which ever branded product he has in stock. This may be Distalgesic or it may be one of the alternative brands, currently Cosalgesic and Dextrogesic. We anticipate that manufacturers will soon produce unbranded dextropropoxyphene and paracetamol tablets. When this happens it will no longer be necessary for pharmacists to dispense a branded product.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which products on his amended limited list of prescribable drugs are currently manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what calculations have been made by his Department of the increase of imports arising from the introduction of his amended limited list;

(2) whether all the products on his amended limited list are currently manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our inquiries of wholesalers and generic manufacturers suggest that for the most part demand for the products in question can be met from United Kingdom sources. It is not possible to make precise forecasts since much will depend on market forces, especially in the period immediately after 1 April. Any finished products which are imported will, of course, have to meet our normal standards of safety, quality and efficacy.

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many products on the proposed list of drugs and other substances not to be available at National Health Service expense, as published on 21 February, have been included in error; and what steps he proposes to take to inform the medical profession of the position.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposed list of drugs and other substances not to be available at National Health Service expense as published on 21 February included a small number of products in error. All those who had received copies of the list were immediately sent details of the need to delete six items. The definitive list, included as a schedule to regulations laid on 1 March contains further minor corrections. Copies will be sent to all doctors later this month.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the aggregate number of National Health Service prescriptions written for Barker's Liquid of Life, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Mrs. Cullen's Powders and Rock Salmon Cough Medicine in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not aware of any prescriptions for these products under the National Health Service in the last three years. However, they are all prescribable products falling within the therapeutic categories covered by the limited list. They have been included in the list of drugs and other substances not to be available at NHS expense, as published on 21 February, so that savings are not eroded by prescriptions for these or similar products as replacements for others to be removed from NHS supply.

Private Residential Care Homes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which authorities are providing training for staff in private residential care homes; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning the provision of in-service training of staff in such homes;

(2) how many private residential care homes have been registered by each of the registering authorities since 1 January;

(3) which authorities have appointed specific members of staff to act as registration officers; and how many of these staff combine the function of registration officer and inspector of private residential care homes;

(4) where dual registration is appropriate for a private residential care home, on how many occasions such a registration has been approved by the health authority but refused by the social services authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is primarily for those who run these homes to arrange for the training of their staff. "Home Life", a code of practice for residential care, which we have endorsed and commended to local authorities as general guidance, encourages the registration authority to provide assistance with training. Information is not held centrally about which local authorities are doing so, nor about the other matters raised by the hon. Member.

Junior Doctors (Promotion)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of junior doctors employed by the National Health Service have received promotion to a higher post during the last four years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Blood Donor Sessions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reply he has received from the regional medical officer of the North-East Thames regional health authority in response to the proposals he has sent to him in respect of a pilot trial relating to the presence of doctors and nurses at blood donor sessions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have made no proposals to the regional medical officer. He is proposing a pilot trial in which nurses will be substituted for doctors at blood donor sessions. We have asked him to seek the views of the Advisory Committee on the National Blood Transfusion Service before putting such a trial into practice. He has not yet responded.

Doctors (Sleeping Arrangements)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he intends to issue to regional health authorities about sleeping-in arrangements for doctors while on call.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Doctors who are required to stay overnight in hospital while on duty are entitled under their terms of service to free accommodation. We have no plans to change this arrangement.

Hospital Doctors

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent rota commitments in respect of hours of work of junior hospital doctors have varied from year to year since 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not routinely collect this kind of information. A special survey of health authorities in 1983 showed that between 30 November 1982 and 1 August 1983 the number of junior hospital medical posts with regular rota commitments requiring doctors to be on duty more than one night and one weekend in three fell or was planned to fall from 5,000 to 4,000. Since 1 July 1983 regular commitments more onerous than one night and one weekend in two have required central approval. In the year to date, the number of such approvals in force has fallen from 30 to eight.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Srvices what reply he has received from the joint consultants' committee in response to the report he sent to it in December in respect of 38 medical and 66 surgical vacant posts for pre-registration house officers, and of 57 unplaced graduates.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The report was for a regular meeting pre-arranged between the joint consultants' committee (JCC) and our Department for January 1985. It could only state the figures of posts known in December 1984 to be available in February 1985 and of graduates (ie provisionally registered doctors requiring pre-registration house officer (PRHO) posts with a view to full registration with the General Medical Council) unplaced for February 1985. 57 graduates were unplaced in December 1984 but this meant that the majority (about 2,800) had already made satisfactory arrangements for February 1985. The figures were updated at the JCC—DHSS meeting in January when the number of unplaced graduates was six. The figures of vacant posts then were 75 total, 24 medical and 51 surgical. JCC noted the position.

On a JCC query about prospects for August 1985, our Department expressed cautious optimism. There has been no subsequent approach from the JCC. The latest information confirms that all graduates seeking PRHO posts were placed by February 1985.

Resettlement Centres

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he has had, or intends to have, with Civil Service unions about his decision to close the 23 resettlement centres for the homeless.

Mr. Whitney: A meeting was held between my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Social Security and the Disabled and the Departmental trade union side on 20 November 1984 to discuss the future of the Department's resettlement units and re-establishment centres. A further meeting has been arranged for 5 March following which consultations will continue to take place at official level through the Department's Whitley machinery.

Radical Cystectomy Treatment

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to promote radical cystectomy treatment within the National Health Service for elderly patients with advanced bladder cancer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. Responsibility fo choice of treatments for each patient lies wit individual clinician.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Sta Social Services what plans he has to monitor figu respect of the survival rate of patients over the age years resulting from radical cystectomy surgery.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collec information required to monitor the survival rates o patients and have no plans to do so.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for S Services in which cases, or classes of cases, he acc claim for a supplementary benefit single payment than in writing.

Mr. Whitney: We have not specified the class cases in which claims for single payment supplementary benefit can be accepted other tha writing. While such claims should normally be ma writing, our local offices would accept an oral claim v the circumstances made it reasonable to do so.

Resettlement and Re-establishment Centres

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for S Services (1) what plans he has to consult the relevant unions before making a statement on the futue o settlement and re-establishment centres;

(2) when he expects to make a statement on the f of re-settlement and re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: I would refer the hon. Member t hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Membe Elmet (Mr. Batiste), on 5 February at column 548-4

NHS (Drugs Bill)

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for S Services to what extent the National Health Service c bill was reduced as a result of (a) the 2·5 per reduction in National Health Service medicine p agreed with pharmaceutical manufacturers in August and (b) the reduction by 4 percentage points in the r on capital allowed under the pharmaceutical price scheme to pharmaceutical manufacturers with effect April 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The annual value (U Kingdom) of the August 1983 price reduction, and reductions in the rates of return on capital allowed 1 April 1984 are estimated at £35 million and £65 mi respectively.

"The Health Service in England"

Mr. Cook asked the Secretary of State for S Services if, with reference to his Department's pamp "The Health Service in England", he will state the cost of producing and distributing it (a) in Eng generally and (b) in the Northern region specifically.

Mr. John Patten: The cost to the Departmen producing and distributing the leaflet to National He Service regional health authorities was £6,370. L distribution arrangements were left to the regional he authorities themselves.

Mr. Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, with reference to his Department's pamphlet, "The Health Service in England", he will produce a subsequent pamphlet outlining in detail the results of the implementation of Government policy on the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Child Benefit

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the cost of indexing child benefit in line with the expected rate of inflation between 1984-85 and 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney: If child benefit were to be increased in November 1985 by 4·75 per cent., in line with the general assumption in the Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88 (Cmnd. 9428), the estimated gross cost of child benefit would be £163 million higher in 1985-86 than in 1984-85. The corresponding estimated net cost would be £125 million.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is aware of any studies relating to myopia in connection with organophosphorus pesticide exposure among schoolchildren in Japan; and what studies have been conducted into similar effects in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Carr-Gomm Charity

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money his Department has given, either directly or indirectly, to the Carr-Gomm charity in each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: The Carr-Gomm charity was given the sum of £1,660 for the year 1982-83, no finance was given for the year 1983-84, and £2,140·50 for the year 1984-85 from this Department.

State Pension

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the cost of indexing the basic state pension for single pensioners and married couples in line with the expected rate of inflation between 1984-85 and 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney: If the basic retirement pension where to be increased by 4·75 per cent. in November 1985, in line with the general assumption in the Government's expenditure plans for 1985-86 to 1987-88 (Cmnd. 9428), the estimated gross cost would be £1,000 million higher in 1985-86 than in 1984-85. The corresponding estimated new cost would be £800 million.

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the costs of increasing the basic state pension by £5 per week for single pensioners and £8 per week for married couples in 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated full year cost of increasing the basic retirement pension by £5 per week for single pensioners and £8 for couples in 1985-86 would be £2,200 million gross and £1,600 million net.

Child Benefit

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of (a) increasing child benefit by £1 per child per week and (b) increasing child benefit by £3 per child per week in 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated full year cost of increasing child benefit by £1 a week in 1985-86 would be £640 million gross or £490 million net. The corresponding figures for a £3 a week increase would be £1,920 million and £1,470 million.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of extending long-term supplementary benefit to people who have been unemployed for more than 12 months in 1985-86, giving the gross and net full year costs.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Children's Nurses

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many nurses hold the Royal Society of Children's Nurses qualification in each region; how many children's wards are in charge of a nurse without that qualification; and what is the estimated need in each region for established Royal Society of Children's Nurses posts;

(2) how many training places for Royal Society of Children's Nurses there are in each region; and whether there are any plans to increase the number of such places.

Mr. John Patten: The hon. Member would appear to be seeking information about nurses holding the registered sick children's nurse qualification. We are advised by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting that the number of training places in each region for the qualification are:

	Number
Northern	20
Yorkshire	50
Trent	180
East Anglian	20
North West Thames	130
North East Thames	270
South West Thames	100
South East Thames	75
Wessex	20
Oxford	30
South Western	20
West Midlands	100
Mersey	220
North Western	240

It is for individual health authorities to determine the number of training places they require and also the need for nurses with the RSCN qualification in the light of local needs and circumstances.

We do not collect centrally information on the number of nurses holding the RSCN qualification in each region or the number of children's wards in the charge of a nurse without that qualification.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Chief Nursing Officer intends to issue guidelines on children's nursing.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the Chief Nursing Officer has no plans to issue fresh guidance on children's nursing at present.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he is considering for the future management and financing of the 52 regional and area laboratories of the public health laboratory service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A review of the public health laboratory service board has been carried out under the normal accountability arrangements for non-departmental public bodies. We will issue a report of the review for consultation in the near future and arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library. We will consider the report's recommendations in the light of that consultation.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase Christmas bonuses.

Mr. Whitney: The rate of the Christmas bonus is considered each year in accordance with section 4 of the Pensioners' Payments and Social Security Act 1979. The rate will be announced and an order to give effect to the bonus for 1985 will be laid before the House in due course.

Hospital Building

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all new hospital building and extensions by regional health authority, due for completion between now and 1994, indicating the proposed numbers of beds and anticipated use.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information in the precise form requested is not available centrally but the following table lists all new hospital building schemes costing £2 million or more at the stages of planning, design, and construction.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new hospital developments have taken place in the Trent health region since May 1979; and if he will list them.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Meacher: asked the Secretary of St Services if he will list all current prop closures or partial closures to which com councils are objecting.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At 31 Decem following hospital closure proposals, on decisions were outstanding, had been formal community health councils:

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital closures have taken place in the Trent health region since May 1979; and if he will list the hospitals affected.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The complete closure of the following hospitals in the Trent health region was approved between May 1979 and December 1984.

Nightingale maternity home
Wales Court hospital
Adbolton Hall
Smedley Memorial hospital
Parwick hospital
Tuxford hostel
Firs Maternity hospital
Thornbury hospital
Nottingham women's hospital
St. Joseph's hospital
Hallwood isolation hospital
Markfield hospital
Chesterfield Royal hospital
Alexandra hospital
Foxby Hill hospital
Zachary Merton recovery home
Ashgate maternity home
Ashgate annex E
Morton hospital
Blakeley
Draycott
Boston General
Debdale Hall recovery home
Lawn hospital
Swallow Nest hospital
Darby Hall maternity hospital
Coppice hospital
Scott Road and Commonside hostels
Aughton Court

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those hospital closures or partial closures to which community health councils have objected since 1979, indicating whether or not the closure went ahead.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make fluoride tablets available on prescription to those persons who are medically advised that they should take fluoride as a prophylactic, in areas where fluoride is not present in the water supplies at a level of one milligram per litre; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what study he has made of the findings of Edwards, Pantlos and Kroot on the effect of fluoride on hydrogen bonding in cyclochrome–c and peroxidase inhibited with fluoride; what are the implications of this research for his assessment of the safety of fluoridating water at 1 part per million; and if he will make a statement;

(3) why he has hitherto indemnified statutory water undertakers which fluoridate water supplies.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the powers of his Department to assist and provide compensation in the event of an accidental addition of fluoride to water supplies.

Mr. John Patten: During the 30 years in which water fluoridation has taken place in this country, there have been no instances of accidental fluoride poisoning as a result of excess inclusion of fluoride in the water supply. However, in the event of such an accident any person who believed he or she had suffered injury could sue for damages the relevant health or water authority or whomsoever else he or she believed to be responsible.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has to the LD50 level of fluoride ion in animals, specifying the animals involved.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 26 February 1985, c. 141]: The information on poisoning by fluoride in animals, that is available, shows that toxicity is influenced by many variables. Acute lethal effects from the more toxic compounds producing fluoride ions have been reported following oral intakes between 25 and 100 milligrams (as fluorine) per kilogram of body weight. This information relates to rabbits, rats, dogs, calves, sheep and goats.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital beds have been withdrawn in the Trent region since May 1979; and if he will list the hospitals affected.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect this sort of detailed local information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to seek information from the chairman of the Trent regional health authority.

Local Authorities (Social Services)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions were made in the grant-related expenditure assessment formula regarding the need for a home help service, meals on wheels and residential care for the elderly in each of the local authorities listed in the Rate Limitation Order for 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. John Patten: The grant-related expenditure assessment for an authority does not constitute a prescriptive statement about what an authority should spend or needs to spend. For individual services, such as those mentioned in the hon. Member's question, formulae have been developed to assess the cost of providing a common standard of service across all authorities. These formulae are based on research into the factors which can give rise to an individual requiring personal social services. It is for each authority to determine within its overall budget how much it spends on those services and to decide on priorities as between different services.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of social security benefit paid to striking miners and their families to the nearest appropriate date.

Mr. Newton: I assume my hon. Friend has in mind benefit entitlements arising as a consequence of the dispute, rather than those arising in normal circumstances, such as the payment of child benefit.

Unemployment benefit is not payable to anyone involved in a trade dispute. Supplementary benefit is not payable to a striker for his own needs, but is payable in respect of his dependants subject to a deduction of £16 a week (£15 prior to 26 November 1984): the total of supplementary benefit paid for the dependants of striking miners up to the week ending 19 February was about £33 million. Housing benefit has no special rules for trade disputes, and it is therefore not known how much striking miners have received.

Family Income Supplement

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report his latest estimate of the number of low-paid families subject to income tax who are in receipt of family income supplement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 20 December 1984, at column 307 which is still the latest information available.

Consultants (Appointments)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the specialties in which appointments to see consultants exceed 10 weeks (a) nationally and (b) in the Waltham Forest health authority area.

Mr. John Patten: Information on out-patient waiting time is not collected centrally. For the Waltham Forest information the hon. Member may wish to approach the local health authority.

Hospital Doctors

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the number of posts available in the registrar grade in National Health Service hospitals has been reduced since 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have information on the numbers of available registrar posts. The number of registrars in post in National Health Service hospitals in England at 30 September in each year since 1981 was:

	Number
1981	5,989
1982	6,119
1983	6,183
1984	6,116

Hospital and Community Services

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what sectors of hospital and community services will benefit primarily from the £500 million which he has promised to allocate to them next year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for health authorities to determine the way in which the additional £500 million the Government have made available to them will be used in accordance with the Government's priorities for service development.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Works Loan Commissioners

Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there has been any change in the policy of the Public Works Loan Commissioners in regard to their lending to local authorities.

Mr. Lawson: In their circular No. 76 issued today the commissioners have made it plain that there is no change in their lending policy. They expect to continue to make loans available on the terms described in their circulars to any local authority having a valid power to borrow. The commissioners could not lend to an authority which had chosen to act illegally and, more widely, they have a statutory obligation to satisfy themselves, before advancing a loan, that an authority is able to service and repay the loan.

Business Schemes (Tax Relief)

Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of the provisional approval granted by the Inland Revenue for schemes qualifying for tax relief under the business extension scheme and its predecessor the business start-up scheme for each year since the schemes were introduced.

Mr. Moore: About £18 million was invested under the business start-up scheme over its two-year life from 6 April 1981 to 5 April 1983. Information about investments under the business expansion scheme in 1983-84 is not yet complete, but they are known to total at least £75 million. The direct revenue costs of the reliefs are approximately 50 per cent. of the amounts invested.

Income Tax Relief

Mr. Bellingham asked the Chancellor of Exchequer how much money has qualified for income tax relief under the business expansion scheme and its predecessor the business start-up scheme in the fiscal years 1982-83 and 1983-84; and how much of that money was invested in small businesses defined as having fewer than 200 employees and very small businesses having fewer than 50 employees.

Mr. Moore: About £18 million was invested under the business start-up scheme during 1981-82 and 1982-83—mostly during 1982-83. Information about the business expansion scheme in 1983-84 is not yet complete, but the estimates published in the "Treasury Economic Progress Report", December 1984, indicated that at least £75 million was invested in over 300 companies. On the basis of a preliminary analysis of some 230 companies receiving BES investments in 1983-84, about 98 per cent. were shown to have fewer than 200 employees; these received over 96 per cent. of the total amount invested. About 80 per cent. of companies had fewer than 50 employees; these received about 65 per cent. of total investment.

Extra-statutory Concessions

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on housing allowances for civil servants moving to another part of the United Kingdom;

(2) on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on housing allowances to civil servants moving to another part of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: The Inland Revenue's practice of not taxing certin allowances received by employees who incur additional housing costs when compulsorily transferred to another part of the United Kingdom is not restricted to civil servants and is not an extra-statutory concession. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to a related question tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) at column 159. There is no central record of the number of occasions when the practice was followed during the last financial year. This could be determined only at disproportionate cost.

Low Tax Economy

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his definition of a low tax economy refers to direct taxes or to direct and indirect taxes together.

Mr. Moore: This depends on the context, but will usually be the latter.

European Community (Payments to United Kingdom)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated total value of payments received by the United Kingdom from the European Economic Community for the year ended 31 December 1984.

Mr. Lawson: Final figures for receipts in 1984 are not yet available. The latest estimate for gross receipts plus refunds is £2,527 million.

Inland Revenue Staff

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will describe the system for determining staffing complements of Inland Revenue district offices; and if he will place a copy of these departmental instruments in the Library.

Mr. Moore: The Inland Revenue has three local office networks: the tax office network, collection network and the valuation office network. The complementing system is broadly similar for all three. The total staff needed for the network is calculated centrally on the basis of work factors—which are essentially an estimate of the time required to carry out specific elements of work—and projected work loads. These projections are based on statistics collectd from local offices and collated nationally. Once the national ceilings have been set and agreed with the Treasury, complements are then allocated to regional managers on the basis of regional work loads. Regional management then allocates complements to its local offices. This allocation is based not only on local office work loads but also on the specific circumstances of particular offices, for example calibre of staff and numbers of trainees. There are no detailed written instructions.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount by which the combined revenue obtained from income tax and national insurance contributions has increased in 1978-79 prices in each year since 1978-79; and what is the percentage increase this represents in each case.

Mr. Moore: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 21 February 1985 at column 570, from which year-to-year changes can be derived.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the effect on revenues from value added tax if all goods and services except exports, currently zero rated, were exempted from value added tax;

(2) what would be the effect on revenues from value added tax if all goods and services currently zero rated were exempted from value added tax.

Mr. Hayhoe: There would be a net increase in revenue from value added tax because the traders affected would no longer be able to reclaim tax paid on their inputs. However, I regret that it is not possible to quantify this net gain.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Neale asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he intends to make in the 714 certificate procedure to permit more participants in the enterprise allowance scheme to commence as sub-contractors immediately they cease to qualify for the allowance.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Christmas Tips

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees are estimated to be receiving Christmas tips; and (a) what extra revenue is expected to be raised during 1984-85 as a result of increased attention by the Inland Revenue to assessing these benefits and (b) what are the estimated extra administrative costs involved in collecting the tax involved.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total costs of unemployment benefit, social security and housing benefit for the unemployed, together with an estimate of revenue forgone from income tax and value added tax and other duties since 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, and 1983-84, together with his latest estimate for 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Taxation

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what increases in taxation would be required if one third of the total sum raised in local rates were raised through direct taxation, value added tax, and excise duties on all items including tobacco, alcohol and petrol, respectively.

Mr Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount raised in taxation in the most recent year for which figures are available; how much of the total came from direct tax on people, indirect tax, company tax, capital tax, and other taxation, respectively; and what was the total sum raised in the same year in industrial, commercial and domestic local rates, respectively.

Mr. Moore: The information was given in replies to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) on 11 February 1985 at columns 60-61 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 12 February 1985 at columns 102-103.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage changes since the previous year of output based gross domestic product in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979, giving first the total figure then the figure excluding oil and gas extraction, then the total percentage change 1978 to 1984 for total output, output-based gross domestic product, and for output-based gross domestic product, excluding gas and oil extraction.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Tax Rates

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of introducing a 25p in pound tax rate band for the first £500, first £750 and first £1,000 of taxable income in 1985-86, in terms of lost revenue to the Exchequer.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

North Sea Oil and Gas

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the total North sea tax receipts, royalties, petroleum revenue including advance payments, and, where applicable, corporation tax from North sea oil and gas production, and supplementary petroleum duty for 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and his latest estimate for 1984-85.

Mr. Moore: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	Royalties	Supplementary petroleum duty	Petroleum revenue tax (including advance payments)	Corporation tax	Total North sea tax take
1979-80	628	—	1,436	270	2,334
1980-81	992	—	2,410	480	3,882
1981-82	1,396	2,025	2,390	650	6,461
1982-83	1,632	2,395	3,274	460	7,761
1983-84	1,904	1	6,016	900	8,821

The corporation tax figures are the estimated proportion of the tax payable which can be attributed to United Kingdom and UKCS oil and gas, before setting off any advance corporation tax.

The 1984 Autumn Statement contained a forecast of £12 billion for total North sea tax take in 1984-85. Updated estimates, together with a breakdown into the individual taxes, will be published on Budget day.

Family Incomes (Taxation)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will provide an estimate of the percentage of the average household's income taken in (a) direct tax and the percentage of income taken and (b) indirect tax and such as taxes on expenditure and rates in 1984;

(2) if he will provide an estimate of the percentage of income of the richest tenth of households taken in (a) direct taxes and (b) indirect taxes in 1984.

Mr. Moore: The information requested is not available for 1984.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to answer the question from the hon. Member for Suffolk, South for answer on 14 February, about the value of approvals granted by the Inland Revenue under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Moore: I regret the delay in providing a reply to this question, which is being answered today.

"Official Report"

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects further copies of the Official Report for 15 January to be available following the exhaustion of the original stock over two weeks ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Copies of the relevant Weekly Part have been freely available from 22 January in the Vote Office, which also now has a few copies of the Daily Part for 15 January.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Silvester asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of creating a personal tax allowance at current levels for wives drawing a retirement pension based on their husbands' contributions.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1985, c. 402]: If the wife's earned income allowance could be set against a wife's national insurance retirement pension paid on the basis of her husband's contributions, the direct revenue cost would be about £300 million at 1984-85 levels of income, assuming no other change in the income tax rules.

Revenue Statistics

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated yield from all sources of taxation, including excise and other duties in each of the last six fiscal years revalued at current prices.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: The information is in the table.

*Total yield of taxes, LA rates and national insurance contributions at 1984-85 prices

	£ billion
1978-79	104
1979-80	111
1980-81	110
1981-82	118·5
1982-83	121·5
1983-84	124·5
†1984-85	128·5

† Estimate.

Per-capita Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figure per capita of the tax-paying population was represented by the financial contribution made by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community in each of the years since such contributions commenced.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 212]: The United Kingdom's contributions (after refunds) per capita of the tax-paying population between the financial years 1973-74 and 1983-84 are as follows:

1973-74	5
1974-75	5
1975-76	9
1976-77	13
1977-78	21
1978-79	30
1979-80	38
1980-81	27
1981-82	30
1982-83	43
1983-84	51

The Community is financed largely from VAT, Customs duties and levies which are borne by consumers. Therefore, the answer is based on United Kingdom population excluding children under 16.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figure per capita of the tax-paying population was represented by the total grant aid received by the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community in each of the years since such grants commenced.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 212]: The United Kingdom's contributions (excluding refunds) per capita of the tax-paying population for the years 1973-74 and 1983-84 are as table:

1973-74	2
1974-75	5
1975-76	8
1976-77	7
1977-78	9
1978-79	13
1979-80	18
1980-81	22
1981-82	25
1982-83	29
1983-84	41

The Community is financed largely from VAT, Customs duties and levies which are borne by consumers. Therefore, the answer is based on United Kingdom population excluding children under 16.

Senior Police Officers (Pensions)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from police committees and federations about the possibility of taxation being imposed on lump sums received by senior police officers upon retirement.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 262]: We have received a small number of representations from police federations on this subject. As these are treated in confidence, I cannot comment on any individual case.

DEFENCE

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make proposals for a "no first use of chemical weapons" pledge to be adopted by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: No. All members of NATO are already parties to the 1925 Geneva protocol, which prohibits the use of chemical weapons; this prohibition is subject to reservations made by many parties, including the UK. A no first use declaration would be redundant and could undermine the worldwide standing of the 1925 protocol. The NATO Alliance however fully supports, and member states are actively participating in, the efforts of the Geneva conference to negotiate an effective, verifiable and worldwide ban on the production, manufacture and stockpiling, as well as the use, of these weapons.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for United Kingdom policy on chemical and biological weapons of a change in policy by one of the four signatories of the quadripartite agreement on chemical and biological weapons on information and facilities sharing on research development, testing and production of such weapons of a change in policy on the production of nerve gas by another party to the agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to the wide-ranging technical co-operation agreement on research and development which this country has with the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, which includes defensive measures against chemical and biological attack. In the event that one of the other parties to the agreement were to change its policy on the production of chemical agents, this would not in itself have implications for the UK's policy on chemical and biological weapons since the agreement addresses only defensive measures. All the countries concerned are signatories to the 1972 biological weapons convention which bans the production, development and stockpiling of biological weapons. On chemical weapons policy, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 10 January, at column 901. The other four Governments likewise attach great importance to a comprehensive, verifiable and worldwide ban on such weapons.

American National Guard

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether those members of the American National Guard on exercise in the United Kingdom in 1984 were members of (a) the Air National Guard and (b) the Troop National Guard, respectively.

Mr. Lee: Members of both the Air National Guard and Army National Guard took part in exercises in the United Kingdom in 1984.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence which units of the British armed forces the American national guardsmen were working with whilst in the United Kingdom in 1984.

Mr. Lee: United States Army national guardsmen took part in general infantry training exercises with units of the Territorial Army, and US air national guardsmen, practised ground handling of aircraft at RAF Wethersfield and guarding of aircraft at RAF Abingdon.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether American national guards officers were involved in exercises or other activities with his Department's military police or civil police personnel in 1984.

Mr. Lee: United States Air national guardsmen took part in a one day base security exercise at RAF Abingdon, with members of the station's RAF security police.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what activities American national guardsmen were involved in while in the United Kingdom in 1984.

Mr. Lee: They were involved in routine military training, in order to practise their war roles in support of NATO.

Territorial Army (Centres)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the Territorial Army centres currently being guarded by Territorial Army personnel were not listed in the answer given to the hon. Member for Ashfield on 15 February, Official Report, column 315; if he will now list the centres as originally requested; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No. It is not our practice to comment on detailed security measures taken in response to any particular threat. I cannot therefore say which Territorial Army centres are being guarded by Territorial Army personnel at any given time.

Military Music School

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what research his Department has initiated or commissioned in the last three years concerning the establishment of a military music training school; what conclusions were reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A study into musician training in the armed forces was initiated in early 1982. The study was in several stages, one of which involved the employment of an outside consultant. In the light of this work we decided to replace the three single-service schools with one Defence School of Music, to be located at Deal, Kent. This decision was announced in July 1984. We hope that the new school will open in about 1988.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria have governed his decision to locate the new military music centre at Deal in Kent.

Mr. Lee: A number of factors were taken into account in selecting Deal as the future location of the Defence School of Music, including size, time scale, cost and other considerations.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what safety regulations govern the number of nuclear submarines permitted to berth at any one time in the Holy Loch; and whether these have been breached in the last year.

Mr. Heseltine: Safety regulations concerning the use of Holy Loch by the United States Navy govern factors other than the number of nuclear powered submarines which may be present there at any one time. These regulations have satisfied successive Governments. I am informed that there has been no breach of these regulations over the past year.

Royal Ordnance Factory, Euxton

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State fo Defence (1) whether tenders were put out by hi Department to sell surplus boots, uniforms and blanket from royal ordnance factory, Euxton;

(2) how many surplus Army blankets, boots an clothing items from royal ordnance factory, Euxton hav been donated to charities.

Mr. Lee: The items concerned were included in th property passed to Royal Ordnance plc by the schem made under the Ordnance Factories and Military Service Act 1984, a copy of which was laid before the House o 9 January. The company is responsible for its own day-to day operation and I suggest the hon. Member writes to th chairman if he wishes to pursue inquiries about th disposal of these items.

Operation Yealstead

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State fo Defence what were the separate costs of materials an manpower of Operation Yealstead, indicating the Votes t which the expenditure has been charged.

Mr. Lee: It is too soon to be able to give a detailed breakdown of material and manpower costs of the initia operation to clear and fence RAF Molesworth although th initial estimate is about £6·5 million. There will in additio be a general cost arising from Ministry of Defence polic exercises. Costs will thus fall on Votes 1, 2 and 4.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defenc why it is considered necessary to use dummy cruise missil launchers on exercises.

Mr. Stanley: The cruise missile wing at RA Greenham Common has a number of driver training vehicles which simulate the size, shape and weight of th major cruise missile vehicles. These are used on exercise when required by the training programme.

Defence Expenditure (Costing Index)

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Defenc what type of costing index his Department uses whe costing long-term defence expenditure such as the Triden project.

Mr. Butler: My Department prepares its long-term costings of expenditure on projects such as Trident a constant prices without making assumptions regarding future inflation. Currently costings are being prepared a forecast average 1984-85 prices.

Low-flying Helicopters

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State fo Defence if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom designated for ultra low flying by military helicopters; and whether consultations have taken place with local authorities over the designation of these areas.

Mr. Lee: No areas of the United Kingdom are specifically designated for ultra low flying by military helicopters.

Contract Cleaners

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what security checks were made on the Clean Industrial Company prior to the award of the contract for the cleaning of his Department's buildings.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1985, c. 629]: The Ministry of Defence satisfied itself that Cleandustrial Services Ltd. was a company to which contracts for cleaning Ministry of Defence headquarters buildings could appropriately be let.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether officers of the Clean Industrial Company have signed the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1985, c. 629]: Those officers requiring access to classified information have signed the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what powers he has vested in Clean Industrial to monitor security and vet employees working in his Department's buildings;

(2) what procedures his Department uses for vetting cleaners for security purposes;

(3) if his Department has refused security clearance to any cleaners employed in his Department's buildings.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1985, c. 629]: The Ministry of Defence is not involved in the recruitment or selection of staff engaged by defence contractors. However, my Department must satisfy itself that employees of cleaning firms are suitable persons to be employed in Ministry of Defence buildings. Occasionally some people are found to be unsuitable. It would be wrong for me to comment publicly on any individual cases. Any representations made to my ministerial colleagues or myself about any particular individual would be considered with the greatest care before any final decisions were taken.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations took place between Clean Industrial and his Department over (a) the security vetting and (b) the sacking of Mrs. Molly Balkinson.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1985, c. 629]: I have today written to the hon. Gentleman about Mrs. Molly Balkinson.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 5 March 1985

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will appoint the present leaders of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham Councils to the board of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Sir George Young: The present leader of Newham Council, and the deputy mayor of Tower Hamlets council (who was leader when he was appointed) are both currently members of the board. The former leader of Southwark council was a member of the board until his appointment expired in November 1984. Future appointments are entirely a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's determination as vacancies arise.

London Docklands (Housing)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes have been provided for sale in London Docklands in each year since 1981; how many are expected to be built in each of the next five years; and how many houses are provided for in the land use plans of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Sir George Young: The LDDC plans that a total of 10,025 houses for sale will have been started on LDDC owned sites between 1981 and the end of its current planning period in 1988-89. This total can be broken down as follows:

	New starts	Completions
1981-82	601	85
1982-83	1,098	348
1983-84	1,449	715
1984-85	1,500	—
1985-86	2,000	—
1986-87	2,000	—
1987-88	982	—
1988-89	425	—
Total	10,025

Figures for the later years could vary depending upon land availability. In addition, the LDDC estimates that there is the capacity for some 4,000 dwellings to be provided on privately owned sites in their area up to 1988-89. Over 900 have already been started or completed on these sites since 1981.

Inner London Education Authority

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he calculated the fixed rate limits for the coming financial year in respect of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend proposed a precept limit of 74·19p for ILEA on 11 December by reference to the expenditure level determined for it, the block grant payable (nil in the case of ILEA) and taking account of financial reserves available to the authority. In the light of further information provided by the authority he included in the draft order setting precept limits an increased figure of 77·25p. The order was approved by the House of Commons on 6 February and came into operation on 14 February.

Direct Labour Highways Work

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of the direct labour highways work undertaken by the English and Welsh county councils in the financial year 1983-84; and what was the proportion of that work which was won following competitive tender.

Mr. Waldegrave: On the basis of published DLO reports the total value of highways and sewerage work carried out by county councils' direct labour forces in England and Wales was some £490 million of which about 13 per cent. was won in competition. Private sector contractors carried out work valued at some £510 million. Separate figures for highway and sewerage functions are not available.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to announce the results of his discussions with the water authorities on how best to expose their direct labour organisations to competition.

Mr. Gow: Proposals have been put to the water authorities but I cannot say when we will reach conclusions. We are examining wider aspects of water authority privatisation.

Building Regulations (Gas Ingress)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in amending the building regulations to specify measures to prevent the ingress of gas around pipe ducts and cable entries.

Mr. Gow: I do not propose to amend the building regulations to specify such measures. The sealing of entries for services provided by statutory undertakings is covered by other regulations or codes and the British Standards code of practice for drainage, which has been revised to cover this point, will be published shortly. The guidance documents which will accompany the new building regulations to be made later this year will draw attention to the regulations and codes covering the sealing of entry points.

Capital Allocations (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the capital allocations for the city of Leeds for the four main expenditure blocks, education, housing (housing investment programme), social services and the other service blocks for 1985-86 compare, in real terms, with those for 1984-85, 1983-84 and 1982-83; and if he will give the percentage change in value for each block from the previous year.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is as follows:

City of Leeds: Capital Allocations in Real Terms (1983-84 Base Year)*

	1982-83 £000	1983-84 £000	per cent. change 1982-83 to 1983-84	1984-85 £000	per cent. change 1983-84 to 1984-85	1985-86 £000	19
Education	7,498	3,381	−54·9	2,767	−18·2	3,038
Housing	39,104	29,757	−23·9	27,700	−6·9	22,680
Personal Social Services	2,786	2,725	−2·2	2,939	+7·9	1,760

The allocations for 1985-86 will be increased by 5 per cent. across all service blocks if the city of Leeds complies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's request for restraint on capital expenditure in 1984-85.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those borough, district and county councils in England which have passed a resolution on the addition of fluoride to water supplies, indicating against each one whether the decision was in favour or against.

Mr. Macfarlane: Local authorities are not required to inform me about any resolutions they may pass on flouridation. This information is not therefore available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic orchestra in relation to the proposed abolition of Merseyside county council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

After abolition of Merseyside county council the orchestra, along with other major performing arts bodies in the GLC and metropolitan areas, should discuss its needs with the Arts Council, which will receive for this purpose an additional £16 million of central funding in 1986-87—and equivalent sums in subsequent years. The orchestra is well known to the Arts Council, which has made grants to it for many years.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

GCHQ (Resignations)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the 83 staff in scientific and technical grades who resigned from the Government communications headquarters for reasons other than retirement, transfer to another department, maternity or marriage were linguists.

Mr. Rifkind: It would not be appropriate to give details as the question relates to the operations and structure of an intelligence agency.

Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Forei Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has t Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is in breach planning to be in breach of, the anti-ballistic missile and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We believe that parties to al control agreements, including the ABM Treaty of should scrupulously observe their provisions. W therefore concerned about the details of a num possible Soviet contraventions of the treaty mentio President Reagan's report of 21 January to Congres treaty provides a mechanism, the standing consu commission, for discussing such matters and we ho issues can be clarified in this body.

Cambodian Refugees

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreig Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to seek t Thailand in the near future to discuss the probl Cambodian refugees.

Mr. Rifkind: No. But we are in close and fr contact with the Thai authorities on refugee matte my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. expects to discuss the problem of Cambodian re with the United Nations High Commissioner for Re this month.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreig Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose a international conference on the problem of refug south-east asia with particular reference to Camb refugees in Thailand.

Mr. Rifkind: We have no plans to do so, b continue to keep closely in touch with other Govern and with relief organisations about the best mea handling and resolving the distressing problem refugees in south-east Asia.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreig Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has that S troops have used chemical weapons in Afghanistan if he will identify the types and times used and effe known.

Mr. Rifkind: As was stated by my right hon. F the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 27 Ja 1984, and by my noble Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in another place on 22 November 1984, we believe that some form of non-lethal incapacitating agent has been used by Soviet forces in Afghanistan. Research and analysis continue of the evidence for the use of lethal chemical agents in that country.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has that Vietnamese troops have used chemical weapons in Cambodia; and if he will identify the types and times used and effects if known.

Mr. Rifkind: As a party to the 1925 Geneva Protocol banning the use of chemical weapons, we view with seriousness any allegations of the use of chemical weapons in Cambodia, as elsewhere. We have been disturbed at recent reports that Vietnamese rockets containing chemical agents have landed in Thai territory. We are studying these reports.

Arms Reduction

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government plan to make to the arms reduction talks in Geneva.

Mr. Rifkind: We shall follow the Geneva talks with great interest and look forward to maintaining the closest contacts with the United States. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister recently discussed the prospects for the negotiations with President Reagan. My hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) hopes to meet the chief United States negotiators when he visits Geneva to address the conference on disarmament on 11 to 12 March. Mr. Gorbachev's visit in December provided an opportunity to exchange views with the Soviet Union.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has that any countries other than the existing five nuclear weapon states either possess, are about to possess or plan to possess nuclear weapons; if he will name the countries concerned; and which of them are signatories to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Rifkind: All the non-nuclear weapon states which are parties to the non-proliferation treaty have undertaken not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons. In 1983 (the last year for which a formal report was issued), as in previous years since the NPT came into force, the IAEA in carrying out its safeguards obligations did not detect any anomally which would indicate the diversion of a significant amount of safeguarded nuclear material for the manufacture of any nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices.

Many other non-nuclear weapon states, not parties to the NPT, which have significant quantities of nuclear material in their territory, have accepted IAEA safeguards on their individual facilities. However, these states have not undertaken to accept IAEA safeguards on all their peaceful nuclear activities as have NPT parties.

The existence in certain of these countries of significant nuclear facilities which are not subject to international inspection must be a cause for concern. Such facilities exist in the following countries: Argentina, Brazil, India, Israel, Pakistan and South Africa. Of these, India detonated a nuclear explosive device in May 1974, although the Indian Government have always said that the explosion was for peaceful purposes only.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government will be making to the non-proliferation treaty review conference.

Mr. Rifkind: We will urge the parties to re-affirm the success of the non-proliferation treaty in preventing the further spread of nuclear weapons and its consequent importance to the security of all states whether or not they are parties. We shall also stress our view that the treaty should be reviewed in a balanced and constructive manner and that it would be strengthened further if membership were universal.

Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate how many British subjects have lost entitlement to pensions accruing from work in other countries because of the unilateral actions of the Governments in those countries in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Renton: We hold no general records of British expatriates who have lost pension entitlements in recent years.

The ODA maintains records of expatriate employees of Commonwealth Governments. In many cases agreements have been concluded with the Governments concerned for ODA to take over and meet outstanding pension liabilities. No record is however maintained of expatriates employed by other foreign Governments or the private sector overseas.

Foreign Affairs Council

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the EEC Foreign Affairs Council of 28 February.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: An extra meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council was held in Brussels on 28 February. I was prevented from attending because of bad weather in Belgium. The United Kingdom therefore was represented by our permanent representative to the European Communities.

The Council continued the discussions begun on 18 and 19 February on the best way to incorporate Spain into Community fishing arrangements on a basis which takes account of the legitimate expectations of the applicant member states while safeguarding the balance of fishing opportunities for existing member states under the common fisheries policy.

There was a further exchange of views about the financing of the 1985 budget. Work on this subject will be pursued by the Committee of Permanent Representatives in preparation for the next meeting of the Council on 17 to 20 March.

The Commission introduced new proposals for integrated Mediterranean programmes. These will be discussed in detail at the March Council.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report details of any up-to-date statistics which allow a comparison to be made between the United Kingdom's record on energy efficiency and those of its chief industrial and economic competitors.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 28 February at column 227.

TRANSPORT

Road Maintenance (Privatisation)

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the experimental privatisation of trunk road routine maintenance, as recommended in the Inbucon study of 1982.

Mrs. Chalker: We are still looking at the possibility of contracting out trunk road maintenance as recommended in the Inbucon report and we will shortly be consulting the Association of County Councils on the matter. In addition we are considering the scope for contracting-out maintenance work on lengths of motorway in the metropolitan areas.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for if he plans any action to assist smaller airlines at Leeds-Bradford airport; and if he will take ste to ensure that operators at Leeds-Bradford airpo excluded from eligibility for any assistance
British Airways to smaller airlines.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I expect that the liberalisation of domestic licensing will assis airlines operating from Leeds-Bradford.

There are no specific plans to assist smalle operating at Leeds-Bradford airport. We hope to shortly the selection criteria for services meriting support from British Airways.

Lost Vessels (Inquiries)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for if he will list all United Kingdom registered ve at sea in unexplained circumstances in the last fi what inquiries were set up into their disappear what was the result of the inquiry in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell [pursuant to his reply,
1985, c. 369]: The following seven vessels—o

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Population

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the prison population is from ethnic minorities; and what are the figures for each of the main ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the question from the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Kilroy-Silk) on 21 January at column 271.

Chelmsford Prison

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Stat
Home Department how many inmates who were by his decision to suspend traffic in and out Majesty's prison Chelmsford resulting from the i tions into the hazards of acquired immune d syndrome had completed, or were about to compl sentences.

Mr. Mellor: None. The discharge of inm completion of their sentences was not affected.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Stat
Home Department what screening facilities he i make available to inmates and staff in Her Majesty's prison Chelmsford resulting from the investigations into the outbreak of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Mellor: Staff and inmates have been told that anyone who is concerned that he or she may have been at risk from AIDS should immediately contact either their own doctor or the prison medical officer, as appropriate, for advice on a confidential basis. Wherever necessary, the prison medical officer will refer the case to the local health authority for whatever assistance, including regular health checks, is required.

New inmate receptions at Chelmsford are being asked whether they have AIDS or have been in contact with an AIDS sufferer. Replies which suggest possible contact with AIDS will be thoroughly followed up by the prison medical officer.

Security Firms

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to regulate the operation of security firms in public places and to ban the wearing of uniforms or carrying of weapons by the employees of such firms.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. The Government support the steps which have been taken by the British Security Industry Association and the International professional Security Association towards self-regulation. The legal powers of employees of private security firms are no different from other citizens.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what opportunities exist for category A prisoners to acquire skills and knowledge whilst in prison.

Mr. Mellor: The opportunities for category A prisoners to acquire skills and knowledge during their imprisonment are broadly the same as those available to other prisoners. They include tuition in literacy and numeracy in a life and social skills context; in academic education to GCE and other public examination levels, including University degrees; in vocational training; and in recreational activities. Library facilities are also available. Skills and knowledge may also be acquired in workshops and kitchens, and in physical education and the maintenance of grounds and buildings.

Prisoners (Letters)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the restrictions imposed on the numbers of personal letters allowed to be received by any one prisoner and the reasons for any such restrictions.

Mr. Mellor: Restrictions are imposed on the number of letters prisoners may send and receive becaue staff have to be made available to examine and read them. Convicted prisoners are allowed to send each week at least one letter at public expense and one at their own expense. Governors are instructed to allow additional letters as local staff resources permit. Governors also have discretion to grant individual prisoners additional letters in special circumstances; the details are set out in standing order 5, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Convicted prisoners are generally allowed to receive as many letters as they send. There are no limits on the number of letters unconvicted prisoners may send and receive.

Television Licences (Refunds)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider extending the period during which a television licence refund may be obtained from 28 days or less from its date of issue to six months or less from the date of issue.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no present plans to do so.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to designate Leeds-Bradford airport as a port of entry.

Mr. Waddington: No.

Zola Budd

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date Zola Budd's father applied for nationality under the terms of the Immigration Act 1971; and on what date it was granted.

Mr. Waddington: The hon. Member has misunderstood the position. Mr. Budd had no need to apply for a citizenship he already possessed by descent from his father.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Northern Ireland (Supergrass Evidence)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Attorney-General how many people charged with offences on the evidence of converted terrorists have been found not guilty by the courts in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: In the years 1983-1985 to date there have been acquittals of 88 persons in trials for terrorist offences where evidence of alleged accomplices formed part of the Crown case. In addition, 14 further persons who had been convicted in such circumstances had their convictions quashed on appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Attorney-General how many people charged with offences on the evidence of converted terrorists have had the charges withdrawn as a result of the evidence being withdrawn.

The Attorney-General: The information is being obtained and I shall reply as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

HMS Conqueror (Log)

Q21. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what progress has been made with inquiries into the disappearance of the navigator's log of HMS Conqueror for a period in May 1982.

The Prime Minister: I cannot at present add to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Sir R. Gower) on 30 November 1984, at columns 593-94.

Libya (Scottish Prisoners)

Q22. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Prime Minister what recent representations she has made to the Libyan authorities about the imprisonment of two Scots, Robert Maxwell and Michael King.

The Prime Minister: The British interests section of the Italian embassy in Libya raised Mr. Maxwell's case with the appropriate Libyan authorities at a senior level in September and again in November 1984. A reply is awaited.

I understand that Mr. King's lawyer is making an appeal against his recent sentence. .

The British interests section continues to keep a close and active interest in both cases.

Young Persons (Employment)

Q102. Mr. Hardy asked the Prime Minister what priority Her Majesty's Government give to those areas of the United Kingdom, including the parish of Dalton in the Wentworth constituency, where scarcely any young people are in normal employment.

The Prime Minister: In order to promote new employment opportunities in areas such as the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area, in which the hon. Member's constituency lies, these areas have been designated as assisted areas and qualify for regional incentives. Also, assistance is available nationally under the various special employment and training schemes operated by the Department of Employment many of which are particularly designed to assist young people.

Newspapers

Q110. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Prime Minister which newspapers are taken by No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: All the national newspapers and a wide range of regional and local newspapers.

Economic Strategy

Q128. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister what she regards as the main objective of her economic strategy.

The Prime Minister: To reduce inflation and create the conditions for the sustainable growth of output and employment.

Sporting Events (Argentina)

Q129. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister if she intends to attempt to dissuade British sportsmen and women from participating in sporting events to be staged on future occasions in Argentina in the same manner in which she made representations to British athletes before the 1980 Olympic Games in which they subsequently took part in Moscow.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Mi will list her official engagements for Tuesda

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister i her official engagements for 5 March.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she official engagements for Tuesday 5 March.

Mr. John M. Taylor asked the Prime Mi will list her official engagements for Tuesda

The Prime Minister: This morning I ha with ministerial colleagues and others. In ad duties in the House I shall be having further m today. This evening I hope to have an audi Majesty the Queen.

Civil Service (Code of Conduct)

Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister have discussions with the Civil Service unio establishment of an appropriate code of condu of confidentiality to take the place of secti Official Secrets Act 1911.

The Prime Minister: The question of co was dealt with in paragraph 6 of the note issued by the Head of the Home Civil Ser February annexed to my answer to my hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) date, at columns 130-32. I understand that the Home Civil Service has agreed to meet the C unions for a discussion.

Pensions

Sir David Price asked the Prime Mini Government will consider extending eligibil basic retirement pension with a view to making between men and women and flexible as betwe of 60 and 65.

The Prime Minister: The Government considering the findings of the inquiry into pr retirement conducted by my right hon. Secretary of State for Social Services, which these and other issues. We expect to publish ou in the next few months.

Tax and Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minis the combined total of income tax and nationa contribution a man with a wife and two children per week if his income was £109 per week and rates were £15·60 and £7·35, respectively; compare that with the combined total of chi housing benefit and free school milk to which be entitled; and how much better off he woul and national insurance thresholds were raised t week and all state benefits were eliminated f who earned more than £100 per week.

The Prime Minister: On the basis of the as quoted, and with all other assumptions as in the 1984 DHSS tax-benefit model tables, the com of income tax and national insurance contributi by a married man with gross earnings of £10 would be £24·31.

The combined total of child benefit, housing benefit and value of free school meals paid to such a man with two children aged four and six would be £24·05.

If income tax and national insurance contribution thresholds were raised and state benefits eliminated as outlined, a man in the particular circumstances quoted would be 20p a week better off. The example, however, has no general application: such thresholds and benefit limitations would produce varying gains or losses for people in different circumstances.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all areas whose eligibility for regional aid from the European Economic Community has changed as a result of his review of regional aid policy.

Mr. Trippier: The new assisted areas map announced on 28 November 1984 is based on the Department of Employment's revised travel-to-work areas introduced in September 1984. The old travel-to-work areas — on which the previous assisted areas map was based—and new travel-to-work areas do not necessarily correspond exactly. It is therefore not possible to define precisely which areas are no longer assisted by reference to the previous assisted areas map.

However, on a "closest approximation" basis the following new travel-to-work areas which were previously assisted under the old map no longer have assisted area status and have therefore ceased to qualify for that aid from the European Community which is dependent upon such status.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated annual cost per person in the working population living in the designated areas of providing regional assistance at current levels.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 356]: The estimated cost of regional development grants and regional selective financial assistance in 1984-85 per head of working population in the assisted areas of Great Britain is £74·78. This estimate is based on the working population of areas designated as assisted prior to the announcement on 28 November 1984 since most expenditure for 1984-85 will be incurred in these areas. Estimates are not readily available on a comparable basis for other types of regional assistance administered by various territorial agencies.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he knows the proportion of the population of each member country of the European Community who live in designated areas; and if any of them exceeds the 35 per cent. maximum figure permitted.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 356]: I am not aware of any reliable and comparable published data of this type; such information would in any case be misleading, because of wide differences of definition between member states, and because geographical coverage cannot be considered in isolation from other factors such as grant levels and overall expenditure.

The total working population of that part of the United Kingdom in which EC-approved "regional" aids have effect—which includes not only aids given in assisted areas in Great Britain, but also in Northern Ireland, certain inner urban areas and areas administered by the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Development Board for Rural Wales — amounts to 44·7 per cent. There is no maximum figure such as that referred to by the hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the exact percentage of the working population living in areas that are designated as assisted areas.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, Monday 4 March 1985, c. 356: The new assisted areas map announced by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, on 28 November 1984 is estimated to cover 35 per cent. of the working population of Great Britian.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has made any representations to the European Community asking for some flexibility with the

35 per cent. figure which is the announced European limit to the proportion of the population that can live in designated areas

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 356]: There is no maximum figure of 35 per cent. for the EC as a whole: the European Commission discusses each member state's proposals for designated areas individually, taking into account many different factors, such as grant levels and overall expenditure. I am not aware of any reliable and comparable published data in respect of other member states: such information would in any case be of limited value because of wide differences of definition between member states, and because geographical coverage cannot be considered in isolation from other factors.

Weighing Machines

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to the reply of 8 February to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds, Official Report, columns 743-44, he will explain why accommodation and other costs account for 52 per cent. of the hourly charges he makes for type approval of weighing machines; and if he will publish a breakdown of the 31 per cent. figure provided for other costs.

Mr. Fletcher: The breakdown of the "other costs" figure for 1983-84 is as follows:

	per cent.
Departmental overheads (includes personnel management, typing and reprographic services)	13
Administration (includes office management, accounts, local staff management)	9·5
Office supplies (includes stationery, postage, telephones)	4·5
Capital charges, (includes equipment depreciation), materials and consumable stores	4
Total	31

Accommodation costs represent a relatively high proportion of the overall overheads because the national Weights and Measures Laboratory is currently located in central London, an area where high rents and rates prevail.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the uptake of the loan guarantee scheme in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for Shrewsbury and Atcham are not available. In the West Midlands region 1,398 guarantees have been issued under the loan guarantee scheme.

"Discounts to Retailers"

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has yet received the report being carried out by the Director General of Fair Trading updating the "Discounts to Retailers" report carried out by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Fletcher: No. The Director General expects to complete his fact-finding exercise later this year, and publish the results.

Radio Spectrum (Review)

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what conclusions he has reached on the recommendations of the Merriman report of the independent review of the radio spectrum, 30-960 MHz.

Mr. Pattie: I am grateful to Dr. Merriman and his colleagues, Air Vice Marshal Foden and Mr. P. M. Vine, for their helpful and constructive report (published in July 1983 as Cmnd. 9000). The Government share the views expressed in it as to the importance of radio regulation to a wide range of industry, service and other users and welcome the many recommendations it contains which are directed towards ensuring that this task is more effectively discharged. In the 18 months since the report was submitted, the recommendations have been studied in detail and several have already been put into effect.

A number of the recommendations concerned the optimum location within the machinery of government for the regulation of radio: these have been overtaken by the transfer of the radio regulatory division to my Department in June 1983. With the exceptions noted in the following paragraphs 2 and 9, the Government accept all the other recommendations in the report and the action they are taking is as follows. (References are to the relevant paragraph numbers in the report.)

1. Exceptional steps are being taken to overcome current difficulties in recruiting the specialist staff needed to carry out RRD's work in the way envisaged in the report. In particular, it has now been agreed that an allowance will be paid to radio spectrum engineers to assist in the recruitment, selection and retention of qualified staff. The staff complement has been increased to allow for more monitoring of the spectrum (9.30), and as staff levels increase, more effort will be devoted to planning for broadcasting ancillary and fixed services (4.12 and 4.25) and to involvement in research into systems and propagation (12.7). Staff exchanges with industry will be introduced when staffing levels permit (12.12).

2. The existing structure of consultative bodies on radio regulatory matters will be reviewed and if necessary strengthened or extended; in the light of that review further consideration will be given to whether there is a case for establishing a small high-level expert body as recommended in the report (9.14).

3. Regular reviews, on a user group basis, of spectrum usage and technical developments will be instituted (9.8). A forward planning unit has been set up in recognition of the long time scales involved in bringing about major changes in the pattern of use (4.28).

4. The allocation of spectrum for defence purposes will be reviewed periodically by an independent committee, reporting jointly to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Defence and for Trade and Industry (9.19). The members of the committee who will be asked to carry out the first review will be appointed later this year.

5. A study is being commissioned of the feasibility of the management of spectrum via the price mechanism (11.16)

6. Economic expertise is already being applied to frequency management questions and the possible use of cost benefit analysis or similar techniques will be explored (9.23). Some steps have already been taken to adjust licence fees in support of frequency management objectives, and further adjustments will be made (9.27).

7. The frequency allocation table for the UK will be published later this year (9.10). Effort will be devoted to improving the quantity and quality of other published material which might be of value to users of radio and, staff levels permitting, it is hoped to publish annual reports on the work of RRD beginning the financial year 1985-86 (9.6 and 9.9).

8. Frequency assignment responsibility will continue to be delegated to common interest groups of users where this is compatible with the efficient and interference free use of the spectrum. The scope for it may, however, in practice be limited. In bands where the responsibility for assignment remains with the Government, it is hoped that common interest user groups can, by excercising a degree of self-regulation, play a useful role in achieving fuller and more equitable use of the spectrum (10.13).

9. In newly available land mobile bands particularly, preference will be given to the establishment of new service providing systems (for example trunked common base stations) (10.17). Where appropriate, fixed time limits will be set to frequency assignments (10.23); but I am not convinced that provisional assignments (10.26) are necessary, the need identified in the report being already met by existing procedures.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the United Kingdom's crude trade balance in textiles and clothing and the overall trade balance in manufactures with Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea and Macao in 1979 to 1984;

(2) what was the United Kingdom's crude trade balance in textiles and clothing and the overall trade balance in manufacturers with the Association of South East Asian Nation countries in the years 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 116]: The information is as follows:

*Provisional.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) by how much imports of Portuguese knickers, pants and briefs, MIFA category 13, exceeded the permitted quota in the period 1 October to 31 December 1984; and what action he proposes to take as a result;

(2) if the voluntary restraint arrangement to curtail the importation of Portuguese knickers, pants and briefs, MFA category 13, to 1·6 million pairs in the period from 1 October to 31 December 1984 was observed.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 1 March 1985, c. 321]: There are no formal quota arrangements on textile and clothing trade with Portugal. There is a voluntary restraint arrangement, but this does not cover category 13. Portugal did, however, give informal assurances about its exports of certain products, including MFA category 13, for the last quarter of 1984. Import figures for this period for category 13 show imports of 5,103,000 pieces. This level of imports has caused serious concern. I have written on this matter to the Portuguese authorities and I have raised it personally with the European Commission which is to hold early discussions with Portuguese officials.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the bursaries which have been allocated to the Agricultural and Food Research Council in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The Agricultural and Food Research Council receives about half its funds by way of grant-in-aid from the Department and half by way of payment from the Agriculture Departments for commissioned research. The council does not receive bursaries from either source, or from any other.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many redundancies and institute closures have arisen within the Agricultural and Food Research Council in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The numbers of compulsory redundancies since 1979 are as follows:

Financial Years	Total
1980-81	0
1981-82	0
1982-83	4
1983-84	34

Financial Years	Total
1984-85	*91
	*129

* Estimated

The total number of voluntary premature retirements (including voluntary redundancies) during the same period is estimated to be 333.

One institute, the Letcombe laboratory, is due to be closed on 31 March 1985; though as from 1 April 1985 the National Institute for Research in Dairying will become the Food Research Institute, Reading, and the Grassland Research Institute, Maidenhead, will be reconstituted as the Animal and Grassland Research Institute (including elements of NIRD's existing work.)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the budget of the Agricultural and Food Research Council during the next three years.

Mr. Brooke: The Agricultural and Food Research Council's grant-in-aid for 1985-86 from the Department, as already announced by my right hon. Friend on 10 January 1985, at column 526, is £50·3 million, including £4·8 million for restructuring. The Advisory Board for the Research Councils has provisionally recommended that the council should receive £49·7 million in 1986-87 (including £3 million for restructuring) and £47·5 million in 1987-88. Final advice on the 1986-87 allocation will be given by the ABRC in late 1985, and for 1987-88 a year later. The balance of the council's annual income is made up of payments for commissioned work, mainly from the Agriculture Departments; the amount of this balance thus depends on the amount of such work, as agreed between the council and the Agriculture Departments.

Open University

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the present rôle of his visiting committee in relation to the Open University; if he has any plans to change the composition or functions of the committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Open University visiting committee's terms of reference are:

"To visit the Open University from time to time to discuss its work and resource needs and, in the light of the Committee's enquiries and of the Government's policies for higher and continuing education, to advise the Secretary of State on the developments proposed by the University and their financial implications; and to consider and advise on questions about the University which may be referred to the Committee by the Secretary of State or on which it may wish to offer advice."

Committee membership is initially for three years. The terms of office of the present members expire this year and consideration will be given to the reconstitution of the committee. There are no plans to change its functions.

Universities (Medical Research)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to monitor the effect of the amended limited list of prescribable drugs on pharmaceutical industry-sponsored research in universities.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Commonwealth Day

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what responses he has had in reply to the posters and leaflets sent to all chief education officers for distribution to schools about celebrating Commonwealth day on 11 March.

Mr. Brooke: The Department's letter to chief education officers did not seek a specific response, but 10 local education authorities have approached the Department with requests for additional copies of the Commonwealth day poster and leaflet.

Careers Advisory Service

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will have discussions with representatives of the National Foundation for Educational Research about their work carried out on demands imposed on further education careers advisers.

Mr. Brooke: No. Careers education and guidance for students in further education, whether through the college itself or the careers service, is provided by the local education authorities, to whose attention I commend the report of the recent NFER study.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources he intends to make available for improving audio-visual and video equipment facilities of further and higher education careers advisory services.

Mr. Brooke: The funding of equipment purchases for maintained colleges of further and higher education is the responsibility of the local education authority concerned. The importance the Government attach to the updating and improvement of information and guidance services in colleges is demonstrated by our decision to fund the development of a comprehensive computer-aided careers guidance system for students and by our support for the educational counselling and credit transfer information service.

Electronic Calculators

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he will issue to local education authorities in respect of the use of electronic calculators by pupils in primary schools both in classroom and examination conditions.

Mr. Dunn: The Cockcroft report pointed to some of the changes that the advent of calculators would bring about in the primary mathematics curriculum; the Department has distributed 100,000 copies of a guide to the report for primary schools, drawing attention to this and other matters. The school curriculum development committee is supporting a pilot project on the mathematics curriculum from six to 13, which is investigating these changes in greater detail.

British Youth Council

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds his Department gives to the British Youth Council; for what purposes; and what funds his Department gives to other voluntary organisations connected with youth.

Mr. Brooke: The grants made by the Department to the British Youth Council are provided for educational purposes. The 1984-85 grant allocation is £107,750. Grants to other voluntary youth organisations are expected to amount to some £3·5 million in 1984-85.

International Youth Year

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds his Department has spent and intends to spend on International Youth Year; and to which organisations connected with International Youth Year his Department has given funds.

Mr. Brooke: Grant-aid to the International Youth Year national co-ordinating committee for England, to the end of this financial year, is expected to amount to £134,850; that for 1985-86 has still to be announced. Grants have been approved for International Youth Year projects undertaken by:

National Council for Voluntary Youth Sevices.
British Youth Council.
British Council of Churches.
Operation Raleigh.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's Inspectorate last visited Warwickshire; what its findings were; and when it is intended that it next visits Warwickshire.

Sir Keith Joseph: The last formal inspection of a school in Warwickshire by Her Majesty's inspectors was of Henley-in-Arden high school in October 1983, the report of which was published in September 1984. Her Majesty's inspectors have continued to visit schools and colleges in Warwickshire since then, some as part of national surveys which have led to published reports. There will be further formal inspections of individual schools and colleges in Warwickshire as necessary as part of Her Majesty's Inspectorate's national programme.

Language Teaching

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to make available resources for the promotion of language teaching in secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The level of resources for the provision of language teaching in schools is a matter for local education authorities and schools themselves to determine.

Food Content Labelling

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he intends to issue to local education authorities in respect of fat and sugar quantities contained in food offered by cafeteria counter services to pupils of primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: None. The responsibility for the nutritional standards of school meals lies with the LEAs.

Research (Budgetary Allocations)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Advisory Board for Research Councils in respect of research spending budgetary allocations.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend received advice on this from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on 30 November 1984 in the form of a report subsequently published under the title "Scientific Opportunities and the Science Budget 1984". Further advice was received by my right hon. Friend on 20 December 1984 and published in January 1985 as "Further Advice on the Science Budget 1984". Copies of both reports have been placed in the Library.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average annual cost to his Department of an assisted places secondary school place; and how this compares with the average annual capitation for a maintained sector secondary school place.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 378]: The estimated average cost of an assisted place in the school year 1984-85 is £1,469. A weighted average of the agreed 1984-85 inter-authority recoupment rates for the same mix of pupils is £1,230.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the proposed closures of grammar schools which have been refused by his Department since 1979, in each case stating the local education authority and year of decision.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 378]: The following table lists proposals to cease to maintain grammar schools which my right hon. Friend or his predecessor have rejected since May 1979.

SCOTLAND

British Youth Council (Scotland)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds his Department gives to the British Youth Council (Scotland); for what purposes; and what funds his Department gives to other youth organisations, including those connected with International Youth Year.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Levels of grant for 1985-86 have not yet been decided. For 1984-85 recurrent grant amounting to £18,504 was paid under the Further Education (Scotland) Regulations 1959-79 towards the administration costs incurred by the British Youth Council (Scotland). For the same period, my Department paid a total of £467,126 recurrent grant under these regulations to other voluntary youth organsiations. Grants given to the International Youth Year Scottish Co-ordinating Committee since 1 April 1983 amount to £39,794. It is expected that all youth organisations will promote International Youth Year.

Illegitimacy

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in implementing the proposals of the Law Commission on illegitimacy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I have nothing to add to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 6 June 1984 at column 193.

Montgomery Committee Report

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his consideration of the recommendations of the Montgomery committee report on the powers and functions of Island councils, with particular regard to the effects the recommendations may have on the incidence of expenditure on police forces in other local authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend hopes shortly to announce his conclusions on the recommendations of the committee of inquiry, chaired by Sir David Montgomery, into the functions and powers of the Islands councils of Scotland. The recommendations on the arrangements for financing the Northern joint police committee's expenditure are of direct concern only to the three Islands councils and Highland regional council; whether there will be any implications for other police authorities can be considered only when final decisions on the recommendations have been taken.

Tenants (Repairs)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish draft regulations under section 17A of the Tenants' Rights Etc. (Scotland) Act 1980 giving details of the scheme to give tenants the right to carry out repairs; when he anticipates the scheme will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Draft regulations were issued to interested organisations for comment on 9 November 1984. The closing date for comments was 31 December 1984. My Department is at present assessing the representations received and I envisage that final regulations will be laid before Parliament once this process has been completed with a view to implementation later in the year.

Building Regulations

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to commission an independent report to inquire into the consequences of proposed changes in building regulations prior to any legislation to implement these changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: No. Adequate procedures are laid down by statute for consultation with the Building Standards Advisory Committee and with other interested bodies on proposed building standards regulations, and all regulations are subject to parliamentary approval.

Fishing Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total weight and value of landings of both white fish and shellfish at those fishing ports situated in the maritime areas covered by the Highlands and Islands Development Board, for each of the last five years; and what proportion of the total Scottish catch those landings represent.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

Prisons

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to eliminate overcrowding in Scottish prisons.

Mr. Ancram: The present overcrowding in the Scottish penal system mainly affects Edinburgh and Barlinnie prisons and Longriggend remand institution. An increase in the adult population, particularly remand prisoners, has created an imbalance in the system and action taken to remedy this includes redesignating a young offenders institution for adults and transferring some under 21 remands from Edinburgh prison to Polmont young offenders institution. In the longer term, the reopening early in 1986 of Greenock prison following redevelopment and the completion early in 1987 of phase II of Shotts prison should virtually eliminate overcrowding, provided that the inmate population does not increase significantly beyond the present level.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on prison building for each year since 1974 giving figures to date; and what will be the total bill for the cost of repairing Peterhead prison.

Mr. Ancram: Capital expenditure on prison building in Scotland since 1974 is as follows:

	£ million
1974-75	3·379
1975-76	3·600
1976-77	6·559
1977-78	1·696
1978-79	1·737
1979-80	1·507
1980-81	2·880
1981-82	3·891
1982-83	4·373
1983-84	5·458
1984-85	*8·535

* Estimate

Expenditure on refurbishing Peterhead prison amounts to some £1·4 million. This includes £500,000 for the new 10-cell unit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when Shotts prison building will be completed and for how many places.

Mr. Ancram: The phase II development of Shotts prison is programmed for completion early in 1987 and will provide 468 inmate places.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what future spending on Scottish prisons has been planned by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer my hon. Friend to pages 76 and 80-82 of "Public Expenditure to 1987-88: a Commentary on the Scotland Programme." The main project after Shotts prison phase II will be the new maximum security prison at Peterhead, work on which is programmed to begin in 1987 and to be completed in 1990 at an estimated cost of £12·3 million.

Remand Prisoners

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of remand prisoners in Scottish prisons during each month over the last 12 months.

Mr. Ancram: The numbers of remand prisoners held in Scottish penal establishments on the first Tuesday in each of the past 12 months are as follows:

	Male	Female
1984
March	890	48
April	910	41
May	821	51
June	935	52
July	860	49

Fine Defaulters

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fine defaulters are now in prison in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The latest information available is for December 1984. During that month, the average daily number of persons detained in default of payment of a fine in Scottish penal establishments was 248.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

2. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has considered the report of the Commission for Racial Equality on "Racial Equality and the Youth Training Scheme"; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. I understand that the Manpower Services Commission is drawing upon the recommendations made in the report to develop a package of measures aimed at ensuring that its policy of equal opportunities is fully implemented.

15. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I frequently discuss the youth training scheme with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission, and I plan to do so next on 11 March.

20. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied with the training opportunities provided for young women on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. The full range of training opportunities within the youth training scheme is open equally to young women and young men.

24. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current numbers of vacant places on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I regret the information is not available in the precise form requested. However, at the end of January, some 382,000 youth training scheme places had been approved in the current financial year, while there were around 293,000 young people in training. It is not possible to give a precise figure of vacant places mainly because not all approved places will actually be available for occupation.

37. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will identify those areas of the country where there are more offers of training places than there are youth training scheme trainees coming forward to fill them; if he is satisfied with the publicity given to the youth training scheme in those areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission must provide enough youth training scheme places to cater for eligible young people and to meet the Government's undertaking to unemployed minimum age school leavers of an offer of a suitable place on the scheme by Christmas. Inevitably this means that in all areas a number of training places will exist that are not filled.

I am satisfied with the publicity given to the youth training scheme which has helped to attract more than 360,000 entrants to the scheme between April 1984 and January 1985 and over 370,000 entrants during the previous financial year.

41. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied with the take-up of places on the youth training scheme in Berkshire.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. By the end of January more than 3,000 young people had entered the youth training scheme in Berkshire. I am pleased to say that our undertaking to all unemployed minimum age school leavers of an offer of a place on the scheme by Christmas was once again effectively met in the county in 1984.

73. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the availability of statistics on accidents on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will continue to make statistics on accidents to trainees on the youth training scheme available to this House. Statistics are also made available to area manpower boards. Accident statistics for the youth training scheme are normally prepared by the Manpower Services Commission on a quarterly basis for each of the 55 training division administrative areas and they are classified into fatalities, major injuries (as defined in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980) and minor injuries. The Manpower Services Commission's figures will include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed in the normal way.

78. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State Employment what is his latest estimate of the propor of youth training scheme leavers who have got jobs.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information is now avail from the first of a series of regular monthly survey young people who leave the youth training scheme. was carried out during December 1984 and January and covered a national sample of 15 per cent. of yo people who left the scheme in June 1984. The results sh that 56 per cent. of those young people responding w in jobs at the time of the survey. A further 2 per cent. w on a full-time education or training course and 4 per c were on another youth training scheme.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of S for Employment if he will make a statement on effectiveness of the youth training scheme in the w midlands.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The youth training scheme proved very successful in the second year in the w midlands, with school leavers clearly recognising advantages and opportunities which a high quality traini scheme can offer. I am further encouraged both by higher number of entrants to schemes so far this year a the wider range of places being made available in the ar

Mr. Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State Employment if he will take steps to resolve the proble created by wages councils instructing certain employers pay their young workers higher wages than the maximu level laid down by his Department for purposes of you training scheme grant.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Most employers affected wages council decisions are able to take part in the you workers scheme, although, regrettably, some cannot. W are bearing this problem in mind in our continuing scrutin of the operation and effects of the wages councils syste

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State f Employment if he will publish for each available quart since the inception of the youth training scheme th incidence rate of major and fatal accidents to trainees.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1985, c. 18-19]: The following table sets out th quarterly incidence rates per 100,000 trainees on the yout training scheme, separately for major and fatal accidents for the periods requested, calculated on the basis of th average number of trainees in training.

Period	Average numbers in training	*Accidents		Quarterly incidence rate per 100,000 trainees†
		Fatalities	Major injuries‡	Fatalities	Major injurie

* The Manpower Services Commission's accident figures for the youth training scheme are compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Commission's figures will include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed (3 of the fatal accidents would not have been reportable). Accident incidence rates for the youth training scheme will therefore overstate the true position in comparison with figures for the employed populations generally.

† The quarterly incidence rates quoted in the table should be interpreted with caution because they may not be as meaningful as annual rates.
‡ Major injuries are classified according to severity criteria laid down in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980.

Skillcentres

17. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding the proposed closure of skillcentres.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since my right hon. Friend's statement in the House on 29 November about the skillcentre proposals made to the Manpower Services Commission by the skillcentre training agency, my right hon. Friend and I have received some 190 letters on the subject and met seven delegations.

32. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received about the proposed closure of the Southampton skillcentre annex.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My hon. Friend has been to see me about the position in Southampton and I am to have further discussions with him and representatives of the Southampton chamber of commerce next week. Since the skillcentre training agency's proposals were announced on 28 November, my right hon. Friend and I have received around 11 letters on the proposed closure of the Southampton skillcentre annexe and in addition several hon. Members have put questions. I know that the commission chairman has also received a number of letters on the subject and that meetings have been held between his officials and Southampton city council, Hampshire county council, and the Hampshire Development Association.

63. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the skillcentres.

76. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of skillcentres.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Members to the statement my right hon. Friend made to the House on 21 February at column 1234.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Employment if in view of the representations which he has received, he will agree to maintain and sustain the Southampton skillcentre and its annexe.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The skillcentre training agency's plan, accepted by the Manpower Services Commission, is based upon its judgment of what represents the best way forward for the skillcentre network as a whole. It proposes to retain Southampton skillcentre, but close its annexe.

My right hon. Friend believed it right to accept the Commission's professional judgment on the shape of the network but has particularly asked the chairman to make quite sure in implementing the plan that no individual closure takes place before satisfactory alernative provisions have been identified.

I will, of course, pass on the points made by my hon. Friend about the Southampton skillcentre annexe to the chairman of the commission.

Ethnic Monitoring

18. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on proposals for ethnic monitoring in unemployment benefit offices.

Mr. Alan Clark: Arrangements to collect statistics on ethnic minority unemployment remain under active consideration and my right hon. Friend will make a statement in due course.

Early Retirement

19. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to increase the opportunity for early retirement for the over-60s.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend announced in the House on 12 November 1984 that the full-time job release scheme, due to end on 31 March 1985, would continue until 31 March 1986, and that we would be revising the present part-time job release scheme to make it more attractive to both employers and employees.

Community Programme

21. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received any representations regarding recent rule changes to the community programme.

29. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received concerning the rule change on the community programme affecting the eligibility of women to participate in that scheme.

35. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding the rules for eligibility to the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: During the seven months since my right hon. Friend announced the changes to the community programme, on 30 July 1984, we have received some 400 letters. I have also met Lady Platt, chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission.

51. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the progress of the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The community programme continues to make excellent progress. At the end of January some 131,000 people were taking part.

Labour Statistics

22. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,341,000, which represents an unemployment rate of 13·9 per cent. We are gravely concerned about the level of unemployment indicated by these figures, and we are this year spending around £2 billion on employment and training measures. However, sustainable employment depends on a healthy economy, competitive industry and a more flexible labour market, and our policies are directed to those ends.

23. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of unemployed; and what proportion of these are under 25 years of age.

55. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of unemployed; and what proportion are under 25 years of age.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,340,958. Of these 38·5 per cent. were under 25 years of age.

30. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people under the age of 21 years are unemployed; and what percentage this is of the total number unemployed.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom under 20 years of age was 571,664, which was 17·1 per cent. of the total. The available analysis by age does not separate those under 21.

38. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current numbers of people unemployed.

Mr. Alan Clark: On the 10 January 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,340,958.

40. Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Employment what region of the United Kingdom has the highest rate of unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985, the unemployment rate in Northern Ireland was 21·3 per cent., which is higher than for all other regions of the United Kingdom.

45. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under 25 years of age are currently unemployed.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985 the number of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the United Kingdom was 1,286,183.

54. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the numbers of people in the United Kingdom who will be seeking employment in each of the next three years; and how these figures compare with the current number.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department does not make forecasts of the number of people seeking employment.

Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for over 12 months at the most recent date; and how many are over 50 years of age.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985, the number of claimants who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,316,017. Of these, 318,213 were over 50 years of age.

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of Stat Employment how many people have been unemploy over one year, two years, and three years, respectiv the most recent available date.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of Sta Employment how many people have been unemploy over 12 months and over two years at the latest ava date.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985, the num claimants in the United Kingdom who had unemployed for over one year was 1,316,017. Of 761,409 had been unemployed for over two year 454,154 for over three years.

75. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of for Employment what percentage of the registered in population, male and female, are in part employment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not availal the precise form requested. Information about the nu of employees, male and female, in full-time and part employment can be provided but only for those dates censuses of employment are taken. Censuse employment have been taken triennially since 197 the latest results are for September 1981. At that there were 21,314 million employees in employme Great Britain with 21 per cent. working part-time. were 12,229 million male workers and 9,085 m female workers with 5·9 per cent. of the males and per cent. of the females working part-time.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State Employment how much of the increase in employme 1984 was in full-time jobs; and how many married wo returned to work in 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: Between September 1983 September 1984 the employed labour force is estimat have increased by 342,000. Within this total the nu of women in part-time work increased by 207,000, wo in full-time work by 54,000, and men by 81,000. Num of men in part-time work are available only for censu employment dates. It is estimated that the numbe married women in work increased by about 175,000

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State Employment if he will make a statement on the l unemployment figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Bootle (Roberts) earlier today.

Job Release Scheme

25. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State Employment whether he will make a statement on future of the job release scheme.

26. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State Employment whether he has any plans to expand the release scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: As my right hon. Friend announ to the House on 12 November 1984 at column 444, present full time job release scheme will continue, with change in the eligible age groups until 31 March 1986. part-time job release scheme will similarly operate unti

March 1986, also with no change in the eligibility age groups, but it is being revised to make it more attractive to both employers and employees. Details will be announced in the very near future.

Small Businesses

27. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to modify the application of the Sex Discrimination Act and Race Relations Act to small businesses.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are currently reviewing the legislative burden on small firms and will be making announcements on their conclusions in due course.

48. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of people in work in the private sector are employed in small businesses in the United Kingdom, the United States of America, France and West Germany.

Mr. Alan Clark; No recent figures are available but estimates relating to 1976 suggest that just over one-third of private sector employment in the United Kingdom is in small businesses. Because of differences in the sources, definitions and time periods covered by the available statistics for other countries it is impossible to make valid international comparisons of the proportion of employment in the private sector which is in small businesses.

Factory Inspectors

28. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has had any discussions with the Health and Safety Executive about increasing the number of factory inspectors in post.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I meet the director-general of the executive and his colleagues from time to time to discuss many aspects of the work of the executive. The staffing of the executive and measures to improve the efficient use of staff have been topics covered by such discussions.

69. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to discuss with the Manpower Services Commission increasing the number of factory inspectors.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Manpower Services Commission has no responsibilities for the staffing of the Factory Inspectorate.

Merseyside and Liverpool

31. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the county of Merseyside and in the city of Liverpool since his appointment as Secretary of State.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that this information is not available. Information on job losses is not collected. Net changes in employment can be supplied but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are conducted. Censuses of employment have been taken triennially since 1978. Results of the current, September 1984, census of employment are scheduled to become available towards the end of this year.

Amble

33. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of unemployment in the Amble employment exchange area at the most recent available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Information Technology

34. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the numbers of skilled staff available to employers in information technology and allied fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's strategy is directed towards encouraging industry to assume its proper responsibilities for identifying and meeting its manpower requirements. Our support for employers' training efforts will be focussed on those skills in real demand, particularly in information and other new technologies. Recommendations for action are set out in two reports so far issued by the information technology skills shortages committee.

Job Creation

36. Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to create permanent jobs for the long-term unemployed as an alternative to increasing the number of temporary places on Manpower Services Commission special measures.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Our employment and training measures are one element in the Government's policies to achieve sustained economic growth. It is only through such growth that more permanent jobs for unemployed people will be created.

57. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consider providing funds to the public services and voluntary organisations to create permanent jobs as an alternative to expanding Manpower Services Commission special measures.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We already review regularly our employment and training measures in order to ensure their objectives continue to justify the use of taxpayers' money and could not be achieved more cost-effectively by alternative uses of that money.

Liverpool

39. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for employment how many under 25-year-olds are unemployed in the Liverpool travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985 the number of unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in the old Liverpool travel-to-work area was 38,626. Corresponding information for the new travel-to-work areas become available later this year.

Employment Protection

42. Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to reduce employees' rights by seeking to amend employment protection legislation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The employment protection legislation is kept under constant review. Parliament will be informed of any plans to amend it.

Young Persons (Training)

43. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people under the age of 25 years currently receive some type of approved training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information on all those who receive recognised training is not collected. However, it is estimated that there are currently about 310,000 young people under the age of 25 years on training schemes funded by the Manpower Services Commission.

Special Employment Measures

44. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has considered the proposals sent to him by the Association of Directors of Social Services that he should expand his special employment measures by the establishment of supplementary employment grant to allow for the employment of additional staff to care for the elderly, the sick, the physically and mentally handicapped, the mentally ill and other needy groups.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend, together with a number of other Ministers, received a copy of the Association of Directors of Social Services' letter of 14 January to the Prime Minister. We consider very carefully all suggestions to help unemployed people including whether they appear to offer a more cost-effective use of taxpayers' money than our existing employment measures.

Trade Unions (Reform)

46. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans for further legislation to reform the trade unions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Trade Union Act 1984, designed to ensure that trade unions are more democratic and their leaders more accountable to their members, will not come fully into effect until later this year. It is too early to say what further specific legislative measures may be needed.

Schoolchildren

47. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many convictions there were in the years 1980 to 1984 for illegal employment of schoolchildren.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The responsibility for the enforcement of legislation relating to the restrictions on employment of children in "industrial undertakings" (such as factories, construction sites, mines and quarries and so on) and agriculture falls to the Health and Safety Executive. The number of convictions obtained by HSE Inspectors for child employment offences in these undertakings is as follows:

	Convictions
1980	18
1981	5
1982	10
1983	*8
1984	*1

* Provisional.

Basildon

49. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of Employment how many long-term unemployed in Basildon; and what plans he has to all situation.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 January 1985, a tot claimants had been unemployed for over one Basildon jobcentre area. Their immediate pr employment can be improved by participation our employment and training measures. But th term prospects depend upon sustainable growth and jobs, which is the objective of our economi

GCHQ

50. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of Employment if he will make a statement on communication from the International Organisation about the status of Government co tions headquarters's employees at Cheltenham.

Mr. Tom King: I understand that the Gov letter of 4 January to the International Labour Or about GCHQ has been considered by the com freedom of association and is now to be conside committee of experts on the applications of co and recommendations.

Enterprise Allowance

52. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of Employment what percentage of those who re enterprise allowance are no longer trading 18 mo start up.

Mr. Alan Clark: About 30 per cent.

MSC Special Programmes

53. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of Employment whether he will meet representativ voluntary sector to discuss the operation of M Services Commission special programmes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government reco important contribution the voluntary sector mak success of a number of the measures operate Manpower Services Commission. I have had r requests for a meeting but I would certainly seeing representatives of the voluntary sector wished to discuss any particular issues.

Accident Reports

56. Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of Employment what arrangements exist for re accidents to be made by employers to the He Safety Executive other than fatal accidents, injuries and dangerous occurrences as define Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occ Regulations

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no formal arrangements for the reporting of accidents by employers direct to the Health and Safety Executive other than those made by the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations.

Employment and Wages

58. Mr. Prescott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received from the Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry on the relationship between employment and wages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not recently received representations from either the Confederation of British Industry or the Trades Union Congress. My right hon. Friend presented a summary of the evidence in a paper to the National Economic Development Council on 6 February. This paper is now published and available from the National Economic Development Office.

Engineers

59. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to encourage an increase in the number of qualified engineers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Securing an adequate supply of people, including qualified engineers, with up-to-date skills to meet the demands of new technology is one of the main objectives of the Government's adult training strategy. However, employers have the major responsibility for investing in the training of the people they require. The Government's financial support for adult training will concentrate increasingly on the Manpower Services Commission's pump-priming role and gives priority to those subjects related to new technology, including engineering.

Wages Inspectors

60. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors are currently in post.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are 118 wages inspectors in post. Two vacant posts are in the process of being filled.

Jobs (National Insurance)

65. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department is undertaking any research into the connection between the creation of jobs and the level of employee national insurance contribution.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department is not undertaking any research in isolation into the connection between employee national insurance contributions and the level of employment. Some research has been commissioned from the Centre for Labour Economics into the factors that determine the demand for employment. This has included the cost of labour to employees, one item of which is employees' national insurance contributions.

Job Splitting

66. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the job-splitting scheme.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the future operation of the job-splitting scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: As my right hon. Friend announced on 12 November 1984 at col 444, we are continuing the job-splitting scheme in 1985-86 with an increased grant and with further changes to make it more attractive to employers. The details of the proposed changes will be announced in the very near future.

Unemployment (Haverhill)

67. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to seek to reduce unemployment in Haverhill.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are committed to maintaining their economic policies which are directed at holding down inflation and public borrowing while encouraging enterprise, flexibility and competitiveness in industry and the labour market. That is the only way to generate lasting jobs in Haverhill and elsewhere. In the meantime we are spending over £2 billion this year on a range of employment and training measures to help the unemployed.

Apprenticeships

68. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people were undertaking craft apprenticeships in the engineering industry on (a) 31 December 1979 and (b) 31 December 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the engineering industry training board estimates that the number of young people undertaking engineering craft apprenticeships was 38,000 for the training year from September 1979 to August 1980, and 37,500 for the last complete training year, to August 1984.

The numbers entering traditional apprenticeships will become increasingly irrelevant as a measure of the real level of skills training being undertaken by industry because of both the reform of existing arrangements and the substantial provision of initial skills training now taking place under the youth training scheme.

Wages Councils

70. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the workings of wages councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are currently examining the operation and effects of the wages council system. We have not yet come to any final conclusions.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the activities of wages councils in 1984; and whether he is satisfied with their results.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are currently examining the operation and effects of the wages council system, including present and past activities of councils. We have not yet come to any final conclusions.

Unemployment (East Anglia)

71. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in East Anglia.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are committed to maintaining their economic policies, which are directed at holding down inflation and public borrowing while encouraging enteprise, flexibility and competitiveness in industry and the labour market. That is the only way to generate lasting jobs in East Anglia and elsewhere. In the meantime we are spending over £2 billion this year on a range of employment and training measures to help the unemployed, which are currently benefiting over 13,500 people in East Anglia.

Training

72. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to seek to encourage industry to spend more money on training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We have launched a national campaign to raise awareness of the importance of adult training. One of the key messages to employers is that expenditure on training is an investment as essential as investment in plant and equipment. We are encouraging employers to reform their own training arrangements to make this investment more cost-effective. As part of the restructuring of its own adult training programmes, the Manpower Services Commission will give particular emphasis to initiatives which encourage greater attention by employers to adult training needs. For example the Commission has introduced a scheme of local grants to encourage employers' own training efforts. The Manpower Services Commission and Education Departments are also offering financial help to assist employers to collaborate with training providers to define their training needs and explore possible ways of meeting them.

Skills Training

74. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the commissioner of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss skills training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss a wide range of issues, including training.

EC (Unemployment)

77. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps have been taken by the European Economic Community to reduce unemployment within the member states.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Community measures which help employment include those which promote vocational training, employment opportunities and new technology, and the European social and regional development funds. The further development of the common internal market of 270 million people would make a major contribution to helping employment.

School Leavers

79. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of Employment whether he is satisfied with th opportunities for school leavers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Our economic p designed to provide the conditions under whi and commerce can create sustainable jobs leavers and others. Meanwhile, the Gover concerned to see that there are constru worthwhile opportunities for young people.

Thames Water (Chlorine Storage)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of Employment what plans exist to protect community in the event of a major industri occuring at the Thames Water site in Lea Br Leyton where chlorine is stored; and if he w statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Thames water au drawn up emergency procedures to be follow event of a chlorine leak. Storage arrangements are such that the risk of a major industrial considered to be remote. The site is subject to t of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulat but the amount of chlorine stored does not r preparation of emergency plans under the regula Health and Safety Executive has informed both authority and the fire authority about the a substances stored including chlorine and the them.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of Employment what safety arrangements t regulating the Thames Water site in Lea Bri Leyton where chlorine is stored.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The site is subject to t and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and Notification of Installations Handling Substances Regulations 1982 and the Control of Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984. Th tion is enforced by HM inspectors of factories, out regular inspections.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of Employment what is the number of occasions, relevant dates in the past five years when the Water site in Lea Bridge road, Leyton where c stored, has been inspected by the Health an Inspectorate; and whether all safety recomm made have been met.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The site was vistited inspectors of factories on six occasions during the years, on 12.6.80, 2.7.80, 14.8.80, 31.3.83, and 8.2.85. At these visits the chlorine arrangements were reviewed. Recommendaations the earlier visits have been met by the constru improved storage facilities, including a new building.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of S Employment if he will release the London bor Waltham Forest and other relevant public bodies constraints of official secrecy and other regulation they can fully consider safety requirements and emergency plans in respect of the Thames Water sites in the borough where chlorine is stored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The local authority and the fire authority have been informed by the Health and Safety Executive of the location of this site and the nature and quantities of materials stored. There is no legislation which prevents local authorities from fully considering safety requirements and emergency plans of sites in their area as they affect the authorities' responsibilities for public health, public safety and the protection of the environment.

Accident Hazard Areas

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all the safety regulations relating to category one accident hazard areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 distinguish a set of sites where potential major hazards exist. Health and safety at work legislation (the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 and relevant regulations and orders) apply.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment in manufacturing industry for each year since 1973 to the present time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the available information for Great Britain from 1973 to 1984. Figures are given for males and females in full-time and part-time employment using information from the censuses of employment carried out in June each year from 1973 to 1978 and in September 1981, the most recent census for which results are available. Censuses were not carried out in 1979 or 1980 and the estimates of full-time and part-time employment for those years and for June 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 relate only to females; separate estimates of males in full-time and part-time employment are not made between censuses of employment.

Management Information System

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will name and describe the different types of regular report made from employment offices and jobcentres as part of his Department's management information system.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The public employment service requires a wide range of regular reports from its local managers designed to monitor performance against planned objectives and the pattern and scale of the business handled by jobcentres, and to guide decisions on the allocation of resources.

I shall write to the hon. Member shortly with a comprehensive list of the returns concerned and I shall place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people deemed capable of only sheltered employment are employed by (a) Remploy Limited in workshops, (b) sheltered workshops operated by (i) voluntary organisations and (ii) local authorities, other than those for the blind, (c) workshops for blind people operated by (i) voluntary organisations and (ii) local authorities and (d) on sheltered employment placements within open industry (i) by Remploy, (ii) by local authorities and (iii) by voluntary organisations.

Mr. Alan Clark: At 31 December 1984, 15,456 severely disabled people were employed in the following types of provision:

	Remploy	Local authorities*	Voluntary bodies
Workshops for the blind	—	†2,549 (of whom 1,229 are sighted)	—
Other workshops	8,844	1,748	1,285
Sheltered placements (Sheltered Industrial Groups)	69	679	282
TOTAL	8,913	4,976	1,567

* Figures include 1,223 people (1,000 in workshops for the blind and 223 in other workshops) who are employed in workshops run by voluntary organisations acting as agents for local authorities.

† The majority of workshops set up to provide employment for blind people now also employ sighted disabled workers.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated capital cost of the establishment of a 30-place sheltered workshop for disabled people.

Mr. Alan Clark: The capital cost of each sheltered workshop varies in the light of such factors as the locality, type of building, the terms on which the property is to be acquired and the range and value of the plant and machinery that is required. However, the Manpower Services Commission estimate that the average cost of building and equipping a 30-place sheltered workshop would be in excess of £500,000.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the capitation grant ceiling which the Manpower Services Commission will pay on behalf of people in sheltered employment to (a) local authorities, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) Remploy in 1984-85 and 1985-86, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: The final per capita ceilings for revenue support in 1984-85 have been set at £2,490 for workshops run by local authorities and £3,050 for those run by independent volluntary organisations. The Manpower Services Commission will be announcing provisional ceilings for 1985-86 as soon as possible, and I shall write to the right hon. Member when this information is available. Financial support for Remploy is on a different basis and is subject to a cash limit of £56·570 million in 1984-85 and £59·290 million in 1985-86.

Employability Fortnight

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Employment what assistance his Department and the Manpower Services Commission are giving to the Royal Association for Disablement and Rehabilitation's employability fortnight 15 to 26 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend and I warmly welcome this initiative by the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation. I have agreed to speak at the Manchester conference and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for the disabled has agreed to speak at the London conference. Senior manpower services officials will speak at the Wakefield and Birmingham conferences. In addition, the commission has been in discussion with the royal association, providing local knowledge about employers for whom invitations to the conferences would be appropriate. Information and publicity material on commission services for employers and disabled people are being supplied for use at the conferences. The employability fortnight will also be another major opportunity for bringing the new code of good practice on the employment of disabled people to the attention of employers.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people (a) deemed capable of open employment and (b) deemed appropriate for sheltered employment were unemployed on 31 December of each year from 1974 to 1984; and if he will give each figure as a percentage of all registered disabled people at that date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures requested are as follows. They relate to those unemployed disabled people registered for work with the Manpower Services Commission's jobcentres and local authority careers offices. Registration for employment at jobcentres became voluntary in October 1982, and the figures for 1982, 1983 and 1984 therefore relate only to those unemployed disabled people who chose so to register. The percentages relate to unemployed registered, disabled people only, expressed as proportions of all registered disabled people.

Fluoride

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply of 27 February, Official Report, column 184, to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, what tests of durability and resistance to damage are carried out on road tankers subject to the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 when carrying hydrofluorosilicic acid solutions in bulk.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under regulation 7 of the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 the operator of a road tanker is required to set out a written scheme for both initial and periodic examination and testing of a carrying tank. The examination and testing must be carried out by a competent person who must certify that the tank is suitable for the purpose. The tests to be carried out are for the operator and competent person to determine, but they are likely to include a pressure test, a check that the material is compatible with the product being carried and examination for signs of cracks, corrosion and damage liable to weaken the integrity of the tank.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his answer on 27 February, Official Report, column 184, to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, what are the principal hazards in the event of a fire, spillage or other accident involving the carriage in bulk by road tankers subject to the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 of hydrofluorosilicic acid solutions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The principal hazards are corrosivity and toxicity. The substance is toxic by absorption through the skin, inhalation or ingestion. When heated in a fire, or by reaction with water, the substance decomposes to emit toxic and corrosive fumes.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply of 27 February, Official Report, column 184, to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn, what tests of durability and resistance to damage by impact or tearing are carried out on bags containing sodium fluorosilicate which are labelled in accordance with the Classification Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Sodium fluorosilicate is imported by sea in plastic lined multilayered paper bags which have to meet the requirements of the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code issued by the International Maritime Organisation. The requirements relate to waterproofing and include a drop test. They are consistent with the provisions of the Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984 which lay down a general prohibition against the supply or conveyance by road of a substance, to which they apply, unless it is in a package which is suitable for that purpose.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the requirements of the Health and Safety Executive with respect to protective clothing being made available to employees of statutory water undertakers who are expected to handle containers of fluoride.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Water authorities' employees must be provided with protective clothing when they are involved in filling or emptying containers or bags of fluorine compounds. This consists of appropriate overalls, boots and gloves, together with respiratory protection and eye protection.

Youth Training (Accidents)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in circumstances where the Manpower Services Commission's area manpower boards are given details of particular accidents to youth training scheme trainees, it is the practice of commission staff to remind board members of the possibility of criminal or civil proceedings arising from the accident; whether he will advise the Manpower Services Commission that discussion of the details of accidents by boards is inappropriate in such circumstances; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

RAF Basic Trainer

81. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any estimate has been prepared of the number of jobs likely to be created through the award of a contract for the new Royal Air Force basic trainer.

Mr. Butler: An assessment is being prepared based on information provided by each of the four contenders.

Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough

Mr. Critchley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with regard to commercial flying and industrial usage of the Royal Aircraft Establishment airfield at Farnborough.

Mr. Lee: Tenders will shortly be invited for the lease of a 50-acre civil enclave on the airfield as a base for general aviation and light industrial use. Our aim is to make fuller and more cost-effective use of the airfield and at the same time to help alleviate the shortage of facilities for business aviation in the south-east of England.

Local authorities and commercial interests have been fully consulted on these proposals. Special attention has been given to the arrangements under which general aviation might be introduced at Farnborough, in order to strike a fair balance between the commercial needs of operators and the proper concerns of local people. Trials conducted to measure the noise of typical business aircraft which would operate from Farnborough have confirmed that they are much quieter than the military aircraft which operate from the Royal Aircraft Establishment. Restrictions will, however, be placed on the type, weight, movements and operating hours of business aircraft permitted to use the airfield. Liaison between the RAE, the enclave lessee and the local authorities will be established.

Anti-ballistic Missile System

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to develop a space-based anti-ballistic missile system before the expiry of the expected service life of Trident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: The Government have no plans to development a space-based anti-ballistic missile system.

Underwater Testing

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies currently providing services for the operation and maintenance of the British underwater test and evaluation centre facility at Kyle of Lochalsh which have received financial assistance from the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. Lee: From 1 April 1985 services for the operation and maintenance of the BUTEC facility at Kyle of Lachalsh will be provided by RCA Limited, Sunbury on Thames, Middlesex and Bond Helos, Aberdeen. Neither of these companis receives financial assistance from the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Military Training Areas (Scotland)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of land areas in Scotland which, since January 1983, have been considered for lease or purchse as military training areas.

Mr. Lee: We are ready to consider any suitable areas that become available, but the only land for military training to which serious consideration has been given is at Ardesier (north-east of Inverness) where we are about to complete the purchase of 160 acres.

Air Misses (Western Isles)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many air misses have been recorded in the airspace over and adjacent to the Western Isles in each year since 1970; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into air misses between (a) two civil aircraft and (b) two military aircraft and (c) a civil and a military aircraft.

Mr. Lee: There has been a total of five, each involving one civil and one military aircraft. They occurred in the years 1973, 1974, 1976, 1980 and 1982.

Military Aircraft Practice (Stornoway)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many practice approaches and practice diversions by military aircraft have been carried out at Stornoway airport in each year since 1979; and if he will provide a monthly breakdown of the figures.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 December 1984 at column 504.

WALES

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what approaches he has made to EEC institutions on behalf of Welsh dairy farmers to enable them to qualify for low-interest loans to help them over the present difficulties in the same way as has been open to German dairy farmers.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: None. Welsh dairy producers benefit from the capital grant support system under EC directive 72/159, whereas Germany operates a system of interest relief subsidies.

Fluoridation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those community health councils in Wales which have expressed opposition to fluoridation of water supplies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information on the views of community health councils in Wales on this issue is not available. However, Swansea-Lliw Valley community health council and Ynys Môn community health council have written to our Department within the last two years to register their opposition to fluoridation.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those borough, district and county councils in Wales which have passed a resolution on the addition of fluoride to water supplies, indicating against each one whether a decision was in favour or against.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Voluntary Organisation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any proposals to extend support for the work of the voluntary organisations in Wales.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: A special grants programme will be established, commencing in the 1985-86 financial year, which will enable assistance to be given to national and regional voluntary organisations which promote conservation or environmental improvement work within Wales. Some £60,000 will be available for the programme in 1985-86. Grants will be available to meet administrative costs or to enable organisations to undertake innovatory or experimental projects.

A press notice—a copy of which has been placed in the Library—setting out detailed information on criteria and eligibility is being issued today. I would take this opportunity of encouraging those voluntary organisations who consider they might benefit from such a programme to approach the Department as soon as possible, preferably before the end of March, but no later than 12 April.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers (Loans and Grants)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been disbursed each year since 1972 by way of loans and grants from public funds to farmers for the reclamation of land for agricultural purposes; and what was the acreage of land so reclaimed.

Mrs. Fenner: No loans are made for this purpose and I regret that we do not keep separate statistics of grant paid for land reclamation alone or of the acreage reclaimed. The amount of grant paid in the United Kingdom for land clearance and reclamation in each of the years 1979 to 1983 is as follows. Figures for the years 1972 to 1978 are not available and for 1984 will be available later.

	£ million
1979	1·3
1980	2·0

	£ million
1981	2·0
1982	3·2
1983	3·5

Straw and Stubble Burning

Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research currently funded by his Department into alternatives to straw and stubble burning.

Mrs. Fenner: Current research into alternatives to straw and stubble burning is listed in our "Register of Research and Development on Straw Disposal and Utilisation". I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library. Total public expenditure in 1984-85 approaches £2 million.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will circulate in the Official Report a list of studies made of the total cost of the common agricultural policy to the United Kingdom known to his Department.

Mr. Jopling: Numerous studies have been published about the effects of the common agricultural policy on the United Kingdom, and these vary widely in their scope. A report of a comprehensive study conducted at the University of Newcastle upon Tyne, entitled "The Cost of the Common Agricultural policy" by A. E. Buckwell, D. R. Harvey, K. J. Thompson and K. A. Parton (published in 1982), contains in chapter 4 a review of studies undertaken, some of which are ongoing: a copy of this book is in the Library of the House.

Warble Fly

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will give the date when the Wellcome Foundation Ltd., as manufacturers of Cooper warble fly liquid, submitted evidence showing its safety to the consumer in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968; and where that evidence is now deposited.

Mrs. Fenner: The information necessary for the assessment of the relevant product licence application was submitted on 20 December 1978 and is held on departmental files.

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will place in the Library the evidence in support of his answer to the hon. Member for Holland with Boston on 28 January, Official Report, column 50, that Derris could only be used effectively during a short period of the year when the warble larvae have punctured the hide of an animal.

Mrs. Fenner: As requested, I shall arrange for the evidence to be placed in the Library of the House.

Poultrymeat

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to give protection to British poultrymeat processors from unfair overseas competition.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total annual number of checks made by his Department and by local authorities on the water content, quality and hygiene of imports of poultrymeat since the latest regime was established.

Mrs. Fenner: Responsibility for enforcement of the relevant legislation lies with local authorities and information available to me is insufficient to permit an overall estimate of the number of checks made to be calculated. All imports of poultrymeat must be accompanied by a health certificate, which is subject to scrutiny at the point of import.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions have been brought following checks by his Department and local authorities on the water content, quality and hygiene of imports of poultrymeat in the last three years for which figures are available; and what was the outcome of these prosecutions.

Mr. Fenner: Prosecutions are a matter for local authorities and the information sought is not held centrally. My Department has, however pursued with the appropriate authorities of the exporting countries a number of complaints in relation to the requirements of directive 71/118 and the Poultry Meat (Water Content) Regulations 1984.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what manpower and financial resources are available to his Department and to local authorities to check the water content, hygiene and quality of imports of poultrymeat.

Mrs. Fenner: Enforcement of these provisions is a responsibility of local authorities, which draw as necessary on their overall manpower and financial resources. In addition, my Department's veterinary service is available to advise as requested on poultrymeat hygiene matters.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers are available to his Department and to local authorities to check the water content, quality, and hygiene of imports of poultrymeat at the point of entry and thereafter.

Mrs. Fenner: The Food Act provides powers to examine consignments of imported poultrymeat, to take samples for analysis and to enter premises for these purposes.

Food Labelling

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis he selected the consumer bodies set out in the answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 459, with whom he has commissioned a survey into consumers' attitudes towards and understanding of fat and nutrition labelling of foods; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The consumer bodies concerned had already decided to carry out a survey and we joined them.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has not involved the Health Education Council in research in regard to food labelling.

Mrs. Fenner: We consult widely on any proposals for food labelling as required by section 118 of the Food Act 1984 and the equivalent provision of previous enactments. Those consultations have included the Health Education Council.

Waste (Sea Disposal)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of loads of (a) sewage sludge, (b) industrial waste and (c) dredged spoils destined for sea disposal were sampled in each of the last five years.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985]: Materials for disposal at sea under the provisions of the Dumping at Sea Act 1974 are sampled in a variety of ways according to their nature and their potential harm to the marine environment. For sewage sludge, sampling is undertaken on application for an annual licence. Samples of industrial wastes are taken on initial application and repeated as appropriate in the case of material changes. In addition, 7 per cent. of all vessel sailings undergo inspection by enforcement officers. As for dredged spoils representative samples are taken from all consignments greater than 10,000 tonnes as required by the provisions of the Oslo and London dumping conventions. As such spoils tend to be of constant composition, further samples are not regularly taken.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of sewage sludge was dumped at sea in each year since 1970.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985]: The Government do not collect annual statistics on the proportion of sewage sludge dumped at sea. It has, however, been estimated that the proportion was between about one quarter and one third in the last decade.

Croxteth Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts how many representations the Minister for the Arts has received about the future of Croxteth hall, Liverpool; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1985, c. 245]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts met representatives of the Croxteth community Forum. He advised them that in his view Croxteth does not fall within the terms of clause 44 of the Local Government Bill. It will be transferred to Liverpool city council after the abolition of Merseyside county council.

Speke Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts how many representations the Minister for the Arts has received about the future of Speke hall in Liverpool; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1985, c. 245]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts has had one representation about his intention to transfer the full repairing lease of Speke hall to Liverpool city council after the abolition of Merseyside county council. This was from the National Trust, which owns the hall. He is holding further discussions with it.

Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts how many representations the Minister for the Arts has received about the future of the Philharmonic hall in Liverpool; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1985, c. 245]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts has received several representations from members of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society about the future of the Philharmonic hall in Liverpool. He has undertaken to consult the society in the course of preparation of the relevant property order provided for in clause 92 of the Local Government Bill.

Royal Shakespeare Company

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts to what extent the Arts Council subsidy allocated to the Royal Shakespeare Company was reduced for 1985 in comparison with 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: The subsidy is to be increased, not reduced. The figures are:

1984-85	4,900,000
1985-86	4,997,000

NORTHERN IRELAND

Vehicle Thefts

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vehicles were stolen in each police division in Northern Ireland in each of the last four years.

Mr. Scott: The numbers of vehicles taken without their owners' consent in each police division in each of the last four years are as follows:

Division	1981	1982	1983		1984
			1 January to 30 September	1 October to 31 December

TOTALS	5,859	5,338	4,747	1,749	6,905

On 1 October 1983 the number of RUC divisions was reduced from 16 to 12 and divisional boundaries were redrawn.

Joyriders

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been killed or injured by joyriders in stolen vehicles in Northern Ireland in each of the last four years.

Mr. Scott: Road accident statistics are not maintained in a way which would allow deaths and injuries caused by drivers of stolen vehicles to be separately identified.

Limited List Prescribing

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether it is his intention that the limited list of drugs prescribable on the National Health Service in Northern Ireland should be identical to that in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Engineering

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any public funds being put into the proposed successor to the Molins engineering factory at Maydown are being paid on the same terms as funds paid to other engineering firms in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are now employed in general engineering in the Londonderry, East constituency; and what were the numbers in each of 1975, 1980, 1981 and 1983.

Dr. Boyson: In 1981 (the latest date for which information is available) there were 1,028 employees in employment in engineering in the Londonderry, East constituency. The corresponding figure for 1975 was 444. Information is not available for the other years requested.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been paid in grants by the Local Enterprise Development Unit and the Industrial Development Board and their predecessors to engineering firms in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years and to firms in the local government areas of Londonderry, Limavady, Coleraine, Magherafelt and Strabane during the same years.

Dr. Boyson: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

District Council Members (Expenses)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the allowances and expenses for which members of district councils qualify.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 260]: District councillors qualify for attendance, special responsibility and special loss allowances, the reimbursement of expenses of official and courtesy visits and payments towards expenses incurred in attending conferences and meetings. They are also entitled to travel and subsistence allowances. All of these are determined by regulations made by the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pensions

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost in 1982-83 and 1983-84 of public service pensions including lump sum payments.

Mr. Peter Rees: The total expenditure on pension benefits including lump sums for the main public services, that is the civil service, local government, teachers, national health service, police, firemen and the armed forces, was for 1982-83 £4,330 million and for 1983-84 £4,850 million.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated gross cost of paying public service pensions in the current year including lump sums; and what percentage this represents of the current cost of wages and salaries in relevant pensionable employment in the public sector.

Mr. Peter Rees: The estimated total expenditure in the current year (1984-85) on pension benefits including lump sums for the main public services, that is the civil service, local government, teachers, national health service, police, firemen and the armed forces, is £5,250 million.

This is equivalent to approximately 17·6 per cent. of the estimated total pensionable pay of £29·8 billion for these services this year.

Income Tax (Wage Settlements)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any evidence that income tax cuts leading to lower wage settlements will have an incentive effect.

Mr. Peter Rees: Lower wage settlements will provide an incentive to firms to increase employment. Evidence on the relationship between wages and employment is set out in the recent paper by Treasury officials.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the nature of the causal relationship between a balance of payments surplus on the oil account and a balance of payments deficit on trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Peter Rees: Because the overall balance of payments—current and capital accounts—sums to zero, a surplus on oil account will be associaed with a corresponding deficit on the rest of the current account unless there is a higher surplus on the total current account. One mechanism by which such a change in the structure of the current account occurs is through a change in the real exchange rate.

Food Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1969-70 and for the latest available 12 month period (a) the amount of duties, levies and other protective charges levied on United Kingdom imports of foodstuffs admitted from countries not benefiting from any form of preference and (b) the amount so collected as a percentage of the value of the goods so admitted.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table gives for the financial year 1969-70 and for 1984 the duty and levies on imports of food and live animals chiefly for food (Standard International Trade Classification (rev 2) section 0).

	1969-70	1984
	£ million	£ million
Protective customs duty	34·6	53·5
Agricultural levy	*—	122·8
Total revenue	†34·6	176·2
	per cent.	per cent.
Total revenue as a percentage of value of dutiable goods	8·1	40·1

* Net levy receipts, charged under the provisions of the Agriculture and Horticulture Act 1964, of £0·5 million were also received. EC Agricultural levies superseded these import levies on 1 February 1973.

† As agricultural products were outside the scope of the EFTA convention, some agricultural products of EFTA origin attracted the full rate of duty. Such goods were not separately distinguishable in the duty statistics and have been included in this figure.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many occasions in the last financial year the ex statutory concession was exercised on value added tax construction of self-contained buildings by a charity.

Mr. Hayhoe: During the financial year 1983-84 th were 166 claims for refund of VAT on construct projects carried out under the extra-statutory concess for charities and other voluntary bodies.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many occasions in the last financial year the ex statutory concession was exercised on value added tax imported second hand cars.

Mr. Hayhoe: This information is not collected.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many occasions in the last financial year the ex statutory concession was exercised on value added tax repossessed goods.

Mr. Hayhoe: Available information suggests that t concession is exercised between 1,000 and 1,500 time year.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession w introduced on value added tax on imported secondha cars.

Mr. Hayhoe: The concession was introduced in t financial year 1979-80.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession w introduced on value added tax on the construction of se contained buildings by a charity.

Mr. Hayhoe: The special arrangements for chariti and other voluntary bodies were introduced as an extr statutory concession in the financial year 1978-79.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession w introduced on value added tax on repossessed goods.

Mr. Hayhoe: The present concession was introduc in the year 1976-77, although there have been min alterations to its scope since then.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer he will specify how the imposition, rate and revenue fro value added tax in the United Kingdom differs from ea of the other members of the European Community.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 198 c. 57]: The imposition of value added tax in member stat of the European Community is governed by the six Council directive of 17 May 1977 (77/388/EC), whic prescribes a harmonised structure for the tax and contai detailed rules on its operation. Although member state value added tax systems generally conform with thes provisions, the directive permits certain exemption derogations and transitional provisions, as a result which there are detailed differences in the tax regimes.

On the latest available information, the current rates VAT are understood to be as follows:

	Standard Rate per cent.	Other Rates per cent.
Belgium	19	0, 6, 17, 25, 33
Denmark	22	0
France	18·6	2·1, 4, 5·5, 7, 33⅓
Germany	14	0, 7
Ireland	23	0, 2·2, 10
Italy	18	2, 9, 38
Luxembourg	12	0, 3, 6
Netherlands	19	0, 5
United Kingdom	15	0

Note:
The Irish rates shown will apply from 1 March 1985. Greece has not yet introduced VAT.

The most recent comparable information on VAT revenue in EC member states is for the calendar year 1982 and is as follows:

	£ million*
Belgium	3,807
Denmark	3,290
France	28,781
Germany	24,429

European Community (Agricultural Levy)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the principal agricultural products the amount of the European Economic Community levy collected each year since 1973 under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information for the main categories of agricultural products for the calendar year 1984 is as follows:

	£ million
Cereals	56·1
Meat, including livestock for consumption	9·9
Dairy products	46·1
Other items	40·5
TOTAL	152·6

For previous years, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 4 July 1984, at columns 150-52.

More detailed information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Customs and Excise

Mr. McTaggart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the provincial offices of the investigation division of Customs and Excise and the numbers of staff employed in the investigation division in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: Provincial offices of the investigation division of Customs and Excise are located at:

1. MANCHESTER
4th Floor Aldine House,
New Bailey Street,
West Riverside,
Manchester M3 5FU

2. LEEDS
4th Floor Eastgate House

Bristol BS1 4SW

4. BIRMINGHAM
St. James House

The complement of the investigation division in each of the past five years was:

Year	Complement
1980	469
1981	547
1982	610
1983	614
1984	614

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Neale asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he intends to make in the 714 certificate procedure to permit more participants in the enterprise allowance scheme to commence operation as sub-contractors immediately they cease to qualify for the allowance.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 424]: I have no plans at present to change the rules of the construction industry tax deduction scheme. All applicants for certificates have to satisfy the same conditions. There is nothing to prevent a person who cannot qualify for a certificate working as a self-employed subcontractor.

Company Cars

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much a business user of a company car pays in petrol tax and duty where his annual mileage is 25,000 miles.

Mr. Hayhoe: Typically about £650 a year in petrol duty at the current rate. Value added tax on petrol can be reclaimed in respect of business use.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional cost to a company car user travelling 25,000 miles per annum if petrol duty were increased by 35p per gallon.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is estimated that the additional annual cost would be about £275.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will raise the level of salary, at which taxation of company cars starts, to £12,000 per annum.

Mr. Moore: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Tobacco Products (Taxation)

Mr. Beggs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the level of taxation on tobacco products from (a) organisations representing tobacco producers and (b) organisations representing employees in the tobacco industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Groups throughout the industry, including the Tobacco Advisory Council, have made representations. I have also received a full report of the discussion held with the deputation led by the hon. Member. All the arguments put forward will be carefully considered.

Investment Income

Mr. Silvester asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of married couples where both husband and wife are earning who currently have investment income to aggregate.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1985, c. 291]: It is likely that a high proportion of two-earner married couples have some investment income. The Inland Revenue's survey of personal incomes does not provide information on this point, because of incomplete coverage in the survey of investment income on which liability to basic rate tax has already been satisfied (for example by deduction at source or under the building societies' composite rate arrangements). However, one third of those two earner couples shown in the latest survey (for 1982-83) as having investment income had some of this income recorded as belonging to the wife or owned jointly by the spouses. This should be treated as only a broad indication of the likely proportion for two earner couples in general.

Christmas Tips

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees are estimated to be receiving Christmas tips; and (a) what extra revenue is expected to be raised during 1984-85 as a result of increased attention by the Inland Revenue to assessing these benefits and (b) what are the estimated extra administrative costs involved in collecting the tax involved.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 424-25]: I regret that the detailed information requested is not available centrally.

Taxation

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what increases in taxation would be required if one third of the total sum raised in local rates were raised through direct taxation, value-added tax, and excise duties on all items including tobacco, alcohol and petrol, respectively.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 4 March c. 425]: It is estimated that the changes necessary to an additional £4·4 billion (equivalent to one third of rates revenue at 1984-85 prices) would be of the ord

(i) an increase of just over 4p in the basic rate of i tax; or

(ii) an increase in the standard rate of VAT from 15 pe to 20 per cent; or

(iii) an across-the-board increase of about 35 per cent. excise duty rates.

Tax Rates

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exch if he will estimate the cost of introducing a 25p in £ band rate for the first £500, first £750 and first £1,0 taxable income in 1985-86, in terms of lost revenue t Exchequer.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 4 March c. 426]: The direct revenue costs are estimated to be £575 million, £850 million, and £1,120 mil respectively, in a full year at 1985-86 levels, comp with the income tax regime resulting from statu indexation from 1984-85 of allowances, thresholds bands. The estimates assume that a separate lower band would also be available to a married couple ag the wife's earned income; and that the threshold for hi rates of tax would be unaffected by the introduction o lower rate band.

Broad and Narrow Money

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Re a table showing the increase in the supply of broad m and narrow money in real terms since 1973 and 1 respectively, compared with Germany, the United S of America and Japan.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested contained in the following table. The table prov figures for the growth in the nominal money supply, pr (as measured by the GNP/GDP deflator), and figures the real money supply derived from these. The dat given to 1984Q3, the latest quarter for which there is for all of these countries. Interpretation of these fig ought to take into account any established trends in velocity of circulation.

For the United Kingdom narrow and broad money represented respectively by MO and £M3, the curre targeted aggregates. The series for other countries taken from the IMF's "International Financial Statisti The figures for narrow money for other countries are cl to MO in coverage. They are not necessarily the ta aggregates, so for the US M1 is given as well. With reg to broad money differences in coverage between count are likely to assume greater importance, and there is m scope for distortion (for example, in the United Kingd as a result of financial liberalisation since 1979).

Notes:

(i) Nominal monetary aggregates were deflated by the GNP deflator. While money stock data is end-of-period, for 1973 and 1979 calendar year values for the deflator were used.

(ii) For the United Kingdom "narrow" money is represented by MO and "broad" money by £M3. (Source: Financial Statistics).

(iii) Money supply data for countries other than the United Kingdom is from the IMF's International Financial Statistics. "Broad" money is taken to be the sum of money (line 34) plus quasi-money (line 35). "Narrow" money is taken to be Reserve Money (line 14), and therefore corresponds closely to MO. Note that IMF definitions of money supply differ somewhat from national definitions.

(iv) For the US only the table also shows figures for M1, in view of M1's role as an important target variable in US monetary policy.

Non-North Sea Profits

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will explain the reason for the oscillation of non-North sea profits in the simulation given in his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 568, about the relationship between real wages and profits; and what are its implications for economic policy.

Mr. Peter Rees: The time path of non-North sea profits in the simulation reflects the dynamics in the various relationships determining output, prices and costs. There are no clear implications for economic policy.

Savings Ratio

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report particulars of the change in the savings ratio referred to in paragraph 3.27 of his paper on wages and employment together with the consequential effect on interest rates and the exchange rate.

Mr. Peter Rees: The change in the saving ratio in the simulation referred to in paragraph 3.27 is shown below. The effects on interest rates and the exchange rate in this simulation are shown in Table A, Annex B of the paper by Treasury officials on "The Relationship between Employment and Wages".

Wages and Unemployment

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what effect an increase in the money supply has on the real product wage for the purposes of his analysis of the relationship between employment and wages;

(2) what effect an increase in interest rates has on the real product wage for the purposes of his analysis of the relationship between employment and wages;

(3) what effect an increase in the exchange rate has on the real product wage for the purposes of his analysis of the relationship between employment and wages.

Mr. Peter Rees: The analysis of the relationship between employment and wages involved several simulations of the effects of a reduction in wages under different assumptions about monetary and fiscal policy. Estimates of the effect on the real product wage of an increase in the money supply, interest rates or the exchange rate were not made in the course of this analysis and would depend on the particular assumptions adopted.

Commodity Prices

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what study he has made of the effect of commodity prices on the level of inflation in the United Kingdom; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what effect the change in the level of commodity prices has had on the level of inflation in the United Kingdom since 1981.

Mr. Peter Rees: The relation between world commodity prices and United Kingdom inflation depends on the stance of economic policy; in particular on whether or not the Government simply accommodate inflationary pressures. The MTFS provides a framework within which United Kingdom inflation has been, and will continue to be, reduced irrespective of movements in world commodity prices.

Funeral Charges

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue raised, in the latest year for which figures are available, of value added tax levied on (a) funeral charges and (b) engraving and erecting gravestones.

Mr. Hayhoe: (a) The supply by an undertaker of funeral services and other closely associated goods and services is exempt from value added tax. (b) I regret that information is not available on which to base an estimate.

Personal Taxes

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what single rate of non-transferable tax allowance could be introduced at an extra cost to the Exchequer of £1·5 billion if all the existing personal allowances were abolished and married couples were taxed as individuals.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Sanitary Protection

Mr. Corbyn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax was raised in 1984 on sanitary protection; and what were the comparable figures for each of the two preceding years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Businesses are not required to make returns of the VAT charged on particular supplies of goods and services and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. However, from other sources I estimate that the yield of VAT from sales of sanitary protection for women is of the order of £15 million.

Family Income

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an index in the same manner as his answer of 5 April 1984, Official Report, column 403, about taxation changes and the related earlier average tax changes for each group from 1978-79 onwards, in the case of a married couple, where both partners are working, giving the information at multiples of one third, one, five and 10 times the average earnings.

Mr. Moore: [pursuant to his reply, 18 February c. 403]: The following table shows (a) income tax, national insurance contributions less child benefit as appropriate as a percentage of gross earnings; and (b) net earnings after income tax, NIC (contracted) and child benefit, in index number form with 1978-79 = 100. Average earnings are those for full time males paid adult rates whose pay was unaffected by absence. In the case of the two-earner married couple, the wife's earnings have been taken to be those of a full time woman paid adult rates, and it had been assumed that she is on the same multiple of average earnings as her husband.

Minimum Lending Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect the increase in minimum lending rate in 1985 will have on inflation.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1985, c. 494]: The Bank of England on 20 August 1981 ceased to post a continuous minimum lending rate. It announced a minimum lending rate of 12 per cent. on 14 January for that day only.

The increase in building society mortgage rates in February may cause some temporary upward movement in inflation as measured by the RPI. However the longer term effect of the rise in interest rates this year will be to contain inflationary pressures.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing the total tax taken as a proportion of gross domestic product in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 58]: Comparisons between total tax and gross national product for OECD countries may be derived from "OECD National Accounts, 1965-82" or on a slightly different basis, from "Revenue Statistics of OECD Member Countries, 1965-83". Such comparisons are also to be found in an article entitled "International comparisons of taxes and social security contributions in 20 OECD countries" published annually in Economic Trends. The latest version of this article is to be published in the forthcoming edition of Economic Trends (No. 376). In view of the interest in such comparisons at this time, I have arranged for advance copies of the article to be available in the Library of the House.

Similar data for the United Kingdom up to 1983 are shown in "United Kingdom National Accounts, 1984 edition", table 3.10.

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage changes since the previous year of output-based gross domestic product in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979, giving first the total figure, then the figure excluding oil and gas extraction, then the total percentage change 1978 to 1984 for total output, output-based gross domestic product, and for output-based gross domestic product, excluding gas and oil extraction.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985]: The information requested is as follows:

	Output-based estimates at constant factor cost
Percentage change since previous year	Total gross domestic product	GDP excluding oil and gas extraction*
1979	+3·1	+1·8
1980	−2·9	−3·1

West Midlands

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total per annum of taxes paid by the West Midlands region and by Wolverhampton; what sum this represents per employed person; and what is the total of Government aid received by (a) the west midlands region and (b) Wolverhampton.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 262-3]: The estimated amounts of income tax and stamp duties on land and buildings, attributable to the west midlands region were respectively £2·5 billion and £30 million in 1982-83. It is not possible to allocate other taxes to particular regions.

The total number of people in employment in the region at mid-year 1982 was 1·9 million. During the period 1 May 1979 to 30 November 1984 a total of £145 million in industrial aid were available to the west midlands region. Similar figures are not available for Wolverhampton alone.

Some parts of the west midlands region, including Wolverhampton, have been given assisted area status, under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act, in November 1984.

Unemployment (Costs)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total costs of unemployment benefit, social security and housing benefit for the unemployed, together with an estimate of revenue foregone from income tax and value-added tax and other duties since 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84, together with his latest estimate for 1984-85.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985]: Figures for benefits to the unemployed are provided in the table 3.12.5 of the current public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428). Estimates of associated changes in revenue depend upon the assumed causes of unemployment. There is a wide range of possible effects and no single estimate can be given.

Wages

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the United Kingdom and the United States of America the percentage increase in real wages per hour in (a) manufacturing and (b) services since 1979 to available date in each case, together with the pe increase in employment and unemployment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the United Kingdom share of total European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund expenditure in 1983 and 1984; and what is his forecast for 1985.

Mr. Jopling: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom's share of European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund expenditure in 1983 and 1984 was about 11 per cent. and 12 per cent., respectively. For 1985 the Community budget has not yet been adopted and it is not possible to predict the United Kingdom's share of expenditure.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Benefit

80. Mr. Allan Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to increase the earnings unemployed people are allowed to retain before losing supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to increase the supplementary benefit earnings disregard for unemployed people. The treatment of earnings is, however, one of the matters examined during the course of the supplementary benefit review, the conclusions of which are currently being considered.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State fo Services if he will now instruct his local offices to copies of the current supplementary benefit hand each library in their area.

Mr. Whitney: No. As stated in the reply of Friend the then Minister for Social Security to t Member on 25 May 1984 at columns 575-76, we no reason why public libraries should not purch handbook from HMSO as they do other Gov publications.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State fo Services how many people of working age supplementary benefit for 12 months and over in west midlands and (b) the Walsall borough in Ma and if he will give the latest figures for the two gro the percentage difference in each case.

Mr. Whitney: Figures showing the number of in receipt of supplementary benefit for a perio months and over are collected nationally only on a basis. Because of the size of the sample no estimates can be produced for local areas such as borough. Information about regional areas such midlands could be produced only at a dispropo cost.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State fo Services how many people of working age supplementary benefit in (a) the west midlands and Walsall borough in May 1979; and if he will give the latest figures for the two groups and the percentage difference in each case.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of supplementary benefit claims from people of working age which were assessed in west midlands in February 1980 (the earliest figures available), and February 1985 (the latest figures available), are as follows; Walsall borough is covered for supplementary benefit purposes by two DHSS offices; equivalent figures for these offices are also given:

	February 1980	February 1985	Percentage variation
West Midlands	35,910	32,733	−9
Walsall (East)	793	886	+12
Walsall (West)	1,657	869	*

* These figures cannot be compared because of boundary changes to this local office area in 1983.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the estimated cost of supplementary benefit housing addition payments in respect of mortgage interest in Great Britain in each year from 1982 to 1984; what was the estimated total number of claimants receiving such payments in Great Britain in each year from 1982 to 1984; and how many of these claimants are estimated to have been of working age.

Mr. Whitney: Details of the number of claimants in Great Britain receiving supplementary benefit housing addition payments for mortgage interest and the cost for 1982 and 1983 are as follows:

	Total number	Cost £ million	Number of claimants of working age
1982	235,000	170	189,000
*1983	250,000	not yet available	206,000

* Estimate.

There are no figures yet available for 1984.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library tables showing, for each supplementary benefit office (a) the number of live cases in each of the three categories, pensioners, unemployed and others, for the most recent month for which information is available and (b) the number of single payments made to claimants in each of these categories by each office in the same month.

Mr. Whitney: I am arranging for the information to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of supplementary benefit appeals which were held in Glasgow in each of the last five years for which figures are available, (b) the proportion of the appeals in each year in which the claimants were successful, (c) the proportion of the appeals in each year in which the claimants were repesented and (d) the proportion of successful appeals in each year in which the claimants were represented.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1985, c. 280]: The information was not recorded for the period prior to 1981 and details for 1984 are not yet available because of the effect of the industrial dispute at Newcastle. The information available is as follows:

Glasgow Tribunals

	1981	1982	1983
Appeals heard	1,916	2,726	2,787
Claimants represented	949	1,291	1,254

Heroin Addiction

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will allocate more resources to the communication of the dangers of heroin addiction and to the provision of treatment and advice centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have allocated £2 million to information and education about drug misuse in 1985-86. A substantial part of this will be spent on a national advertising campaign to warn young people about the effects of misusing heroin. The campaign will be carefully evaluated. The need for the allocation of further resources will be considered in the light of the evaluation results. An additional £10 million has been allocated over three years for treatment and rehabilitation services. So far 95 projects have been approved at a total cost of £7·5 million.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that adequate guidelines have been issued to National Health Service hospitals in respect of clearing up equipment used in cases of deceased patients resulting from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. Interim guidelines on AIDS prepared by the advisory committee on dangerous pathogens were published jointly by Health Ministers and the Health and Safety Commission on 16 January. They give advice on the safe handling and disinfection of materials and equipment used in connection with AIDS patients.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to ask British citizens who have received blood transfusions in the United States of America to present themselves at hospitals for tests for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It will be open to any clinician to offer such a test to any patient when a reliable test becomes available to the NHS.

Children in Care

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the figures for the number of children who came into local authority care between 1 April 1982 and 31 March 1983, and between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1984, because their families were homeless; and if he will give this information for England as a whole, Greater London, the metropolitan authorities, excluding London, the non-metropolitan authorities, and for each English local authority area;

(2) what are the latest available figures for the number of children in local authority care because their families are homeless; and if he will give this information for England as a whole, Greater London, the metropolitan authorities excluding London, non-metropolitan authorities and for each English local authority area.

Mr. John Patten: A child may be taken into care for a number of reasons, of which homelessness may be a contributory factor but is not identified as a specific cause. Given in the tables is information relating to the period between 1 April 1982 and 31 March 1983 and where available for the period 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1984, for the numbers of children in care, and the numbers of children who came into care where the specific cause was that their family had been made homeless. Figures have been given for each local authority, each metropolitan authority, Greater London and England.

Information given in table 1 relates to 31 March 1983 unless otherwise indicated.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which local authorities in England and Wales are operating enhancement schemes under regulation 22 of the Housing Benefit Regulations 1982 and (a) what proportion of the 10 per cent. of the cost of the standard housing benefit scheme allowed for enhancement is being utilised by each of these authorities, (b) what are the sums involved, and (c) what types of enhancement they are operating.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that information relating to payments in exceptional circumstances under regulation 22 of the Housing Benefit Regulations 1982, and payments under local schemes under Section 30 of the Social Security and Housing Benefits Act 1982, is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households, in total, have lost all entitlement to housing benefit as a result of changes to the tapers and minimum payments rules at April 1983, April 1984 and November 1984, showing the breakdown by household type and tenure.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available in the precise form requested. It was estimated that about 400,000 householders lost all entitlement to housing benefit at April 1983. In respect of all the April and November 1984 changes it was estimated that about half a million fewer households would receive housing benefit in November 1984; the estimated breakdown was as follows:

	Number
by household type
pensioners	210,000
working	210,000
others	80,000
by tenure
LA tenants	200,000
private tenants	40,000
owner-occupiers	250,000

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the number of standard housing benefit recipients receiving housing benefit supplement; and what percentage of the total number thought to be eligible for housing benefit supplement this represents.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that there were about 200,000 housing benefit supplement recipients in 1983-84, the latest date for which estimates are available. These represent about three sevenths of those who were expected to qualify on the introduction of the housing benefit scheme.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his latest estimates of the number of households receiving (a) standard housing benefit and (b) certificated housing benefit, in total and showing the division between home owners, council tenants and others, and between pensioner households, families with children and others.

Mr. Whitney: The latest detailed estimates remain those that my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Dr. Boyson) gave to the hon. Member in his reply of 23 July 1984, at column 406. The latest indications, based on subsidy returns from local authorities, are that about 3½ million householders currently receive certificated housing benefit and about 4 million householders receive standard housing benefit.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his Department's latest available figures on (i) the number of housing benefit cases on which a review has been requested, (ii) the number of these referred to a review board, (iii) of the cases so far heard at review board, the total number in which the authority's original determination was (a) altered and (b) upheld and (iv) the number of cases referred to review boards involving representations about (a) eligible rent/rates, (b) non-dependants or sub-tenants, (c) overpayments and (d) other matters.

Mr. Whitney: On the basis of statistical returns made to the Department covering the period 1 April 1983 to 31 December 1984, 12,792 requests have been received for officer level reviews of housing benefit determinations. Of these, 368 cases have been referred to review boards. 318 original determinations were revised and 50 were upheld. The cases referred to the review boards fell into the following categories; some cases have been counted under more than one heading.

	Number
a. eligible rent/rates	315
b. non dependants or sub-tenants	10
c. overpayments	12
d. other matters	43

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he received from the manufacturers of Clarke's Blood Mixture about his limited drugs list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he arrived at his estimate that the revised limited list proposals will save £75 million.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 28 February at column 277.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether at the time of his announcement of his amended limited list he was aware that the Dutch Government were going to scrap their negative list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We understand that the Dutch Government are amending one part of their limited list and that they have no intention of abolishing it.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to insist that generic manufacture of a given drug is in an identically shaped and coloured product.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he received from the manufacturers of Flora margarine and of Fine Fare hot lemon powder during the consultation period on the limited National Health Service drugs list proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We received no representations about Flora margarine or Fine Fare hot lemon powder during the consultation period on the limited list proposals.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many products on the list of medicines he announced on 21 February that will no longer be prescribable on the National Health Service after 1 April fall outside the seven therapeutic categories referred to in his statement to the House; and if he will list them.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The list of medicines we announced on 21 February that will no longer be prescribable on the National Health Service after 1 April included some 68 products which the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances has advised are not medicines and should not be prescribed by general practitioners. The list also included nine products which have since been deleted. Full details are as follows.

1. ACBS non-prescribable preparations
   Acne Aid Bar, Atrixo, Aveeno Bar, Aveeno Bar Oilated, Complan, Cantaflour, Carnation Build-up, Cidal, Covermark Removing Cream, Dansac Skin Lotion, Derbac Soap, Dermacolour Cleansing Cream, Cleansing Milk, Cleansing Lotion, Efamol Capsules, Energen Starch Reduced Bran Crispbread, Flora Margarine, Fortimel, Fortison Low Sodium, Gamophen, Genatosan, Glucodin, GF Gluten-Free Maize Biscuits with Chocolate, GF Gluten-Free Maize Biscuits with Hazelnut, Gluten-Free Thin Wafer Bread, Granogen, Hygienic Babysalve, Ipsel, Lacto Calamine, Laevoral, Linoleic Acid, Lysaldin, Nutrogena Soap, Nicobrevin, Nicorette, Nivea, Nutritionally Complete Supplemented Fasting Formula, Oilatum Bar, Respaton, Rite-Diet Gluten Free Biscuits (chocolate Chip Cookies, Half coated chocolate, Lincoln, Shortcake, Sultana, Custard Cream, Soya Bran), Rite-diet Gluten Free Canned Rich Fruit Cake, ROC Total Sunblock Creams, light tan and deep tan, Safflower Seed Oil, Saxin, Simple Soap, Sorbitol SMA Gold Cap Powder and Ready To Feed, SMA Powder and Concentrated Liquid, Sweetex, Tonic Wines, Taitamyl Gluten Free Bread Mix, Trufree Plain Flour, Pasta Mix, Sweet Biscuit, Bread Mix, United Skin Care Programme, Wate on Tablets, Wines, Woodwards Nursery Cream.

Fair (Leyton Green)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 8 February concerning the arrangements whereby Waltham Forest health authority leased the land opposite Leyton Green for the purpose of a fair, Official Report, column 734, which councillors were consulted about the arrangement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Private Residential Care Homes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how much local authorities are saving as a result of payments being made through supplementary benefit to residents in private residential care homes.

Mr. Whitney: It is not possible to determine how many residents in receipt of supplementary benefit would have been sponsored by a local authority had supplementary benefit not been available to them. However, the following information may be helpful:

	Number of residents in receipt of supplementary benefit in private and voluntary residential care	Number of local authority sponsored residents in registered voluntary and private homes and hostels
1979	11,000	25,017
1980	12,000	25,884
1981	12,000	24,487
1982	15,700	23,359
1983	*25,800	22,053
1984	†42,500	*20,407

* Provisional.
† Estimate.

Babies (Monitoring)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he plans to issue to parents in respect of monitoring accurately the growth rate, weight and temperature of their babies; and what provisions he intends to make available for this purpose.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to issue specific guidance. Parents can already seek advice from family doctors, health visitors and clinics about the development of their children.

Consultant Expansion

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which recommendations issued by the joint consultants' committee in respect of increased consultant expansion he has acted upon and implemented since the joint planning advisory committee discussion document in July 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The consultation document issued in July 1984, in line with a recommendation of the Select Committee on Social Services, related to the senior registrar grade. The document, which was agreed by the joint consultants' committee as a basis for consultation, proposed joint planning between universities and health authorities of numbers in that and equivalent academic grade. Consultation established broad agreement on objectives and discussions are continuing on ways and means.

One JCC suggestion in these discussions explored a once and for all expansion of consultant posts by 100 in two specialties, as an alternative or in addition to joint planning of senior registrars. Over the last five years, consultant numbers in England have grown by an average of some 250 a year. Further progress towards the objective of providing a greater proportion of patient care by fully trained doctors is for health authorities to carry forward, in accordance with national policies and their own assessment of local needs and priorities.

Blood Test Facilities

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what blood test facilities have been developed to enable donors to be screened for the purpose of preventing infected blood from being transmitted.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 26 February at column 142.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the recent changes in uprating family income supplement on a 12 month basis rather than the previous system of automatic increase each November; what plans he has to review this change in the course of the current social security review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has received approximately 150 items of individual correspondence on the change in the method of uprating family income supplement. A proportion sought only clarification of the details of change. FIS is included in the scope of the social security review but we cannot anticipate the outcome.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the maximum charge for dental treatment, including crowns or dentures, in April 1979 and (b) the maximum charge made for the same treatment in April 1984 and the percentage increase in these charges over the five year period in cash terms and in real terms.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The maximum charge for dental treatment was £30 in April 1979 and £110 in April 1984. That is an increase over the five year period of 267 per cent. in cash terms and 141 per cent. in real terms. However the £30 maximum was first fixed in April 1977 and the increase over the seven year period is 86·5 per cent. in real terms.

Sister Burke-Masters (Surgery Closure)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will inquire into the problems of those unsettled and homeless people who were cared for, when necessary, by Sister Barbara Burke-Masters before her surgery was closed by the Pharmaceutical Society; and if he will invite the views of those interested and with a knowledge of the problems, on what new initiatives would ensure that these people had ready access to primary health care that meets their needs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We intend shortly to ask all family practitioner committees to make it a priority in 1985-86 to report on the extent to which the needs of homeless people for general medical services within their locality are being met.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Pharmaceutical Society concerning the closure of Sister Burke-Masters surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that inspectors of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain interviewed Miss Burke-Masters on 28 January 1985 and explained to her that her actions in supplying prescription-only medicines to persons not patients of a medical practitioner were unlawful, and that she should cease such supply. I further understand that a general medical practitioner on the list of the City and East London family practitioner committee has proposed that he should accept the patients in question on to his list and employ Miss Burke-Masters to provide them with nursing care, as a means of regularising her position.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the reduction in the National Health Service drugs bill that will be derived from further reductions in return on capital allowed to pharmaceutical manufacturers under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme to take effect from 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We estimate that the full year effect from price increases avoided and price reductions secured will be £40—£45 million (United Kingdom).

Rent Rebate

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) at what income level rent rebate would no longer be payable, at 1984-85 need allowance levels, to (a) a single pensioner, (b) a pensioner couple, (c) a family whose head of household is in employment, with one dependent child and (d) a family whose head of household is in employment with two dependent children, who in each case, is paying the average local authority rent in Great Britain, assuming the 21p taper was still in operation;

(2) at what income level rent rebate would no longer be payable, at 1984-85 need allowance levels, to (a) a single pensioner, (b) a pensioner couple, (c) a family whose head of household is in employment, with one dependent child and (d) a family whose head of household is in employment with two dependent children, who in each case, is paying the average local authority rent in Great Britain, assuming the 17p taper was still in operation;

(3) at what income level rent rebate would no longer be payable at 1984-85 need allowance levels, to (a) a single pensioner, (b) a pensioner couple, (c) a family whose head of household is in employment, with one dependent child and (d) a family whose head of household is in employment, with two dependent children, who, in each case, is paying the average local authority rent in Great Britain, assuming the 26p taper was still in operation;

(4) at what income level rent rebate would no longer be payable at 1984-85 need allowance levels, to (a) a single pensioner, (b) a pensioner couple, (c) a family whose head of household is in employment, with one dependent child and (d) a family whose head of household is in employment, with two dependent children, who, in each case, is paying the average local authority rent in Great Britain, at the current 29p taper.

Mr. Whitney: The gross income levels at which rent rebates would no longer be payable, based on the estimated average local authority rent at April 1984 of £13·97, are as follows:

Gross Income (£s) with a taper of 17 per cent.	21 per cent.	26 per cent.	29 per cent.

Single pensioner	92·30	83·46	76·24	73·10
Pensioner couple	113·70	104·86	97·64	94·50
One child family with one earner	142·75	133·91	126·69	123·55
Two child family with one earner	155·60	146·76	139·54	136·40

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be (a) the estimated cost and (b) the estimated gains and losses, by income band, of the introduction of a single taper scheme based on net income and with rent tapers of (i) 35p, (ii) 40p, (iii) 45p and (iv) 50p, and rate tapers of half the rent taper.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

High Rent Area Authorisations

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the number of tenants who will be adversely affected by the proposed changes in the threshold for high rent area authorisations effective from 1 April (a) in authorities which will lose the authorisation entirely and (b) in authorities which will continue to receive an authorisation but at a higher threshold; and if he will estimate the average loss per tenant (i) in authorities losing authorisation for both public authority and private tenants, (ii) in authorities losing authorisation in respect of public authority tenants alone, (iii) in authorities losing authorisation in respect of private tenants alone, (iv) in respect of authorities losing class authorisation and (v) in authorities continuing to receive an authorisation but at a higher threshold;

(2) if he will list the local authorities who have (a) requested and (b) received authorisation to operate a high rent area scheme (i) for public authority and private tenants, (ii) for public authority tenants, (iii) for private sector tenants and (iv) for class authorisations.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the authorities which will lose their high rent area authorisations if the proposed changes to the thresholds are effected from 1 April, showing those who will lose the authorisation (a) in respect of both public authority and private tenants, (b) for public authority tenants alone, (c) for private tenants alone and (d) for class authorisations.

Mr. Whitney: The table lists those authorities which will cease to qualify to operate a high rent scheme from 1 April 1985 under the proposed changes, and which are currently in receipt of such an authorisation (i) in respect of both public authority and private tenants, (ii) for public authority tenants only, (iii) for private tenants only and (iv) for class authorisation.

(i) For public authority and private tenants:
Brighton
Guildford
Windsor and Maidenhead

(ii) For public authority tenants only:
Basildon Development Corporation
Broxbourne
City of Cardiff
Central Lancashire
Enfield
Havant
City of Liverpool
City of London
Middlesbrough

Surrey Heath
Spelthorne
Wealdon
Woking

(iv) In respect of class authorisations:
Argyle and Bute
Clackmannon
Dumbarton
Dundee
Hamilton
South Holland
West Oxfordshire

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those authorities estimated to be eligible at November 1984 for a high rent area authorisation who have not requested such authorisation, showing those which would qualify for an authorisation covering (a) both public authority and private tenants, (b) public authority tenants only and (c) private tenants only.

Mr. Whitney: The table lists those authorities which in the information currently available to the Department would qualify for a high rent authorisation, but have not applied for it, (i) in respect of both council tenancies and private tenancies, (ii) in respect of council tenancies only and (iii) in respect of private tenancies only.

(i) For council and private tenants:
Ashford

(ii) For council tenants:
Basingstoke and Dean
East Hampshire
Fareham
Maldon
Malvern Hills
Merton
New Forest
Richmond-upon-Thames
Torfaen
Washington New Town
West Devon

(iii) For private tenants:

Fluoridation

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the nature and extent of the danger of overdose, and the degree of mottling of the teeth, which can arise when the level of fluoride in the water supply is twice the maximum recommended; what scientific evidence is available to him as to the concentration of fluoride in the water supply at which a risk of fatal poisoning may arise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There is evidence from the United States of America that, where the level of fluoride naturally present in the water supply is around two parts per million, an increasing proportion of children have mottled enamel that is apparent and objectionable aesthetically (Dean H. T. and Elvove E "Further studies on the minimal threshold of chronic endemic dental fluorosis" (Public Health Report 52: 1249-64 September 10 1937)). The ingestion of water containing a concentration of fluoride of 2 ppm, in a temperate climate, has, however, no harmful effect upon general health. This has been established by studies of communities in the USA and in this country where the drinking water contains fluoride in high natural concentrations (for example, Leone et al, Public Health Reports 69 925 (1954); Heasman and Martin, Monthly Bulletin of the Ministry of Health 21 150-160 (1962)).

With regard to the risk of fatal poisoning, the Regis of Toxic Effects of Chemical Substances (1981-82) repo the lowest lethal dose of sodium fluoride in man to 71 mg per kg body weight, corresponding to a dose 2240 mg of fluoride ion in a 70 kg adult. In order for t quantity to be ingested in the normal volume of wa drunk in 24 hours, the concentration of fluoride in wa would need to be greater than 2000 parts per million.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Soc Services if he will list all those community health counc in England which have expressed opposition fluoridation of water supplies.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the views community health councils regarding fluoridation is n held centrally.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Soci Services what study he has made of the findings Edwards, Pantos and Kraut on the effect of fluoride hydrogen bonding in cyclochrome-C peroxidase inhibit with fluoride; what are the implications of this research f his assessment of the safety of fluoridating water at o part per million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 Marc 1985]: The study of Edwards, Pantos and Kraut publishe in the "Journal of Biological Chemistry" in 1984 (volum 259) does not in any way alter the assessment of the safe and efficacy of the fluoridation of water to one part p million. It has been known for many decades that fluori at high non-physiological concentrations can inhibit enhance the action of many enzymes. There is howeve no evidence of enzyme inhibition in humans from th consumption of water fluoridated to one part per millio and no evidence of any specific harmful effect which coul be attributed to inhibition of enzymes in this manner.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Soci Services why he has hitherto indemnified statutory wate undertakers which fluoridate water supplies.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 Marc 1985]: The indemnity offered in respect of fluoridatio schemes covers essentially costs waived in respect o claims that fluoridation is either illegal or injurious t health. No such claim has ever been made successfully i England. The indemnity is offered to assist statutory wate undertakers who wish to accede to requests from healt authorities to implement fluoridation schemes. This is i keeping with the policy of successive administrations t encourge fluoridation, whilst leaving the decision o whether or not to fluoridate to be taken entirely at loca level.

Children's Legal Centre

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of Stat for Social Services what grant has been paid to th Children's Legal Centre in each of the years since such funding commenced; what grant is expected to be paid i the forthcoming year; and for what purposes these funds are intended.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has awarded the following grants to the Children's Legal Centre since its inception.

Grant	Period	Purpose
£9,500 for each of 3 years	October 1980 to September 1983	To support a solicitor in providing advice to children, parents and professionals on children's matters which come within this Department's responsibilities.
£1,000 (capital grant)	1980	A contribution, arising from the appointment of a solicitor, towards the cost of office equipment.
£30,000 for each of 3 years	October 1983 to September 1986	To support an advice/information service to children, parents and professionals on children's matters which come within this Department's responsibilities; the grant was not available for other areas of CLC's work, such as Childright.
£2,000 (one-off grant)	March 1984	A contribution towards an analysis of a research project on reviews of children in care.

Drugs

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 13 February, Official Report, columns 215-16, if he will publish in the Official Report for each of the past five years those drugs which the World Health Organisation has informed his Department of major changes to warnings in their use, distinguishing between (a) where no changes to the United Kingdom data sheets have resulted and (b) where changes to the United Kingdom data sheets have resulted;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 13 February, Official Report, columns 215-16, if he will publish in the Official Report a list of drugs that are currently being considered by the licensing authority following information received by his Department from the World Health Organisation of major changes to warnings in their use.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985 c.67-68]: The information relating to notification of changes by the World Health Organisation over the past five years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, we believe that few if any changes to United Kingdom data sheets have needed to be made as a result of receiving such information. There are no medicines currently being considered by the licensing authority as a result of such a notification.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower on 13 February, Official Report, columns 215-16, if he will arrange for his Department to collect records of variations between United Kingdom data sheets and broadly similar documents in other countries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 67-68]: No. Major items of information are always available through the World Health Organisation and other international sources. It would not be cost-effective to collect and examine all records of variations on a worldwide basis, country by country, since the size of the task would be enormous and out of proportion to any possible benefits for the use of medicines in the United Kingdom.

Ancillary Services (Contractors)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those companies known to be operating private contracts within the National Health Service, indicating the services offered.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1985, c. 275]: Health authorities employ a large number of companies to provide services such as engineering, equipment and building maintenance and window cleaning. However, I assume the hon. Member is referring to domestic, catering and laundry services for hospitals. We are aware of the following companies which have been awarded contracts for these services.

Domestic—Berkeley-Taylorplan, Crothalls, Exclusive, HHS, ICC, Initial, ISS, Lesters, Mediclean, OCS, RCO, Reckitts, and Sunlight.
Catering —Allied Medical and Spinneys.
Laundry —Advance, Co-operative (Wallsend), Express, Initial, Kneels, Smarts and Sunlight.

"The Health Service in England"

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, with reference to his Department's pamphlet, "The Health Service in England", he will produce a subsequent pamphlet outlining in detail the results of the implementation of Government policy on the National Health Service.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985]: The Social Services Select Committee's fourth report suggested it might be useful to consider the advantages of producing an annual report on the work of the Department of Health and Social Security. The annual report on the Health Service in England—a copy of which is in the Library — gives full details of the developments in the Health Service under this Government. The leaflet provides a summary of its main points.

Trent RHA (New Hospital Developments)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new hospital developments have taken place in the Trent health region since May 1979; and if he will list them.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985]: The following 11 developments each costing more than £2 million have been completed since May 1979:

Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Royal Hospital.
Glenfield District General Hospital, Phase I.
Bassetlaw Hospital, Phase I.
Leicester General Hospital, Mental Illness Unit.
Leicester Royal Infirmary, Phase III.
Lincoln County Hospital, Phase I.
Queens Medical Centre, Nottingham, Phase II.
Rotherham District General Hospital, Phase II.
Kings Mill Hospital, Outpatients Department.
Keresforth Centre, Barnsley.
Kendray Hospital, Barnsley, Phase I.

Nine more schemes are currently under construction and a further eight schemes are due to start in 1985-86.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the specific criteria used to include products on his limited list with particular reference to the section on benzodiazepines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The overall objective given to the group of independent experts who advised the Chief Medical Officer on which drugs should be prescribable was to meet all real clinical needs at the minimum cost to the National Health Service. The criteria they used when considering individual medicinal products were the same in each therapeutic group covered by the limited list. First, was the product required to satisfy a real clinical or therapeutic need not met as effectively by any other product available? If so, it was put on the list regardless of cost. Secondly, did it meet a real clinical or therapeutic need at least as effectively and at the same price as or more cheaply than any other available product? If so, it too was put on the list. Any products that were more expensive but not more effective were excluded.

In considering clinical needs the group took into account not only the specific therapeutic action of the products under consideration but also the practical problems of general medical practice. They therefore considered such problems as the acceptability and palatability of the products—especially for children, old people and the dying—and the need to have a choice of effective remedies wherever practical.

It follows that the criterion for including drugs in the schedule of medicinal products and other substances not to be available on NHS prescription from 1 April 1985 was that, on expert advice, they had no clinical or therapeutic advantage over other, cheaper, drugs in the categories of antacids, laxatives, analgesics for mild to moderate pain, cough and cold remedies, bitters and tonics, vitamins and benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers. Drugs prescribable only for specified conditions—at present only one, Clobazam for epilepsy—are those which have more than one distinct therapeutic use and which meet this criterion for at least one of those uses but do not meet it for all of them.

In addition, the main schedule includes substances which the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances has advised are never drugs or medicines in the circumstances of general practice. The independent experts advising us on the contents of the limited list also made a general recommendation, which we accepted. This was that to achieve maximum economy drugs to be retained should wherever possible be specified and prescribed by a non-proprietary name.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment Surveys

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether the statement to be made when the report of the recruitment survey is undertaken in the north-west and county of Avon is published in the spring will be made by him to Parliament.

Mr. Hayhoe: Detailed arrangements concerning the publication of this report have not yet been made, but it will certainly be made available to Parliament.

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Ser when he expects the central analysis of surveys by offic of the Cabinet Office and Her Majesty's Treasury respect of the recruitment surveys undertaken in the no west and the county of Avon to be completed.

Mr. Hayhoe: Officials are expected to complete t analyses in April.

Race Relations

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Ser what steps he is taking in order to update guidance training in respect of personnel policies and procedure they affect race relations in the Civil Service in endeavour to counter possible discrimination; and whom such steps will be taken.

Mr. Hayhoe: All Government Departments h appointed equal opportunity officers whose resp sibilities include guidance on race relations in respect personnel policies and procedures.

It is now a requirement that all new personnel offic in the Civil Service should receive training either by Civil Service college or by their own Department; eq opportunities is a theme and race relations a spec subject area covered by such training.

The Cabinet Office (Management and Person Office) is about to commission the development of resource pack for departmental trainers in the wi aspects of equal opportunities including race relations

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Service whom the appropriate timetable is being worked out the institution of a programme of ethnic monitoring cover industrial staff in the east and west midlands; a when he expects to announce the starting date for such programme.

Mr. Hayhoe: The timetable for a programme of ethn surveys is being worked out by officials of the Cabin Office, Her Majesty's Treasury and Departmen employing industrial staff in consultation with the tra union side of the Joint Co-ordinating Committee f Government Industrials. It is hoped that conclusions w be reached this spring.

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Servi when he expects the report on the data from th recruitment surveys undertaken in the north-west ar county of Avon by officials of the Cabinet Office and H Majesty's Treasury to be completed; and whether he wi make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The report on these surveys should b published in May.

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Civil Servic which Departments are represented in the discussions t set up procedures for obtaining the ethnic informatio from new entrants from the autumn; and whether he ha sought the guidance of the Commission for Racial Equalit in respect of necessary procedures and documentation.

Mr. Hayhoe: The procedures for obtaining the ethni information from new entrants are being settled by th joint working party on race relations in the Civil Service This consists of representatives from Departments and th unions. The Commission for Racial Equality is given the opportunity to comment on all the necessary documentation. The Departments represented on the joint working party are: Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Ministry of Defence, Department of Employment, Department of the Environment, Department of Transport, Department of Health and Social Security, Home Office, Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise.

ENERGY

Energy Prices

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy by how much, in percentage terms, energy prices to the consumer have risen in the last five years; and if he will compare this figure with the overall rate of inflation over the same period.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The price index for all domestic fuel and light increased by 52·9 per cent. between 1980 and 1984. The retail price index increased by 33·4 per cent. over the same period. However, between April 1983 and December 1984, when the RPI increased by 7·8 per cent. the indices for gas and electricity, the two most widely used domestic fuels, rose by only 4·2 per cent. and 2·1 per cent., respectively.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list year by year since 1973 the contributions that the National Coal Board has received from the European Community budget towards the redundant mineworkers' payment scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Contributions from the European Coal and Steel Community towards the Government's redundant mineworkers payments scheme received each year since 1973-74 have been as follows:

	£ million
1973-74	—
1974-75	—
1975-76	2·3
1976-77	2·0
1977-78	3·3
1978-79	2·6
1979-80	4·9
1980-81	1·6
1981-82	3·4
1982-83	7·6
1983-84	11·0

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list year by year since 1979 the number of mineworkers who have taken part in the National Coal Board's redundant mineworkers' payment scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: The following numbers of mineworkers have left the coal industry under the Government's redundant mineworkers payments scheme in the years 1978-79 to date:

Year
1978-79	3,500
1979-80	1,700
1980-81	3,200
1981-82	10,500
1982-83	8,500
1983-84	20,400

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy what specific schemes he intends to initiate to assist mineworkers who wish to accept redundancy payments to start private businesses of their own.

Mr. David Hunt: The National Coal Board has set up a subsidiary company—NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.—to offer financial assistance, counselling, retraining and help with accommodation for businesses in areas where pit closures take place.

I hope that the company will receive many applications for assistance from men who leave the coal industry by taking advantage of the generous redundancy terms available.

Central Electricity Generating Board

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the trading deficit on Central Electricity Generating Board operations in 1984; and how this has been financed.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board produces its accounts on the basis of financial years running from April to March. Its results for 1984-85 will be prepared and published in the usual way when they have been audited.

National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, region by region, the number of new jobs which have been created in mining areas resulting from the National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. scheme initiated by the National Coal Board in 1984.

Mr. David Hunt: NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. was set up by the National Coal Board in October 1984 to offer financial assistance, counselling, retraining and help with accommodation for businesses in areas where pit closures take place. The new company has a budget of £10 million, which will be kept under reveiw. Inevitably it will be time before the success of the initiative in creating permanent new jobs can be properly assessed.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what proportion of National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd's £10 million is to be allocated to Wales; if National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. is to have offices located in Wales; what will be the relationship between National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. and the county and district authorities in Wales; and if National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. will be staffed by officials from Wales and conversant with the problems of mining communities;

(2) if he will seek the setting up of a separate National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. for Wales; if he will seek the setting up of a National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. office in the South Wales coalfield; and what consultations have been had with the South Wales National Union of Mineworkers regarding location in South Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: These are matters for the board of NCB (Enterprise) Ltd., but the company has already taken a number of steps to encourage job creation in Wales.

I understand that funds have been committed to help the Neath partnership, the Blaenau Gwent small business advice service, the Blackmoor small business centre and the Llanelli enterprise agency. The board is also closely in touch with agencies in Merthyr and Cardiff.

Last November the board announced that its former training centre at Tondu was to be developed into an enterprise agency—the Ogwr partnership trust—with a business advisory unit, small start-up units for entrepreneurs and facilities for technology training. A number of offers of financial support to individual businesses have already been made.

Coal Industry

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many miners were at work on Tuesday 5 March and on Wednesday 6 March; how many mines were either partly or fully operational; and how much coal was produced on those particular days.

Mr. David Hunt: There were about 158,000 NUM members not on strike on Tuesday 5 March and about 176,000 on Wednesday 6 March, equivalent to 85 and 95 per cent., respectively. There were NUM members at work at every pit on both days. The figures for production are not yet available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Technology

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the levels of sponsorship which his Department has devoted to information technology training schemes in each year since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The information is as follows:

Information Technology Centres (ITeCs)	£ million
1979	Nil
1980	Nil
1981	Nil
1982	1·2
1983	3·0
1984	4·3

1981	1·
1982	4·
1983	6·
1984	3·

The advanced manufacturing technology information technology year 1982, althou awareness programmes, also involve some fu development of training schemes, but separa this are not available.

Industrial Research and Developm

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary Trade and Industry how many applications submitted to his Department for industrial development projects in each year since 197 give a breakdown of the regions from applications arose in the same period; and wha of them were not granted.

Mr. Butcher: The following is the inform on data collected in respect of industrial r development projects for which applications made for support under the Science and Tech 1965:

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and industry what assistance he makes available for the formation of enterprise agencies; and if he will make a statement on progress to date.

Mr. Trippier: The main support for the formation of local enterprise agencies (LEAs) must rest with the private sector in partnership with local interests. The Government do, however, foster the development and growth of enterprise agencies in a number of ways, the principle one of which is tax relief on contributions by businesses to LEAs approved by my Department. To date there are 190 approved agencies out of a total of approximately 240.

Further Government assistance to LEAs is provided through pump-priming support by my Department, the Department of the Environment—in some urban areas—and the development Commission in England and the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies in Scotland and Wales, respectively. Total Government support in England to date is in excess of £2·2 million.

The foregoing assistance is also supplemented by the provision, to date, of some £119,000 to Business in the Community to support its work in promoting the LEA movement; and through the encouragement of enterprise agencies to make full use of the information and counselling facilities provided by my Department's small firms service.

Software Products Scheme

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and industry if he will state in relation to the software products scheme (a) how much has been spent on this scheme since its inception, (b) how many different projects have been assisted under the scheme, (c) what has been the average delay between the submission of an application and a decision being taken and (d) what charges have been made by those who have administered the scheme on behalf of his Department as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Butcher: The information is as follows:

(a) to date £46 million has been made available for grants; £9 million in the first nine years to 1982, £10 million in the relaunch of 1982, £15 million in response to demand in 1983 and a further £12 million following a preliminary review in 1984, of which approximately half had been committed at the time of the moratorium;

(b) there have been 322 grants awarded under the scheme, totally £40 million;

(c) the current average delay between submission and a decision is 17 weeks; figures for average delay since the introduction of the scheme are not available and cannot be provided due to disproportionate costs;

(d) administration charges by the National Computing Centre for the life of the scheme have been 4·75 per cent. of the total amount awarded.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the share of Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries in world manufactured exports in each of the past 10 years; and what has been the United Kingdom share of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development totals over the same period.

Mr. Fletcher: The available information is as follows:

Manufacturing Output

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the percentage increase in manufacturing output for 1979 and in each subsequent year to 1984.

Mr. Butcher: The index of production for manufacturing industry is published in a table on page 371 of the 22 February issue of British Business, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Industrial Investment

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, using 1979 prices, he will publish in the Official Report the figures for investment in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) service industries for each year since 1978.

Mr. Butcher: Constant price investment statistics are not available at 1979 prices. Available information is as follows:

Companies Act 1980

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any recent representations about the operation of section 75 of the Companies Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: No, I have received no such representations.

Spain and Portugal (Agriculture)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom's trade balance in agricultural products with Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Fletcher: In 1984 the United Kingdom had a provisional crude trade deficit in agricultural products of £184·4 million with Spain and £1·3 million with Portugal.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what have been the levels of United Kingdom exports and imports of yarns, fabrics and garments, respectively, and the resulting crude trade balance with Spain, Portugal, Turkey, Cyprus, Malta, Egypt, Morocco and Tunisia in 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 26 February 1985, c. 116]: The information is as follows:

Trade Statistics

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom had a trade imbalance in visible trade in 1984 but had a positive trade balance in 1979 or 1974, giving the relevant amounts, respectively.

Mr. Fletcher [pursuant to the reply, 1 March 1985, c. 321]: The required information for countries with which the United Kingdom had a trade deficit in 1984 is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Polytechnics (London)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what share of the costs of administering polytechnics he has asked the Inner London education authority to pay; and on what factors he based his decision.

Mr. Brooke: The present contribution formula for the advanced further education pool, which is based as to 69 per cent. on the numbers of school pupils in each authority's area, and as to 31 per cent. on non-domestic rateable value, requires the ILEA to pay about 9·8 per cent. of the pool. The ILEA is taking legal proceedings against my right hon. Friend in respect of his decision not to change the formula and it would be inappropriate to comment further at this time.

Young Persons

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what are the latest estimates of the number of 18 and 19-year-olds in Great Britain currently who are (a) in full-time education, (b) on youth training schemes,

(c) unemployed and (d) engaged in another activity; and how these figures compare with the previous year and 1979;

(2) what are the estimates of the number of 20 and 21-year-olds in Great Britain currently who are (a) in full-time education, (b) on youth training schemes, (c) unemployed and (d) engaged in another activity; and how those figures compare with the previous year and 1979;

(3) what are the estimates of the number of 22-year-olds in Great Britain currently who are (a) in full-time education, (b) on youth training schemes, (c) unemployed and (d) engaged in another activity; and how those figures compare with the previous year and 1979;

(4) what are the estimates of the number of 23 and 24-year-olds in Great Britain currently who are (a) in full-time education, (b) on youth training schemes, (c) unemployed and (d) engaged in another activity; and how those figures compare with the previous year and 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: The available estimates are shown in the following table. Figures for 1979 are not readily available.

Estimates have been rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, scale by scale, the annual increments which have been awarded to primary and secondary school teachers in each year since 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: Incremental salary scales for teachers are set out annually in Burnham documents or amending orders, copies of which are available in the Library. Annual percentage pay increases as applied to these incremental scales since 1979 are as follows:

	Scale 1 per cent.	Scale 2 per cent.	Scale 3 per cent.	Scale 4 per cent.	Senior Teacher per cent.	Deputy Head per cent.	Head per cent.
1979	9·3	9·3	9·3	9·3	9·3	9·3	9·3
*1980	34·0	34·0-35·1	34·0-35·1	34·0-36·3	35·1-38·0	34·0-40·3	35·1-45·0
1981	7·5	7·5	7·5	7·5	7·5	7·5	7·5
1982	6·0	6·0	6·0	6·0	6·0	6·0	6·0

1984	5·1	5·1	5·1	5·1	5·1	5·1	5·1

* The increases for 1980 comprise two elements: the Clegg commission award ranging from 17 per cent. for the lowest paid teachers to 25 per cent. for the highest paid head teachers, and an arbitral award ranging from 14·5 per cent. for those receiving 17 per cent. from Clegg to 16 per cent. for those receiving 25 per cent.; giving compound increases in the range 34 to 45 per cent.

Deaf Children

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will explain a discrepancy between the figures for hearing-impaired pupils in mainstream schools collated by the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers Working Group and those collected by the British Association of Teachers of the Deaf; and if this discrepancy has any implications for the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers Working Group's recommendations.

Mr. Dunn: As the notes to the table in annex D to the advisory committee's report made clear, the figure for the number of hearing-impaired pupils in ordinary classes referred to those for whom a statement of special educational need would be appropriate under the Education Act 1981. The figure for "children in local schools" in the survey by the British Association of Teachers of the Deaf is not comparable, since it included all pupils seen by peripatetic teachers of the deaf. The fact that the use of different criteria produces different results does not appear to alter the validity of the working group's recommendations.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional specialist support staff and resources are provided in mainstream schools which have deaf pupils; and what extra training is provided for the other staff.

Mr. Dunn: These matters are the responsibility of local education authorities. Information on them is not collected centrally.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if there have been any responses in favour of the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers Working Party's main recommendations to remove the mandatory requirement for a specialist qualification for teachers of the deaf and partially hearing and to phase out initial teacher training and post graduate certificate courses for specialist teaching of those children.

Mr. Dunn: There were very few responses in favour of removing the mandatory requirement for teachers of deaf and partially hearing pupils to have a specialist qualification. Of the respondents who commented on the recommendation that initial specialist teacher training courses should be replaced by in-service training, a majority supported ACSET's view.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers Working Party took into account the experiences of other countries with regard to specialist qualifications of teachers of deaf children.

Mr. Dunn: It was for ACSET to determine those matters relevant to its inquiry into teacher training and special educational needs. My right hon. Friend understands that ACSET did not take direct account of the experiences of other countries.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers Working Party consulted with any deaf or hearing-impaired children.

Mr. Dunn: It was for ACSET to determine how it conducted its review of teacher training for special education. I understand that the committee did not consult deaf or partially hearing children.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) deaf people and (b) teachers of deaf pupils were on the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers Working Group.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that there were no deaf people or teachers of deaf pupils on the working group whose members, collectively, had considerable experience relevant to the review of teacher training and special educational needs carried out by ACSET.

Sign Language

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that British sign language is introduced as a major language option in schools.

Mr. Dunn: There is considerable divergence of opinion among experts as to whether British sign language should be regarded as a language or a system of communication. In the circumstances, it would be inappropriate for my right hon. Friend to take a particular stance on its introduction into the school curriculum.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to which mainstream schools and further education colleges have teachers or pupils who can use British sign language.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in descending order the cost of educating the average pupil in each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. I. Bufton

Mrs. Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends answering the letter sent to him on 4 November 1984 by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston, concerning her constituent Mr. I Bufton.

Mr. Brooke: I replied to my hon. Friend on 6 March.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Dollar-Pound Exchange Rate

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the value of the pound sterling against the United States dollar, at six-monthly intervals from June 1979 to December 1984, and also the most up-to-date figure in March 1985.

Mr. Lawson: The information requested is as follows:

June 1980	2·34
December 1980	2·35

Inflation

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the rates of inflation for 1978-79 and in each subsequent year to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lawson: The percentage changes in the retail prices index, financial year on previous financial year, are as follows:

	per cent.
1978-79	8·3
1979-80	15·8
1980-81	16·3
1981-82	11·5

1983-84	4·7

Industrial Society

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any information was provided by the Inland Revenue to the Industrial Society during 1984 concerning the incomes of individual taxpayers.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. and learned Member have a reply as soon as possible.

£1 Coin

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the specification of the material used in the manufacture of the £1 coin.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The material used in the £1 coin was specified by a royal proclamation dated 10 February 1982 which stated:

"A new coin of mixed metal of the denomination of one pound shall be made, being a coin of . . . a standard composition of seventy per centum copper, five and one half per centum nickel and twenty-four and one half per centum zinc.

In the making of the said mixed metal coin a remedy (that is a variation from the standard composition specified above) shall be allowed of an amount not exceeding the following, that is to say; a variation from the said standard composition of two per centum copper, three quarters per centum nickel and two per centum zinc."

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the precise dimensions of the £1 coin, together with the accepted tolerances.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The precise dimensions and tolerances of the £1 coin were specified by royal proclamation dated 10 February 1982, which stated:

"A new coin of mixed metal of the denomination of one pound shall be made, being a coin of a standard weight of 9·5 grammes, a standard diameter of 22·5 millimetres . . . and being circular in shape.

In the making of the said mixed metal coin a remedy (that is a variation from the standard weight, diameter . . . specified above) shall be allowed of an amount not exceeding the following, that is to say: A variation from the said standard weight of an amount per coin (measured as the average of a sample of not more than one kilo-gramme of the coin) of 0·05 grammes; and a variation from the said standard diameter of 0·1 millimetres per coin."

There is no legal edge thickness tolerance, but for the convenience of the vending industry, the Royal Mint has established tolerances which allow for 99·7 per cent. of coins to fall within the thickness range 2·95 to 3·25 millimetres.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he takes to satisfy himself that £1 coins have been, and are being, made to the specification; and if he will describe the procedures involved.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A provision is made under the Trial of the Pyx (Amendment) Order 1983 for the annual independent testing of the legal specifications and tolerances of coins manufactured by the Royal Mint.

In addition, the Royal Mint has a quality assurance department and operates an inspection procedure which includes the monitoring of edge thickness.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about variations in the size of different £1 coins.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Royal Mint has received several representations that vending machines are not accepting certain £1 coins. The royal Mint has asked for sample coins for examination and has thus far received three.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequ what is the difference in size or tolerances of the Scottis £1 coin as compared with the original design.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is no difference in the size o tolerances of £1 coins of different types.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequ what information he has as to the incidence o counterfeiting involving £1 coins.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since the £1 coin was issued on 2 April 1983, the Royal Mint has received 162 counterfe coins for investigation which, compared to the number o £1 coins in circulation, is negligible. The majority of thes counterfeits are easily detected.

Allowances

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Chancellor of th Exchequer if he will consider retaining the system of first year allowances on plant and machinery fo unincorporated businesses at 75 per cent. and the 10 pe cent. allowance on agricultural buildings.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply a soon as possible.

Married Couples (Taxation)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many couples have elected for separate taxation an assessment in each of the years since this option wa introduced.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: Estimates of the number of couples electing fo separate taxation of wife's earnings from 1975-76 are a follows. I regret that estimates for 1972-73 to 1974-75 ar not available. No regular survey is made of the number electing for separate assessment but the best estimate i about 20,000 couples. It is possible for couples to make both elections: no estimate can be made of the numbe who do so.

Extra-statutory Concessions

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consolidate all Her Majesty's Customs and Excise extra-statutory concessions into one publication, specifying in each case the fiscal year in which each concession was introduced.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 57]: This suggestion is being taken into account in the current review of the arrangements for publishing information on extra-statutory concessions.

Non-transferable Tax Allowance

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what single rate of non-transferable tax allowance could be introduced at an extra cost to the Exchequer of £1·5 billion if all the existing personal allowances were abolished and married couples were taxed as individuals.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1985]: An increase in the single allowance of £770 to £2,775 would have a direct revenue cost of about £1·5 billion in a full year at 1984-85 levels of income, if all other allowances were abolished. The estimate assumes that husbands and wives would be taxed as individuals and unused allowances would not be transferable between them. It has also been assumed that tax reliefs, including mortgage interest relief, continue to apply.

Family Taxation and Benefits

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what the effect would be, excluding those on the higher rates of tax, on (a) the numbers of working families with overall marginal tax rates of 50 per cent. or more and (b) the numbers of working families with marginal tax rates of 75 per cent. or more of (i) raising child benefit over and above indexation whilst keeping personal allowances in line with indexation, (ii) raising personal allowances over and above indexation with child benefit being increased in line with indexation only, (iii) raising both child benefit and personal allowances by the same percentage increase, assuming in all three cases a fiscal adjustment of £1·5 billion; and whether he will also show the amounts of increase in allowances and child benefit that would occur under each of these policies.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

All three options quoted would reduce the number of working families with a marginal tax rate of 75 per cent., or more, by about 10,000 to 20,000 although options (ii) and (iii) would result in some of these families still having a marginal tax rate of over 50 per cent. The effect would be similar but less marked for those with marginal tax rates of 50 per cent. or more, but it is not possible to be more precise.

The table shows the amounts of increases above indexation in allowances and child benefits that have been assumed for each option.

Options	Amount of increase above indexation
	Married man's tax allowance	Single person's tax allowance	Child benefit	One-parent benefit

ENVIRONMENT

House Building (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the housing starts and housing completions in Bolton since 1974 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Annual figures of housing starts and completions in Bolton are in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics":

	Number
1974	33
1975	37
1976	41
1977	45
1978	49
1979 revised	59
1980 revised	59
1981	61
1982	65
1983	69

Figures for January to September 1984 are in the latest issue No. 72. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Vacant Urban Land

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the extent of vacant urban land suitable for housing in the south-east.

Mr. Macfarlane: There is no overall figure available in the form requested, but the local authorities, in updating their development plans and undertaking joint land availability studies with the House Builders Federation, are continually reviewing the need for and provision of land for housing both in and outside urban areas.

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of urban vacant land have been released for development as a result of orders made under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. Macfarlane: The total area of land subject to directions made under section 98 of Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 is just over 30 acres. Tenders are currently being considered by three of the landowning bodies concerned, but to date no sale has been completed.

Housing Needs (South-East)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current projection of housing needs in the south-east between now and the end of the century; and how this differs from the projections made in 1980.

Sir George Young: Such projections have not been made in the form implied, for the reasons explained in my replies to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 1 March at column 296.

I am, however, awaiting with interest the outcome of the studies currently being undertaken by SERPLAN which are expected to cover the problem of future demand for housing land.

Central Berkshire Structure Plan

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with local employers concerning the central Berkshire structure plan.

Mr. Macfarlane: None. The Berkshire county council is currently considering proposals for a replacement Berkshire structure plan. It is the duty of the county council to review its structure plans and to undertake public consultation in respect of any proposals it makes for alteration or replacement. Following submission to my right hon. Friend of any such proposals, representations may be made to him, and local persons, including employers, may be invited to participate in an examination in public into the proposals.

Housing and Development (South-East)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the release of vacant land in urban areas for housing and development in the south-east.

Mr. Macfarlane: As was emphasised in my Department's circular on land for housing (15/84), published last year, the Government attach the greatest importance to making full and effective use of vacant land within urban areas, and I would like to see more progress on this front.

We are taking steps to ensure the release of land on land registers and are giving high priority to the reclamation of derelict land in urban areas. However, as the circular points out, most new housing will continue to be on new sites.

Land Releases

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many orders he has made under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 instructing local authorities and other public bodies to release land on the Land Register.

Mr. Macfarlane: Under the powers conferred upon him by section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, my right hon. Friend has directed four local authorities to take steps for the disposal of their interest in plots of land entered on the land register.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for assistance are currently being considered by the trustees of the national heritage memorial fund; and what is the total value of such applications under consideration in each of the following categories (a) buildings, (b) art objects, paintings etc. (c) manuscripts and archives, (d) industrial history, transport and maritime history, (e) scenic and amenity land and (f) nature conservation and land of scientific interest.

Mr. Macfarlane: I understand the trustees of the national heritage memorial fund currently have 29 applications under consideration, made up as follows:

Category	As
	£ m
(a) Buildings
(b) Art objects, paintings, etc.
(c) Manuscripts and archives
(d) Industrial history, transport and maritime history
(e) Scenic and amenity land
(f) Nature conservation and land of scientific interest

Rate Capping (Personal Files)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State f Environment (1) why his Department is keepin containing information on (a) the personal, (b financial and (c) the matrimonial circumstances of L councillors on the councils that are, or are going to b capped; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why he has authorised the gathering of inform on (a) the personal, (b) the financial and (c matrimonial circumstances of Labour councillors councils that are, or are going to be, rate capped; what sources the information is being gathered; and will make a statement;

(3) on what authority the information abou personal, financial and matrimonial circumstanc Labour councillors in councils that are, or are going rate capped, which is being collected by him, has passed to Conservative Central Office.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No such files are in exis nor have any arrangements been made to collect information.

South-East (Office Supply and Demand)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State f Environment what are the terms of reference objectives of his Department's research on office s and demand in London and the south-east.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Department is commissi research on the operation of the market for accommodation in London and the South East. Cen that research is the relationship between the dema and the supply of office accommodation. The obje are to identify the characteristics and determinan office supply and availability, including the influ upon the office development process, and to id obstacles to the efficient operation of the market.

Local Government Bill

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State f Environment what response his Department has ma the letter dated 16 November 1984, from the Assoc of London Borough Planning Officers regarding u development plan proposals in the Local Governmen

Mr. Macfarlane: My officials wrote to the Assoc of London Borough Planning Officers on 23 January offering to meet it to discuss the points which it had in its letter of 16 November 1984.

GLC (Property Auctions)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State f Environment why the Greater London council was st from selling, by auction, three properties at the Islington junction.

Sir George Young: On 10 October 1984 the GLC was asked to supply certain information required to enable my right hon. Friend to give proper consideration to its application for consent under section 8 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 to dispose of five properties at this junction. It was understood that disposal in the manner proposed could prejudice early consideration of road improvement works. I regret to say that to date the GLC has not responded.

London Planning Commission

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconcile the figures given in answers on 21 June 1984, Official Report, column 233, and 23 November 1984, Official Report, column 317, respectively, about the number of London borough councils which had expressed support for the proposed London planning commission.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government wrote to the hon. Member on 28 January 1985, confirming that the second of the two answers was correct.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which professional bodies have written to his Department expressing support for his planning proposals for London in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Association of London Borough Planning Officers indicated some support for the Government's revised proposals for unitary development plans as an improvement to their earlier proposals for separate structure and local plans, but has expressed detailed reservations about the arrangements for the preparation of strategic guidance.

Metropolitan Green Belt

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of the metropolitan green belt land have been released for development purposes by Government Departments and by statutory undertakers over the last 10 years.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is not available.

London Boroughs (Strategic Planning)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has sought outside his Department as to the level of detail to be embodied in his proposed strategic planning guidance for the London borough councils.

Mr. Macfarlane: No specific advice has been sought, but my right hon. Friend published proposals in his consultation paper and in the subsequent revised proposals paper and he will be guided by the advice of the London Planning Commission and by the views of the London boroughs on the detail of any strategic guidance he may issue.

London Boroughs (Green Belt Development)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call in for his decision every planning application for development in the green belt which London borough councils propose to approve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. There are no proposals for a change in policy.

Government Car Service (Parking Offences)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the reasons for a number of cars belonging to the Government car service being parked in such a manner as to be booked for parking offences outside the Welsh Office at 9.30 am on Tuesday 5 March.

Sir George Young: Three GCS cars attended passengers at the Welsh office on 5 March after 9 am. Traffic wardens spoke to the drivers but, as no parking offences were committed, no parking tickets were issued.

Homes Insulation Scheme

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire on Friday 13 February, Official Report, column 300-1, if he will publish full details of the scale and conditions of eligibility for grants under the homes insulation scheme in the Official Report.

Sir George Young: Full details of the homes insulation scheme 1984, the scale of grants available and conditions of eligibility are contained in Department of the Environment circular 13/84, copies of which are available in the Library.

Control of Pollution Act 1974

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environmentif he will place a copy of the review of the financial implications of the implementation of sections 12 to 14 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in the Library.

Mr. Gow: There is no review document as such, but I will place in the Library as soon as it is available a statement summing up the information obtained.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to implement sections 12 to 14 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friend is considering this in the light of the financial implications.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the current situation of the Vietnamese aggression in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Member Governments of the Association of South East Asian Nations keep us closely informed of their views about the current Vietnamese offensive in Cambodia. A representative of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front called on officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 16 January. We have made clear our deep concern to the Vietnamese Government bilaterally and jointly with European Community partners.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in respect of military or financial support given to Vietnamese forces by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: None. We deplore Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia and Soviet military and other assistance which permits this. The United Kingdom, with the overwhelming majority of the international community, wishes to see the total withdrawal of foreign forces from Cambodia, internationally supervised elections and the creation of an independent neutral and non-aligned Cambodia.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current refugee problem in Thailand as a result of Vietnamese aggression in Cambodia, giving the current numbers of refugees; what representations have been made about the matter by Her Majesty's Government and to whom; and what he proposes to do about the situation.

Mr. Rifkind: We strongly deplore the suffering caused to Cambodian civilians, some 240,000 of whom have recently fled to Thailand, and have so informed the Vietnamese authorities. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces announced in another place on 27 February, at column 965, a special grant of £250,000 to the United Nations border relief operation in addition to £250,000 already given this year. We supported a recent European Community pledge of food aid for refugees in Thailand. We are monitoring the situation closely.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the course of his official visit to Thailand, he will establish contact with any of the forces resisting Vietnamese aggression in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to his question of 5 March at column 436. We have periodic contact with the non-Communist Cambodian resistance groups, and as my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) told the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Miss Maynard) on 11 February at column 31, we provide modest assistance to them, solely of a humanitarian nature.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what talks he proposes to have, and with whom, about sanctions against Vietnam following its aggression in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We are in frequent contact with Western partners and members of the Association of South East Asian Nations about policy towards Vietnam in the light of its continuing occupation of Cambodia. We firmly adhere to the policy announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 July 1979 not to provide aid to Vietnam and, where necessary, encourage others to do likewise.

Cruise Missiles (Sweden and Finland)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to Sweden and Finland as a result of threats by those countries to shoot down North Atlantic Treaty Organisation cruise missiles passing over their territory.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

Israel (Arms)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Fo Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the ba Majesty's Government on the export of arms following that country's invasion of Lebanon maintain the ban until Israel withdraws from the invaded and occupied in Jordan, Egypt and Syr he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Restrictions on arms sales to Is imposed following the Israeli invasion of Le 1982. These restrictions can be reviewed a withdrawal is completed. The Israeli occupation c Jordanian and Egyptian territory in 1967 took different circumstances and no such restrictions v imposed.

Mr. Yasser Arafat

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Fo Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the ran Ministers in Her Majesty's Government, or of in European Economic Community member Gov representing the European Economic Commun have met Mr. Yasser Arafat in an official capac

Mr. Rifkind: No Minister in Her M Government has had an official meeting with Mr Arafat. The then Netherlands Foreign Minister, der Klaauw, met Mr. Arafat in his presidency ca 17 April 1981, during a round of contacts with th to the Arab-Israel dispute. Full information r Ministers of other EC Governments is not availa

New Zealand Farmers

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for For Commonwealth Affairs what foreign policy objec envisaged by providing New Zealand farmers wi of access to United Kingdom and European E Community markets; and if he will make a state

Mr. Rifkind: The old and close ties that United Kingdom and New Zealand are too ev require exposition.

The Community recognises that New Z economy is dependent upon dairy and sheepmeat and that access to Community markets is essenti At the time of our accession, a commitment was t given to allow continuing access to the United K market for New Zealand's butter on special ter commitment was embodied in protocol 18 to our Accession to the Community. ANZUS Treaty

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statment on the implication for the United Kingdom and the Western Alliance of New Zealand's decision to opt out of her obligations under ANZUS; and what steps he proposes to take.

Mr. Rifkind: Although the United Kingdom is not a signatory to the ANZUS treaty, we view with concern any disagreement between its members, all of whom are our friends and allies. We are also concerned at the effect of New Zealand policy on ship visits. We have made our views clear both to the New Zealand Government and to the others involved and are ready to take any opportunity to contribute to a resolution of these difficulties.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to decide on the possibility of appointing official observers to the forthcoming elections in El Salvador; and what considerations he is taking into account in making his decision.

Mr. Renton: We shall announce a decision once we have received and considered an invitation from the Salvadorean Government.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which countries have appointed official observers to the forthcoming elections in El Salvador; and what are their terms of reference.

Mr. Renton: We are continuing active consultations with our European partners. We do not yet know the details of other countries' decisions regarding official observers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Rape Case (Cardiff)

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General what, pursuant to his answer of 23 November regarding withdrawal of proceedings against a man for rape at Cardiff magistrates' court on 5 November, were the essential elements of the alleged offence in respect of which the death of the complainant rendered the evidence insufficient; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: In the absence of evidence from the complainant, admissible against the defendant under the rules of evidence, the prosecution could not have established the following essential ingredients of the offence of rape: (a) Sexual intercourse with the complainant; (b) The absence of consent; (c) The requisite mens rea.

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General whether in the case of the man against whom proceedings for rape were withdrawn at Cardiff magistrates' court on 5 November, any statement had been made by the accused.

The Solicitor-General: The accused answered questions put to him by police officers and also made a written statement under caution.

Social Security Commissioners (Decisions)

Mr. Clay asked the Attorney-General how m complete editions of Social Security Commission decisions have been published during the past year whom any such editions were made available; what the total cost of publishing such editions; what steps taken to make such editions available to organisation individuals who may wish to purchase them; and if he make a statement on the publication of such editions in future.

The Solicitor-General: Complete editions of decisions are not published. A selection of the m significant decisions is made by the Chief Commissio and these are published by Her Majesty's Stationery Of as reported decisions. Each reported decision is availa to the public from Her Majesty's Stationery Office in first instance separately in loose-leaf form. Bo volumes covering one or more years are produced la In 1984, 97 loose-leaf reported decisions were publis and are thus available for purchase by the public. Th will be included in the next bound volume. Her Majes Stationery Office does not operate a job costing system cannot identify separate costs relating to individual tit The arrangements for publication will be kept un review.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Foulkes asked the Attorney-General if he will all occasions in the last three years when an alle contravention of the Official Secrets Act was referre him or to the Director of Public Prosecutions; and w action was taken in each case.

The Solicitor-General: No. It would not be righ make information public about cases in which there have been reason to suspect that criminal offences have been committed, whether or not offences under Official Secrets Acts, but in which, because prosecution was in the end instituted, the question of guilt or innocence of the persons concerned was publicly determined.

GCHQ

Mr. Foulkes asked the Attorney-General on w occasions in the last three years he or the Director of Pu Prosecutions has discussed possible prosecutions under Official Secrets Act 1911 of staff of (a) Governm communications headquarters and (b) Northwood; with whom.

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to reply to his earlier question today on a similar matte

DEFENCE

European Defence Co-operation

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defe if he will define the respective roles of the North Atla Treaty Organisation Eurogroup and Western Euro Union in promoting European co-operation in defen

Mr. Stanley: The Western European Union and Eurogroup have complementary roles to play in promo European defence co-operation within the ov framework of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation. The Eurogroup provides a forum for discussions between Defence Ministers and for practical defence co-operation between European members of the Alliance. The reactivated Western European Union affords foreign and Defence Ministers of member countries valuable opportunities for joint political debate on and further impetus towards improved European security co-operation.

RAF Molesworth

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Defence what costs were incurred in the erection of the 7½ mile barbed wire fence around the RAF Molesworth cruise missile base.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 26 February last at column 156.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil contractors were involved in the erection of the barbed wire fences at the RAF Molesworth base and in the provision of the observation platforms and perimeter lighting for the purpose of assisting Ministry of Defence guards.

Mr. Lee: The temporary fence, observation platforms and perimeter lighting were erected by the Royal Engineers. The permanent weldmesh fence was erected by contractors and involved a labour force of some 160.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current rate of expenditure per week on the security operations at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 208]: This information is not kept in the form requested, but I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance he has requested from civilian police forces to assist in security operations at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 208]: Policing operations on the Ministry of Defence land at RAF Molesworth are the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence Police. No assistance has been sought to date from other police forces in carrying out these duties, although the chief constable of the Cambridgeshire Constabulary was fully briefed in advance on the operations at RAF Molesworth to enable him to discharge his responsibilities outside the base and on public roads, up to the perimeter of the Ministry of Defence land. There has since been close consultation and co-operation on policing matters of joint concern.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of his Department's police are currently involved in security operations at RAF Molesworth;

(2) how many Army and Royal Air Force personnel are currently assigned to the security operation at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1985, c. 208]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhi February 1985 at column 163. It is not our security reasons, to give the actual number o Defence police or service personnel engage duties at specific locations.

Mr. Butler: The United Kingdom Trident planned to enter service in the mid 1990s and in service until at least 2020.

Air Crew (Drugs)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of Defence which benzodiazepine preparations a air crew employed by his Department.

Mr. Lee: The only benzodiazepine preparati air crew in all three services is temazepam.

WALES

Industrial Development

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve Wales's profile in terms of attracting industrial development.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: There are always improvements to be made. However, the fact is that 47 new overseas companies have decided to locate in Wales since I established WINvest in April 1983 as the focal point for our efforts to attract industrial development. This represents about 24 per cent. of the new projects secured for the United Kingdom during this time. In the same period 24 investment projects by overseas companies that have already chosen Wales as a location have been announced. Taken together this represents investment in excess of £300 million. Nearly 400 applications for regional selective assistance were received by my Department in 1984; 16,500 inquiries were received by my Department's small firms centre; over 1·8 million sq ft of factory space was let; and the WDA/private sector Welsh venture capital fund was launched in January. All of this suggests that Wales is attracting, and continues to attract, a high share of mobile projects and that the advantages that Wales has to offer as an industrial location for projects new to Wales and for indigenous growth are well understood and appreciated. Apart from its other activities WINvest will also be participating fully in the forthcoming Britain Means Business campaign.

Contaminated Land

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has undertaken a review of the extent of contaminated land in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A review of contaminated land has been conducted in Wales by Liverpool university on behalf of the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency. A report was published in March 1984 and I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

Baglan Industrial Estate

Mr. John Morris asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many factories have been let on the Baglan industrial estate and how many are still unlet; and how many visits were made to the estate by interested industrialists in the last six months.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Of the nine factories on the Baglan industrial park, one has so far been let, six are currently under offer and two are available for letting. Comprehensive records of visits made by interested industrialists to individual industrial estates are not maintained, but it is estimated that 35 visits have been made to Baglan industrial park by prospective tenants in the last six months.

Engineering Industry

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how may persons are now employed in general engineering in Wales; and what were the numbers in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The published series annual figures for employees in the metal go engineering and vehicles industries (Division 3 SIC(for 1979-81 related to June. For consistency a June s is therefore given for the whole period covered by question:

Month	Number

Women (Unemployment)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State Wales how many women in Wales were regist unemployed in (a) 1979, (b) 1982 and (c) January 1 and what were the figures in percentage terms in each c

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The number regist unemployed in Wales in January 1979 was 28,090 a of 6·5 per cent. and in January 1982 51,246 a rate of per cent. Information available for January 1985 relat claimants, of whom there were 53,809, a rate of 12· cent.

Mid-Wales Development

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State Wales what was the budget of Mid-Wales Developme 1983-84 and 1984-85; what is the budget for 1985-86 if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The budget for Development Board for Rural Wales was £9,439,0(1983-84 and £9,672,000 in 1984-85. The budget 1985-86, which is subject to parliamentary approval, be published in the Supply Estimates on 19 March.

Limited List Prescribing

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for W how many representations he has received from mem of the public with regard to the Government's prop to limit the range of drugs available on the National H Service.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A total of 452 representations been received from members of the public and Members on behalf of constituents. 77 of representations have been from doctors.

PRIME MINISTER

USA (Visit)

Q12. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister wh she will make a statement on her recent visit to the U States of America.

Q44. Mr. Malone asked the Prime Minister if she make a statement about her recent visit to Washing

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friends t statement I made to the House on 26 February, at col 173-86.

Intelligence Accountability

Q19. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will set up a committee of inquiry to examine and report on the problems of intelligence accountability to Parliament.

The Prime Minister: No. I am satisfied with existing arrangements for the control of the security and intelligence agencies.

Trades Union Congress

Q62. Mr. Bidwell asked the Prime Minister when she next proposes to meet the leaders of the Trades Union Congress.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Q110. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about President Reagan's strategic defence initiative.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 26 February, at columns 173-86.

European Community Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report the overall limit which has been set on the Budget for 1985 and the base percentage used for putting a ceiling on agricultural spending.

The Prime Minister: The Community has no budget for 1985. The draft budget was rejected by the European Parliament on 13 December and the Commission has not yet put forward new proposals. The financial guideline for agriculture, which is part of the budgetary discipline system, applies for the first time to expenditure in the 1986 financial year. The Commission's 1985 price fixing proposals have therefore been drawn up in accordance with the financial guideline.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the European Economic Community has now agreed to a corrective mechanism for budgetary imbalances concerning an increase in the value added tax contribution under own resources; and whether the Government will require the money lent to the European Economic Community by way of an advance to be repaid out of savings within the present financial ceiling in the current year.

The Prime Minister: The European Community agreed the mechanism for correcting budgetary imbalances at the Fontainebleau European Council. Detailed discussion of the text of the new own resources decision which will implement the mechanism is continuing.

Advances of own resources collected by member states on behalf of the Community are recovered from the sums paid on the normal dates in the current year.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what were the conditions referred to in the last part of her reply dated 29 March 1984, Official Report, column 242, concerning the proposal to increase the value added tax contribution to 1·4 per cent.; how many of these conditions have now been met; and whether she will update the expected yield from an increase in the value added tax contribution to 1·4 per cent.

The Prime Minister: The conditions to which I referred, as I said when I reported to the House on the outcome of the March 1984 European Council, were that there should be effective control of agricultural and other spending and that there should be a fair sharing of the United Kingdom budgetary burden.

The Council of Ministers adopted on 4 December its conclusions on implementing the system of budgetary discipline to control agricultural and other spending. The Fontainebleau European Council agreed a new system for abating our contributions. Detailed implementation of this and other aspects of the increase in the Community's VAT own resources is still under discussion. We shall not ask the House to approve them until we are satisfied on all aspects.

Leaving aside the United Kingdom abatement, on the basis of the 1984 figures, an increase in the VAT ceiling from 1 to 1·4 per cent. would add some £3·5 billion to the maximum amount of revenue available to the Community, an increase of around 23 per cent. After taking account of the United Kingdom abatement, the increase would be lower, probably in the range 15 to 20 per cent.

Engagements

Mr. Beith asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 March.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Labour Statistics

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Prime Minister what was the total number of men, women and young people unemployed in each year from December 1978 to December 1984 in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland, respectively.

The Prime Minister: The following table shows the information requested, in respect of total unemployed claimants. Comparisons are affected by the 1983 Budget provisions by which some men, mainly aged 60 years and over, no longer need to sign on in order to receive supplementary benefit or national insurance credits.

The second table shows the number of unemployed registrants aged under 18 years for January of each year from 1979 to 1982 (not available for December) and the number of unemployed claimants under 18 years for January of each year from 1982.

Oil and Gas Revenue and Unemployment Benefit

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Prime Minister if she will cause to be published in the Official Report a table showing for each year between 1979 and 1984 (a) the amount of revenue received by the Treasury in respect of North sea oil and gas, (b) the amount paid out in respect of unemployment benefit and (c) the percentage figure which (b) forms of (a) in these years.

The Prime Minister: The figures for the financial years 1977-78 to 1983-84 are as follows:

Channels Islands

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister whether the circumstances in which Her Majesty's Government will intervene in the internal workings of the Channel Islands include taking steps to promote better legal administrations on the islands.

The Prime Minister: The Channel Islands are internally self-governing dependencies of the Crown. I am not aware of any problems arising from their legal administration which would justify the exceptional exercise of the United Kingdom's paramount power to intervene in their internal affairs.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fingerprints

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he assesses the cost-effectiveness of fingerprint identification by the Metropolitan police (a) by conventional methods and (b) by the automatic fingerprint recognition system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Fingerprint identification is used by the National Identification Bureau to confirm the identity of arrested persons and by the Metropolitan police to assist the detection of crime. The cost and accuracy of the present methods of fingerprint identification are now under review as part of a study of the case for extending the use of automatic fingerprint recognition technology in the police service.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional fingerprint identifications beyond that which would otherwise have been obtained have been made by the automatic fingerprint recognition system of the Metropolitan police since its inception; if he will break the figure down by category of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police automatic fingerprint recognition system has been in use since September 1984. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, despite a reduced volume of work, identifications have increased by 215 (19 per cent.) between September 1984 and January 1985 compared with the same period in 1983-84.

Information about the numbers of identifications by offence is not readily available but most offences were of burglary, robbery, theft and allied crimes.

Private Security Vans

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were instituted in the last 12 months for which figures are available against the drivers and occupants of private security vans for breach of traffic legislation.

Mr. Mellor: The types of proceedings specified are not separately identifiable in the information collected centrally on court proceedings.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his officials have had with the operators of private security firms about their adherence to traffic regulations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None. Enforcement of road traffic law, which applies equally to private security vehicles and drivers as to others, is the responsibility of the chief officers of police.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends bringing into force the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The first stage in the implementation of the Act took place on 1 January 1985. The provisions that came into effect on that date included section 106, which requires arrangements to be made in each police area for obtaining the views of the community on policing, certain miscellaneous provisions which it was convenient to bring into effect in advance of the major parts of the Act, and certain provisions of section 1 necessary to continue existing stop and search powers in those parts of the country which had hitherto exercised such powers under local legislation (and applying only to those areas).

The second stage of implementation will principally include part IX of the Act which establishes the Police Complaints Authority and other changes to the police complaints system. It has been necessary to defer the start of part IX a little beyond 1 April, in order to assist the consideration by the Police Advisory Board of the draft regulations needed to introduce the new scheme.

The third stage will continue the outstanding provisions of parts I to VIII—with the exception of subsections (11) to (14) of section 37, which are dependent upon provisions of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 not yet in force, and section 60, which provides for the tape recording of police interviews with suspects and which will be subject to a separate programme of implementation in the light of the progress of the field trials now taking place in various police areas.

The date for the third stage of implementation to which my right hon. and learned Friend has asked forces to work is 1 January 1986, which is also the date on which he proposes to ask Parliament to agree that the four codes of practice which section 66 requires him to issue shall come into force.

Entry Clearance Applications

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of applications for entry clearance into the United Kingdom submitted by citizens from (a) former British Commonwealth countries and (b) present British Commonwealth countries were turned down in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates only to countries in the Indian sub-continent, and is given in the table below.

Refusal rate for all applications† for entry clearance to the United Kingdom*

Percentage

	Parkistan	Bangladesh	India
1979	27	27	10

* Applications refused initially as a percentage of applications decided (i.e. refused initially or granted initially or on appeal)

† Applications for entry clearance for immediate settlement, for entry as husbands or fiances, students, visitors, etc. The refusal rates will be affected by the proportion of applications in the various categories.

‡ First three quarters of the year; fourth quarter figures will become available next week.

Prisons (Babies)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies were refused a place in the mother and baby units at Holloway, Styal and Askham Grange prisons in 1983 and 1984, respectively; what were the reasons for the refusal; and what subsequently happened to the babies.

Mr. Mellor: In 1983, four babies were refused admission to the unit at Holloway, two because of the length of their mothers' sentences and two because the unit was full. Two of the babies were taken into care, one remained with its grandmother and one remained with an aunt.

In 1984, three babies were refused admission to the unit at Holloway, one because of the length of the mother's sentence and two because the unit was full. Two babies remained with their grandparents and one remained with a friend of the mother.

There is no record of any babies being refused admission to the units at Styal or Askham Grange during 1983 or 1984.

Murder (Sentences)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recommendations for minimum periods of (a) 20 years or more and (b) 25 years or more have been made under section 1(2) of the Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965.

Mr. Mellor: As at 31 December 1984, the information in respect of England and Wales was as follows:

(a) 67 (excluding those in b)

(b) 48

Organ Transplants

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance his Department issues to coroners concerning approval for the removal of (a) kidneys and (b) other organs for transplant purposes;

(2) whether he has received any complaints relating to any coroner concerning approval for the removal of (a) kidneys and (b) other organs for transplant purposes.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office offers guidance to coroners by means of Home Office circulars. Four such circulars (numbers 182/1961, 65/1977, 172/1977 and 44/1983) relating to transplant surgery have been issued, in the years shown in the references. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. We have recently received two complaints, both relating to one coroner, concerning approval for the removal of kidneys.

Crime Watch

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to chief constables about the advice given by them to crime watch or anti-crime organisations being run in certain towns by private citizens in respect of the degree of force used in making arrests of people whom they consider have committed a criminal offence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office crime prevention unit in collaboration with the Home Office crime prevention centre, Stafford, has issued guidance to police forces on the introduction of neighbourhood watch schemes. This stresses co-operation to prevent crime and speedy reporting of suspicious activities to the police and discourages vigilante style direct action.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to launch any publicity campaigns encouraging private citizens to establish their own crime watch or anti-crime organisations to assist police officers in those constabularies where police manning levels are understaffed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office crime prevention publicity campaign, which was launched in October 1984 in London and the Midlands, featured neighbourhood watch and we are providing all forces with publicity material they can use in support of such schemes.

Satellite Television

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which regions of the United Kingdom will be able to pick up satellite television broadcasts resulting from his proposals to amend the regulations governing the reception of satellite signals.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The reception of direct broadcasting by satellite is already authorised by the broadcast receiving licence. No such services yet exist which can be received in the United Kingdom. The Government have made no decision on whether to authorise the reception by individuals of low powered satellite services, but a number of cable operators are licensed to receive and distribute such services within the United Kingdom. The signals from satellites cover a very wide area and it is to be expected that all regions in the United Kingdom would be able to receive them.

Civil Defence

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make provision for civil defence in Swindon.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Civil Defence (Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 makes it a duty of county and district councils to make provision for civil defence in their areas. Local authorities have been asked to complete the plans required by 31 December 1985.

Policemen (Rates of Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether different special rates of pay are allocated to policemen employed to remove protesters and demonstrators on Ministry of Defence property from those awarded to officers policing miners' picket lines.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Immigration and Nationality

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester police as to the numbers of officers within the Greater Manchester police engaged full-time on immigration and nationality matters, their ranks and branch of the police force and a summary of their duties.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend understands from the chief constable of Greater Manchester that no police officers in the force are engaged full-time on immigration and nationality matters.

Public Disorder (Wolverhampton)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands concerning incidents of public disorder which occurred in Dudley street, Wolverhampton, on Wednesday 20 February; what was the cause and nature of the disturbance ; how many persons were involved; how many were arrested; whether there were any injuries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend understands from the chief constable of West Midlands that the disturbance in Dudley street on 20 February occurred when four officers were arresting two youths. A crowd of about 60 people tried to intervene and the disorder spread to a nearby store, before ending after a further 25 officers had arrived. There were 22 arrests and five police officers were injured. No injuries to members of the public were reported to the police.

Remanded Persons

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on each day in January and February 1985, how many prisoners remanded in custody at Her Majesty's remand centre, Risley, were not produced at magistrates' courts where they were due to appear as defendants.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on each day in January and February 1985, how many prisoners remanded in custody at Her Majesty's prison Strangeways, Manchester, were not produced at magistrates' courts where they were due to appear as defendants.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the relevant chief constables as to the number of persons injured in connection with the miners' dispute to the latest available date (a) from the beginning of the dispute and (b) since 1 January 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Up to 5 March, 1,392 police officers had been injured while carrying out duties connected with the dispute, 96 of these injuries occurring since 3 January. It is not possible to say how many members of the publ have been injured because not all such injuries are reporte to the police.

NOTES

(1) No figure is available for injuries sustained since 1 Janua itself.

(2) Where the same person has been injured on differe occasions, more than one entry will have been made in th figures given.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State fo the Home Department if he will call for reports from th relevant chief constables as to the number of perso charged in connection with the miners' dispute at the late available date (a) from the beginning of the dispute and (b since 1 January 1985; and if he will break each categor down by occupation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Up to 26 February, 7,879 persons ha been charged in connection with the dispute, 412 of thos being charged since 8 January. It is not possible from th information available centrally to give the occupations o those charged.

NOTES

(1) No figure is available for the number of those charged sinc 1 January itself.

(2) Where the same person has been the subject of charges o different occasions, more than one entry will have been made i the figures given.

Prisons (Diets)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for th Home Department what arrangements are made for th provision of vegan diets in Her Majesty's prisons; and i he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In accordance with guidance issued to al establishments inmates may, on application, be supplie with a vegan diet which is drawn from the vegetaria ration scale but with items supplemented and substitute as necessary.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of Stat for the Home Department (1) what organisations hav been in receipt of funding from his Department fo research into alternatives to the use of animals fo experimental purposes in each of the last three years;

(2) what funding from his Department has bee available in each of the last three years for research int alternatives to the use of animals in experiments;

(3) if he will make a statement on the progress that ha been made in recent years in finding alternatives to the us of animals for experimental purposes; and whic individuals or organisations have been responsible for tha research;

(4) whether he has any plans to increase the funding b his Department for research into alternatives to the use o animals in experiments.

Mr. Mellor: The Government made a substantial gran this year to the fund for the replacement of animals i medical experiments for three projects, and my right hon and learned Friend announced on 16 January that th Government are paying £30,000 to the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare for a two-year project int improving the caging of laboratory rodents. We have a present no immediate plans for further Home Offic funding, but the situation is kept under review

Considerable progress has been made in many laboratories in finding and developing alternatives. I understand that more experiments are now performed using in vitro alternatives such as isolated organs, tissues or cells than whole animals. The Government welcome this progress. All licencees under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 are regularly reminded of the need to develop and use alternatives wherever practicable. Under the new legislation we plan to introduce to replace the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 procedures on animals will not be authorised if the results can satisfactorily be obtained by alternative means.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 10 individuals or organisations which, in each of the last three years, have been issued with the greatest number of authorisations for the use of animals for experimental purposes.

Mr. Mellor: No authorisations under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 can be granted to organisations. I regret that information about individual licencees with the greatest number of authorisations is not readily available and could be ascertained only at disportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Products (Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report the estimated production of the principal agricultural products under the common agricultural policy in each European Economic Community country in 1984 so far as at present known.

Grain

Miss Maynard asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of grain stored in the United Kingdom on 30 November 1984; and what is the cost of storing such grain per day.

Mr. MacGregor: The value of cereals in intervention storage in the United Kingdom at 30 November 1984 was £267 million, applying the price per tonne set out in the annex to Commission regulation (EEC) No. 3248/84. Information on the cost of its storage is commercially confidential and depends on contractual terms negotiated at variable rates with individual storekeepers. The best guide is probably the monthly increment in intervention prices, which is designed to represent, on the basis of objective intervention provided by all EC member states, the cost of holding grain in store for one month, ignoring for example, handling charges. The increment for feed grain (which accounts for the bulk of the stock held) is £1·59 per tonne per month.

Farm Holdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of companies owning agricultural land and the number of holdings and acreage so owned.

Mr. MacGregor: No official statistics are available on the ownership of agricultural land. However, following the passing of the Agriculture (Amendment) Act last year, which widened the Minister's powers to ask questions on land ownership we are currently considering as to how best to improve statistics on land ownership and occupation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report such estimates as he has been able to make concerning the number of persons owning more than one agricultural holding and, in particular, the numbers holding two or more holdings in excess of 50 hectares.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on the number of persons owning more than one agricultural holding is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will supplement table 4 of the annual review White Paper, Cmnd. 9423, with a table in the Official Report showing (a) the number of holdings of crops and grass with more than 200 and more than 300 hectares and their percentage of the total area, (b) the number of holdings with more than 500 and more than 1,000 standard man days together with their percentage contribution to production and (c) numbers and volume for holdings of more than 40 hectares of sugar beet, 100 dairy cows, 100 beef cows, 1,000 sheep, 50,000 laying fowls and 250,000 broilers.

Mr. MacGregor: Such information as is readily available is contained in "Agricultural Statistics United Kingdom 1983" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

European Community Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what effect a 10 per cent. fall in the value of the dollar would have on expenditure on the EEC budget under the various headings relating to matters within his responsibility.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission has estimated that, assuming all other factors were unchanged, a 10 per cent. fall in the value of the dollar against the ecu would increase FEOGA expenditure by about 1,000 million ecu. The increases would arise principally on export refunds for cereals and production aids for oilseeds and cotton.

Field Beans

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970, 1979, 1983 and 1984, respectively, the production, imports, exports and apparent consumption of field beans, the average prices in each case and the subsidy to United Kingdom production from public funds.

Mr. MacGregor: The figures available for field beans in the United Kingdom are as follows:

('000 tonnes)

Production	160	128	105·1	125·7

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minist Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decisions hav taken by the European Economic Community unc common agricultural policy about support for pe field beans, soya and lupin seeds in the past 12 m and what are the financial implications.

Mr. MacGregor: In March 1984 the Agric Council reduced the minimum and activating pric peas and beans by 1 per cent., saving about 1·8 made permanent the human consumption peas and scheme and reduced the guide price by 1 per cent. 0·3 mecu; raised the minimum and guide prices fo by 1·5 per cent., costing 1·1 mecu; and introduced scheme for the incorporation of lupins in animal costing 2 mecu. (All figures are based on Comm estimates of full year effects.)

Agricultural Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Ministe Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will p in the Official Report the evidence he has to sho lower prices have the effect of increasing output agricultural field.

Mr. MacGregor: I am aware of no valid sci evidence to support this contention.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Ministe Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the ra indebtedness to operating capital in agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: Ratios of the external liabilit the assets of farm businesses in England, according to tenure type, are shown in table 32 of the report " Incomes in England, 1983/84". A copy of this repor the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Ministe Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the statist table 23B of Cmnd. 9423 are all on an historic cost and if he will publish in the Official Report correspo figures for any of the columns for any of the years to 1970.

Mr. MacGregor: The figures in table 23B of C 9423 are calculated on a current cost basis. Correspo figures for 1966 to 1970 are not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the increase in farming income on an historic cost basis since the average of the years 1967-68 to 1969-70.

Mr. MacGregor: The information on an historic cost basis is not available.

Salmon Tagging

Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investigation he has undertaken of the value of a salmon tagging scheme as a means of preventing poaching; what obstacles he has identified to the successful implementation of such a scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 20 February, at column 458, we have carried out a very thorough review of the practical problems associated with a salmon tagging scheme. This has involved discussions with the interested parties which have identified particular difficulties over the successful implementation of such a scheme, including the control of imports, the handling of our own farmed salmon and control over the issue and use of tags. I shall make an announcement as soon as we have been able to reach a conclusion.

Wages and Employment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the latest available year the information given in Appendix 1*(a)* and 1*(c)* of the Government Economic Service Working Paper No. 52 on wages and employment in agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the following tables:

Agricultural Products (Prices)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated disposals on world markets on which the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section of the 1985 budget appropriations is based, specifying the tonnage of the principal products and the corresponding outturn for 1984.

Mr. MacGregor: The 1985 European Community budget has not yet been adopted. Final statistics on exports of agricultural products from the Community are not yet available for 1984.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for meat, dairy products and sugar (a) the ex-farm, ex-factory price, (b) the target price, (c) the intervention price and (d) the retail price in 1984 and at the latest available date, where possible on the same basis as the reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 25 June 1980, Official Report, columns 215-18.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested on ex-farm, ex-factory prices and retail prices is in the following tables. Details of target and intervention prices are set out on pages 234-243 of "The Agricultural Situation in the European Community—1984 Report", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The representative rate, at which institutional prices should be converted to sterling, remains at £1=1·61641 ecu.

European Community (Net Value Added)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the net value added per head in Britain agriculture in real terms each year since 1973 calculated on the basis used in the table on page 36 of the 1983 report on the agricultural situation in the Community.

Mr. MacGregor: The following table shows the SOEC index of real agricultural net value added at factor cost per person engaged, with the average of 1979 to 1981 being equal to 100.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minis Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publis Official Report the principal items of expenditure European Economic Community country whi designed to encourage production of products subsequently have to be disposed of under the c agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: I do not have full and a details of any such items of expenditure.

Warble Fly

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, F and Food whether he will list the countries in the E Economic Community which require by law al farmers to use an organophosphorous compound exclusive method of controlling warble fly.

Mrs. Fenner: Comprehensive information on t position in other member states could be obtained detailed and expensive inquiries. However, information available to us, the following understanding of the situation.

The Republic of Ireland is the only other Com country with a national eradication campaign. Com dressing with a systemic treatment, includi ganophosphorous compounds, is a requirement infestation is found. In Germany, infected he required to be treated in the spring and autumn systemic dressing. In France, the Netherlands a there are regional schemes where there is com treatment using approved organophosphorous dre Neither Belgium nor Greece has a control programm voluntary systemic treatments are encouraged, D is free from warble fly infestations.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fi and Food what steps are being taken by Her Ma Government to provide dairy quotas for new entr dairy farming other than through inheriting, buy leasing dairy quota.

Mr. Jopling: At present our priority must be t those who are already committed to dairying. That we intend to re-allocate quota obtained from outg small producers and to exceptional hardship cases. dairy farmers and other potential new entrants to th industry are not of course prevented from doing so can acquire a farm with quota on it in one of the w hon. Member has described. Given the continuing production of milk in the Community, it may not b best interests of new producers or the industry ge to facilitate their entering into dairying.

Lobsters

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minis Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lobste exported from the United Kingdom to member state European Community in 1984; to which countrie exports were made; how many lobsters were import the United Kingdom from Economic Community m states in 1984; and from which countries these i were made.

Research

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Agriculture and Food Research Council in respect of research spending budgetary allocations.

Mr. Jopling: There are close and continuing consultations between my Department and the Agricultural and Food Research Council on the future programme of commissioned work. These issues are also discussed in the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food, on which the AFRC is represented. In addition, members of the Agricultural and Food Research Service have expressed their views on future budgetary allocations in correspondence to hon. members and these have been forwarded to me and my colleagues.

Agricultural Trade Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1981 to overcome the problem of price differentials for trade in cereals as described in paragraph 10 of the evidence submitted by the Grain and Feed Trade Association and the United Kingdom Agriculture Supply Trade Association to the Select Committee of the House of Lords on the European Communities concerning agricultural trade policy published in its second report, Session 1981-82.

Mr. MacGregor: The fixing of cereal prices is a matter for the Community as a whole. The United Kingdom Government have consistently and strongly argued for a policy of price restraint in this sector, including a reduction in target (and hence threshold) prices and for the abolition of the additional price support given to breadmaking wheat. Since 1981 this policy has been increasingly successful. Cereals support price were cut in ecu terms in 1984-85 and the Commission proposals for 1985-86 include a 3·57 per cent. reduction in target and intervention price for most cereals.

In addition, since 1981 the impact of special support for breadmaking wheat has been greatly reduced. The premium for minimum quality breakmaking wheat has been cut and a 3 million tonne limit imposed on the quantity of wheat that may be bought into intervention at this price.

For 1985-86 the Commission has said that it does not intend to operate intervention at this level at all. The 120-day delay in payment for sales into intervention applied to all cereals since last season has also effectively reduced cereal prices.

Mediterranean Products

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been taken by the European Economic Community to curb production of Mediterranean products as foreseen in his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 27 April 1984, Official Report, columns 630-31.

Mr. MacGregor: Since I replied to the hon. Member on 27 April 1984, at columns 630-31, it became apparent that the guarantee threshold applying in the 1983-84 marketing year to certain tomato products had been exceeded and as a consequence the proposed processing aid in respect of tomato concentrate in 1984-85 was reduced, proportionately, by 4·7 per cent.

Important decisions have been taken on wine. At its meeting on 25 to 27 February the Council of Ministers adopted measures amounting to a guarantee threshold whereby production in excess of a defined limit has to be distilled at low prices together with a system of aid for producers grubbing up vines and going out of production and a commitment to a restrictive price policy.

Livestock Shipments (Falkland Islands)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is intended to make further shipments of livestock to the Falkland Islands.

Mrs. Fenner: I am not at present aware of any plans for such shipments.

New Zealand Produce

Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost to British farmers of the special arrangements made by which New Zealand farmers enjoy access to the British market for agricultural produce following the United Kingdom's accession to the European Community; and for how long these commitments will last.

Mr. MacGregor: The European Community's commitment to provide continued access to the United Kingdom market on special terms for certain quantities of New Zealand butter derives from protocol 18 of the United Kingdom Act of Accession and from the declaration by Community Heads of Government in March 1975. This commitment is indefinite. Current detailed arrangements under protocol 18 expire on 31 December 1988 and the Council of Ministers of the Community will have to decide at the appropriate time the detailed conditions for future access.

Access to the European Community market on special terms for certain quantities of New Zealand cheese was negotiated as part of the last round of multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT and is of indefinite duration.

United Kingdom support for these arrangements derives from our desire to maintain our long-standing political and other ties with New Zealand and our recognition of the importance to the New Zealand economy of access to markets in the European Community for these products.

I am satisfied that the support provided under the common agricultural policy for dairy products adequately protects United Kingdom producers. It is not possible to quantify any effects which these imports might have on price formation in United Kingdom and Community markets.

Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual cost to the Exchequer of the special arrangements made between Her Majesty's Government and the New Zealand Government relating to access to (a) the British market and (b) the rest of the European Economic Community of New Zealand farm produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Such arrangements are made by the European Community, not between Her Majesty's Government and the New Zealand Government.

Sea Fisheries Statistical Table

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why there has been no publication of a sea fisheries statistical table for 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: The publication "Sea Fisheries Statistical Tables" provides detailed information on the fishing industry in the United Kingdom. Although most of the figures have been available for some time there have been operational difficulties in finalising a few of the tables. In the interim a statistical information notice (STATS 176/84) was issued on 23 July 1984 giving provisonal figures for landings in the United Kingdom.

It is expected that the publication "Sea Fisheries Statistical Tables 1983" will become available in about eight weeks time.

SCOTLAND

Disciplinary Cases

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the longest interval taken to progress a disciplinary case before the Health Services Tribunal, from date of reference by a health board to determination, including any current case; and if he will name the medical or dental practitioner concerned.

Mr. John MacKay: In one case the relevant health board made representations to the National Health Service tribunal more than four years ago that the continued inclusion of the practitioner on the board's list would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the service in question. That case is not yet finally resolved and I therefore do not consider it appropriate to name the practitioner.

Better Business Services

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current scope and geographical coverage of the better business services scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The better business service scheme, funded by the non-quota section of the European regional development fund, has been in operation in Strathclyde region since October 1983, as a consequence of the European Commission's designation of the region as a steel and shipbuilding closure area, and in the assisted areas of Tayside region since November 1984, as a consequence of the designation of these areas as a textile closure area. Since November 1984, the scheme has also been operated and funded by the Highlands Development Board in its area and by Development Agency in those areas of S otherwise covered.

The scheme makes available to small defined as manufacturing companies emp people or less and service sector companies e people or less, financial assistance towards consultancy services. The assistance is 55 per cost of the consultancy up to a maximum gra

Conservation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary Scotland what is the Forestry Commission's regard to conservation issues and bodies.

Mr. John MacKay: In carrying out its fu Forestry Commission takes full account of issues and maintains links with conservation bo local and national levels.

Limited List Prescribing

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotlan how many representations he has received from membe of the public with regard to the Government's proposa to limit the range of drugs available on the National Healt Service.

Mr. John MacKay: To date my right hon. Friend ha received some 3,200 representations.

Sea Fisheries Statistical Table

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotlan why the Department of Agriculture and Fisherie (Scotland) did not publish a sea fisheries statistical tabl for 1983.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that, because o operational difficulties, the publication of the 1983 se fisheries statistical tables has been delayed. We expect t publish these tables in May. The Department ha continued to publish regularly monthly summaries o landings up to and including December 1984, as well a the most important annual summaries for 1983 and 1984 I have arranged for the hon. Member to have a copy of th latest publication.

Rating

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotlan what is the cost of (a) advertising and (b) publishing othe information on the 1985 revaluation and the appeal system available to domestic ratepayers.

Mr. Younger: My Department has so far spen £99,380 on advertising campaigns in the Scottish press an on local radio.

Three million copies were produced of a leaflet— "You and Your Rates"—copies of which are bein issued with every valuation notice. The Scottish Ofic supplied assessors with copies of a further leaflet and booklet to assist ratepayers who might wish to appea against their valuations. Total printing costs were £27,000

Scottish Council (Development and Industry) Conference

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotlan what consideration he is giving to the findings of th Scottish Council (Development and Industry) Conferenc on training investment held in Edinburgh on 27 February

Mr. Allan Stewart: The conference, "The Training Investment," was promoted jointly by the Scottish Council (Development and Industry) and the Manpower Services Comission to serve two purposes. First, it provided an opportunity to discuss the council's report "YTS and Beyond," which looked at YTS experience in Dundee and Renfrew and how the scheme fits into the wider training scene. This linked with the second purpose, which was to launch the adult training campaign in Scotland, for the implementation of which the Government have asked the Manpower Services Commission to assume responsibility. The conference provided an appropriate forum for stimulating debate on adult training among senior employers, trade unionists, educationists and others. The conference proceedings will prove valuable in carrying the campaign forward and the Government are grateful to the Scottish Council and the Manpower Services Commission for their initiative in promoting it. The conference was not designed to produce findings as such.

Class Sizes

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many children are taught in composite classes in each region and island authority;

(2) what is the average class size in the primary schools of each education authority in Scotland; and what were the equivalent figures for 1979-80.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1985, c. 131]: I have today written to the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

Gas Mains

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to restrict vehicles of maximum laden weights within European Economic Community guidelines to special routes away from roads containing gas mains.

Mrs. Chalker: Under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, county councils may make traffic regulation orders specifying through routes for heavy commercial vehicles, or prohibiting or restricting, the use of heavy commercial vehicles in such zones or on such roads as may be specified. It is for the councils to decide what restrictions may be appropriate in their areas. The Department have reminded highway authorities of the need to ensure that roads and bridges on to which heavy vehicles are to be diverted by a traffic management scheme are capable of carrying those vehicles.

Regional Airports

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers were handled at each major United Kingdom regional airport in 1974, 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The figures are:

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of Transport how many and what percentage of th each of London's airports is accounted for by making a connection between one international another.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Provisional figures show that 3·4 million passengers at Heathro connection between one international flight an representing almost 12 per cent. of total passengers at Heathrow. A3 (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans for lighting the A3 between Kingston and Guildford.

Mrs. Chalker: No, there are no plans at the present time to light this section of the A3 either wholly or partially.

Railway Sidings (Grants)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number and value of section 8 grants for each year since 1979 in (a) England and (b) Wales.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for these grants in the Principality as I am in England. The information requested is as follows:

Roads (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which boroughs are in consultation with him in agreeing guidance for traffic management matters including cycling, safety, pedestrians, signals and bus priority measures in London; and when this guidance will be available;

(2) which boroughs gave him a view on the proposed extension to London's trunk road network; and which boroughs have expressed agreement with the proposals;

(3) which London boroughs gave him a view on the proposed designated road network; and which boroughs have expressed agreement with the proposals.

Mrs. Chalker: We have issued consultation papers to all boroughs and received views and reactions from them all. A majority are in favour of the approach proposed. We will continue to develop our proposals on the matters referred to by the hon. Member in close consultation with all boroughs willing to participate.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the purpose of trunking further roads in London rather than designating them.

Mrs. Chalker: To transfer ownership to the appropriate successor highway authority.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the possibility of road widening involving demolition of properties and new roads over different routes through the urban fabric of London has been excluded from the terms of reference of the civil engineering consultants undertaking his exploratory assessment studies announced in November 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: The terms of reference were set out in the press notices issued on 20 November giving details of the assessment studies, a copy of which were sent to the hon. Member at that time. I am sending the hon. Member a further copy of the general press notice.

Urban Trunk Roads

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those roads in urban areas that have been trunked without (a) publication of an order by him, (b) consultation with local residents and (c) the right to a public inquiry, since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Roads

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the differences between trunk roads and designated roads.

Mrs. Chalker: Ownership.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the policy priorities applying (a) to trunk roads and (b) to designated roads.

Mrs. Chalker: The approach applying to trunk roads was set out in paragraphs 3.1-3.6 of "Policy for Roads in England: 1983" (Cmnd. 9059). Policy for designated roads will be developed in consultation with borough councils.

Traffic Management

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his guidance for traffic control correlates with the existing Greater London council recommendations to limit the amount of central London parking.

Mrs. Chalker: I propose to develop guidance on traffic management in consultation with London boroughs.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff his Department employs who have London-wide expertise and experience in the fields of traffic management with special reference to pedestrians, cycling, and bus facilities.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department has a number of staff with wide expertise and experience in these fields, both nationally and in London. Their skills and resources are made available to assist local authorities.

London Planning Commission

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what role the proposed London Planning Commission will have in advising him on highway, traffic and public transport matters in London.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to what I said at columns 139-57 during the proceedings of the Standing Committee on the Local Government Bill, of which he is a member, where these matters were debated.

Transport Boards (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the members of the London Transport Board and their salaries as at 29 June 1984 and the members of the London Regional Transport Board and their salaries at present.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

GLC (CR6 Project)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement with regard to the future of the Greater London council-funded CR6 project for improving taxis for people with disabilities.

Mrs. Chalker: Although I understand that the GLC made a financial contribution to this project to develop a new London taxi, the principal external support for the project is being given by Government under the support for innovation scheme. The research into provision for wheelchair bound and other disabled people in taxis has been undertaken by my Department. The future of the project is not dependent upon the GLC, I have no reason to believe that it is not proceeding satisfactorily.

GLC (Taxicard Scheme)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the London borough councils with which he has discussed the future of the Greater London council's taxicard scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The future of the Taxicard scheme, and the dial-a-ride services for disabled people in London, is to be discussed by a working party of officials from the London Boroughs Association, London Regional Transport and my Department. The Association of London Authorities has not yet responded to an invitation to join those discussions.

EMPLOYMENT

Redundant Mineworkers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to issue guidelines to the Manpower Services Commission about the provision of retraining placements for redundant mineworkers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have no plans to issue any special guidelines. The appropriate range of Manpower Services Commission services will of course be available to any redundant mineworkers. In that connection, I understand that the National Coal Board is in discussion with the commission about training opportunities as part of the NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. initiative.

Gas Supply

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what public relations activity he has initiated to emphasise the characteristics of gas and the hazards which may result from mistakes or ill-considered actions by customers when using gas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The British Gas Corporation is responsible for the safe day-to-day operation of the gas supply system and mounts regular publicity campaigns explaining how to use gas safely.

The Health and Safety Executive is publishing a leaflet "The Gas Regulations for Everybody's Safety" aimed at householders and all who use gas. It draws attention to the nature of the hazards of gas and the need for adequate ventilation and regular maintenance of appliances, and stresses that by law only competent installers may work with gas. It also gives advice on what people should do if they suspect a gas leak.

The leaflet will be well publicised and will shortly be available from citizens advice bureaux, gas showrooms, gas suppliers, public libraries, the regional gas consumers councils, regional offices of the Confederation of Registered Gas Installers and the Health and Safety Executive.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what research and developments have taken place in the last five years with the aim of producing fixed automatic gas alarms which are cheap, reliable, safe and with little need for maintenance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Research and development into gas detection equipment has been going on during the last five years. There is now a wide range of fixed automatic gas alarms, but the capital and maintenance costs are such that they are only suitable for industrial use.

Domestic gas alarms are available but they are expensive and have not proved to be reliable. The Health and Safety Executive shares the view of the King report that in domestic premises the odour of gas is still the best warning.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what offices have been established for the purpose of compiling data information on gas explosions received in collaboration with the police, ambulance services, fire brigades, gas, water and electricity authorities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive receives information specifically relating to gas incidents from gas suppliers. It is used in policy and enforcement work. It is the executive's practice to make accident information available in its industry section reports. In addition, the Home Office publishes annual figures relating to fires attended by local authority fire brigades.

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 14 February, Official Report, column 250, on what date the withdrawal of clearance for the pesticide dieldrin in products used by householders or by firms specialising in wood treatment in situ became effective.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The withdrawal of clearance for the pesticide dieldrin in products used by householders or by firms specialising in wood treatment in situ became effective from 31 December 1984.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a figure for the amount of dieldrin, as active ingredient, employed in pre-treatment of timbers, in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment if the use of dieldrin in any chemical used in any paint, lacquer, damp proofer or other preparation, apart from pre-treatment of timber, is still permitted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The use of dieldrin in paints or lacquers is permitted. To the best of our knowledge, dieldrin is not used in damp-proofing preparations.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department intends to allow the continued use of dieldrin pesticide as long as existing stocks last.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to prevent the continued use of dieldrin.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints regarding the misapplication or effects of wood treatment chemicalsand pesticides were made by the public and received by the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years for which figures are available; how many such cases were investigated and a report prepared; in how many cases a prosecution was initiated by the Health and Safety Executive under the Health and Safety at Work Act; and in how many such instances the prosecution was successful.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A comprehensive central record is not kept of the information requested.

Young Persons

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for the employment of young people in the west midlands in 1984 showing (a) numbers of 16, 17 and 18-year-olds leaving full-time education; (b) the numbers expected to enter youth training schemes, (c) the number expected to be employed under the young workers scheme, (d) the number in employment other than those employed under the young workers scheme and (e) the numbers still unemployed.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information on numbers of 16, 17 and 18-year-olds in the west midlands region entering the youth training scheme over the last year, or covered by the young workers scheme or claiming unemployment benefit in January 1985 is set out in the following table.

Young people aged	*YTS	YWS†	Claimant unemployed‡
16	46,000	..	5,000
17	4,000	..	15,000
18	—	..	21,000
16 to 18	50,000	7,000	41,000

* Entrants between April and December 1984, together with estimates for January to March 1985. The age breakdown is based on age at leaving school.

† Estimated number supported in January 1985. An age breakdown is not available, but almost all of those supported will be 17 years old on entry.

‡ Those claiming unemployment benefit on 10 January 1985. Of these, the proportions classified as school-leavers (that is, those who have never had a job, not simply those who left school recently) are 72, 55, 46 and 53 per cent. for 16, 17, 18 and 16 to 18-year-olds respectively.

.. = Not available.

The estimates cannot be directly related to those leaving full-time education in 1984. Estimated numbers of young people in the west midlands leaving full-time education in 1984 or entering employment other than under the young workers scheme are not yet available.

Young Workers Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give the figures for 1982, 1983 and 1984, nationally and for the west midlands, for males and females of (a) the numbers of young people employed under the young workers scheme, (b) the average length of their employment under the scheme, (c) the average total amounts in subsidy paid to employers per worker and (d) the average wage offered to young workers employed under the scheme as declared on the application form YWS 1 (Rev 2);

(2) if he will give the figures since 1982, nationally and for the west midlands, of the numbers of young people employed under the young workers scheme who, under the scheme, have continued their employment for (a) up to six months, (b) up to 12 months and (c) 12 months or longer;

(3) if he will provide figures showing the total expenditure of his Department in 1982, 1983, 1984, and 1985 to date, on the young workers scheme, giving details of (a) advertising costs and (b) average cost per placement under the scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The number of approved applications and expenditure on the scheme nationally since it opened in January 1982 was as follows:

	Expenditure Great Britain £ million	Approved Applications Great Britain	Approved Applications West Midlands
1982-83	40·7	*174,442	*17,945
1983-84	58·3	129,538	15,416
1984-85 (to date)	34·9	63,976	8,618

* Includes applications approved January-March 1982

Total publicity expenditure over the same period has been £366,000.

Information on the duration of support, average subsidy paid, average wage or post-scheme experience is not available in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A sample survey carried out by social and community planning research in 1983 estimated that the average of the grants paid was then £13·58p a week; since 1 April 1984 a single level of grant of £15 a week has been payable in respect of each application approved. The 1983 survey also estimated that the average wage payable to those joining the scheme was then £35·50p. The maximum period an individual can be supported under the scheme is 12 months and the survey suggested an average period of actual support of nine months. 90 per cent. of employers indicated that they would keep the young person on after the period of support had ended. The survey evidence indicated that of the young people supported by the scheme, 54 per cent. were male and 46 per cent. female. It is estimated that in 1984-85 the average gross cost per person supported under the scheme was £560.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of applicants for the enterprise allowance scheme in Shrewsbury and Atcham, and the number awarded.

Mr. Alan Clark: No separate figures are available for the Shrewsbury and Atcham area, but these are included in the Manpower Services Commission's employment division area centred on Shrewsbury, which covers Shropshire. The figures at the end of February 1985 were:

Applicants: 776
Approved applications: 676

Walthamstow

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of employees in employment in the Walthamstow jobcentre area for 1971, 1975, 1978, 1981 and 1984, showing total numbers employed and the respective proportions in manufacturing and service industries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment in the Walthamstow jobcentre area

	Total all industries and services (thousands)	Percentage employed in Manufacturing industries	Service industries
June 1971	77·7	38·7	55·3
June 1975	80·2	33·9	58·8
June 1978	78·7	30·8	62·5
September 1981*	†59·0	27·5	65·3

* Latest available.

† Because of a boundary change, the figure for 1981 excludes approximately 11,000 employees who would have previously been counted in the area.

Estimates from the census of employment for September 1984 are expected to become available in the latter part of this year.

Community Programme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the net cost per person per week of the community programme;

(2) what was the net cost per person per week at current price levels of the community enterprise programme;

(3) how many people are currently occupying places on the community programme;

(4) what is the average length of stay on the community programme;

(5) what is the age distribution of participants in the community programme;

(6) how many women are currently occupying places on the community programme;

(7) if he will provide figures on the ethnic minority representation among participants in the community programme;

(8) how many full-time and part-time jobs are provided on the community programme;

(9) if he will provide details of the distribution of places amongst different kinds of sponsors on the community programme;

(10) if he will provide details of the different types of work which are made available on the community programme;

(11) if he will provide details of the proportion of workers on the community programme who obtained employment on leaving the scheme and were in employment six months after leaving the scheme;

(12) how many people currently on the community programme have been offered training;

(13) what is the duration of training offered to people on the community programme;

(14) what type of training is offered to people on the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The 1985 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428) estimates the gross cost of a community programme place in the previous year as some £4,290 per year, and its net cost per person no longer unemployed as some £2,200 per year. In a memorandum to the Public Accounts Committee on 28 February 1983, para. 9.4, the Comptroller and Auditor General estimated the net Exchequer cost of the community enterprise programme per person no longer unemployed as between £2,000 and £2,600 per year. It is not possible without incurring disproportionate expense to provide useful and reliable estimates of the net costs of a place on the community programme or the community enterprise programme.

At the end of January 1985, 131,297 people were employed on the community programme, and survey evidence indicates that their average stay is 9·1 months. Over the past 12 months, 33·8 per cent. of entrants have been aged 18 to 20; 26·4 per cent. 21 to 24, and 39·6 per cent. 25 and over. Around 23 per cent. of entrants over the past 12 months have been women. Community programme entrants are not classified by ethnic origin, but sample surveys indicate that between 4 and 9 per cent. of programme participants are from ethnic minorities.

At the end of January 1985, 38,464 full-time jobs and 92,833 part-time jobs were provided under the programme. By the nature of the contractual arrangements possible under the community programme, it is not possible to classify the actual sponsor of every project. However, the best available information suggests that some 45 per cent. of places were provided by or through local authorities, and most of the remainder by or through voluntary organisations. Evidence from sample surveys suggests that the commonest principal activities on projects were environmental and landscaping (29 per cent.) and building and construction work (17 per cent.) followed by research and surveys, decorating, and social services for old people, although a great variety of other work of community benefit was also performed under the programme.

Recent sample survey evidence indicates that around 50 per cent. of community programme participants received training. The type of training available to participants includes induction training, formal and informal on-the-job training, and training away from the work place. Information about the duration of training is not available. This training is in addition to that being provided under the Government's adult training strategy, which I described in my reply to the hon. Member of 21 February, at column 515.

Sample survey evidence indicates that on leaving the programme, around 23 per cent. of participants went straight into a job and a further 4 per cent. into training or full-time education. When interviewed, an average 7·7 months after leaving the programme a third of former participants had a job, and a further 5 per cent. were in training.

Further information about the community programme is available in two sample surveys of community programme participants, conducted in autumn 1983 and spring 1984 by social and community planning research, and from an internal follow-up sample survey of participants conducted in May-August 1984. Copies of all these are in the Library of the House.

Construction Industry

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will give (a) the number of deaths, (b) the number of serious injuries and (c) the number of those employed in the construction industry in Scotland for the years 1979 to 1984, inclusive.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information for incidents reported to the Health and Safety Executive for 1979-83 is as follows. Information for 1984 is not yet available.

Construction Industry, Scotland 1979-83

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983*
Deaths to employees	25	16	22	18	13

† not readily available
(1) Before 1981, deaths to non-employees were reported on a voluntary basis only and are therefore not directly comparable with figures for 1981 to 1983 which are based on reports resulting from a specific requirement under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (NADOR) 1980.
(2) Numbers of major injuries as defined in NADOR were not collected before 1981.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total cost of administration of his Department, expressed in constant prices, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 1 February 1985, c. 327-28]: In my reply of 1 February the figures for 1983 contained elements of capital expenditure excluded from figures in the previous years. The costs of administration of the constituent parts of the Department expressed in 1983-84 prices in the last five years, using the same definition of administration costs throughout, was:

1983-84 prices	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Department of Employment	234·3	255·6	299·0	316·3	336·1
Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service	15·3	15·1	12·4	12·6	12·8
Manpower Services Commission	335·7	337·1	330·4	338·3	333·4

1983-84 prices	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-

Total for the Department of Employment Group	655·7	683·7	714·8	742·2	759

This information is taken from the annual scrutinies of departmental running costs.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of Manpower Services Commission memoranda 511/3 and 514/3 together with all supplements to these memoranda so far issued; what comparisons can be made between accident figures for the scheme and statistics published for the employed population generally by the Health and Safety Executive; and what instructions are given to Manpower Services Commission staff as to the comparisons that may be made.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1985, c. 18-19]: Copies of Manpower Services Commission memoranda 511/3 and 514/3 and all current supplements to these memoranda are being placed in the Library.

Researchers from Aston university, who have examined a sample of accidents to trainees in the youth opportunities programme between April 1980 and March 1983, expressed strong reservations in their final report on the validity of comparing accident incidence rates for the youth opportunities programme with figures from the Health and Safety Executive applying to the employed population generally.

This conclusion is equally applicable to the youth training scheme. It would thus not be right to make comparisons between accident figures for the scheme and those published by the Health and Safety Executive, and Manpower Services Commission staff have been instructed accordingly.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library copies of the Manpower Services Commission memoranda 511/3 and 514/3 which give information on accidents to area manpower boards, plus their supplements.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 129]: Yes. I am arranging for copies of Manpower Services Commission memoranda 511/3, 514/3 and their current supplements to be placed in the Library today. A copy of memorandum 511/3 supplement 4, has already been placed in the Library.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place a copy of the Manpower Services Commission's memorandum 894/1, which deals with appraisal of youth training scheme programmes, and 894/5 which deals with accidents to young persons on the youth training scheme in the Library.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1985, c. 129]: Yes. I am arranging for copies of the Manpower Services Commission's memoranda 894/1 and 894/5 to be placed in the Library today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security Forces (Killings)

15. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State fo Northern Ireland how many people have been killed b Government security forces in Northern Ireland sinc 1968.

Mr. Scott: Since 1968, 265 people have been killed b the security forces in the course of their duties.

7. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Norther Ireland how many (a) males and (b) females have bee killed in the Province by security forces since 1968.

Mr. Scott: Since 1968, 265 people have been killed b the security forces in the course of their duties. 253 o these were male and 12 were female.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

16. Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State fo Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chie Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the effec of the recent cutback in Royal Ulster Constabulary overtime on operational tasking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On present estimates police overtime level for this financial year are likely to be higher than fo 1983-84. I have been assured by the Chief Constable tha there is no question of essential operations being curtailed by reductions in overtime working.

22. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State fo Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with leader of the Northern Ireland political parties about the Roya Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Hurd: In the last six months I have had a series of meetings with the leaders of Northern Ireland's four main political parties during which I have explained Government policy on a wide range of issues, including security and policing.

24. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Hurd: I regularly meet the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and have been in close touch with him during the last week. Our meetings normally cover a wide range of matters relating to general security policy and particular aspects of policing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give a breakdown of (a) the current compliment of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as of 3 March 1985, in terms of stated religion and at the same date in 1984 and (b) the stated religion of Royal Ulster Constabulary casualties caused by direct terrorist attacks on individual Royal Ulster Constabulary personnel during the period 4 March 1984 to 3 March 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Dairy Farmers

17. Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to help small dairy farmers in Northern Ireland in the light of the response to the Government's buy out scheme.

Dr. Boyson: The outgoers scheme was reopened for a two-week period in February and a further 1·7 million litres have been offered, making a total of about 13 million litres. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and other Ministers responsible for Agriculture in the United Kingdom are considering the difficulties which result from the fact that uptake is below expectations, but no decisions have as yet been reached.

Business and Employment Prospects

19. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on business and employment prospects in the Province.

Dr. Boyson: Recent surveys by the Confederation of British Industry and others have pointed to an improvement in the confidence and performance of the business community in Northern Ireland. This is supported by the trends in output and employment. The most recent figures for manufacturing output show an increase of 3 per cent. The numbers in employment have increased by over 4,300 in the last six months of 1984 and the underlying upward trend in unemployment has been significantly arrested. The prospects for improved economic performance are therefore very good.

Political Situation

20. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to establish new political structures to improve relationships between Britain, Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: Effective structures already exist through the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council, and the Government are always ready to consider realistic proposals for improving relations between the United Kingdom and the Republic.

Bank Deposits

21. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to require banks, on his instructions, to deposit with the High Court moneys which are suspected either of belonging to illegal organisations or of being destined for use in furtherance of terrorist activities, such moneys to remain on deposit for a specified period during which the custodian of the funds may seek to prove that they are for lawful purposes.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. McCusker) earlier today.

Room Heaters

23. Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in providing suitable heating in Housing Executive old peoples' dwellings.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive. I am, however, advised that out of a stock of 23,186 old persons' dwellings 12,066 have had their heating upgraded.

Security

25. Rev. Ian Paisley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) earlier today.

Vehicle Thefts

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many stolen vehicles were recovered in each of the police divisions in Northern Ireland in each of the last four years.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form requested is not readily available from existing records for the period prior to 1984, and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The numbers of stolen vehicles recovered in each police division during 1984 were as follows:

RUC Division	Vehicles Recovered
A	649
B	3,144
D	983

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been prosecuted for theft of vehicles in each police division in Northern Ireland in each of the last four years.

Mr. Scott: Six hundred and forty persons were proceeded against for offences relating to the taking of motor vehicles without the owners' consent in 1983. Because of changes in the Royal Ulster Constabulary's divisional structure in October 1983 this figure cannot be broken down by division for that year and divisional figures for 1984 are not necessarily comparable with those for previous years. The numbers proceeded against by division for 1981, 1982 and 1984 are as follows:

Converted Terrorists

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on (a) looking after converted terrorists during the period before the trials at which they were to give evidence and (b) providing converted terrorists with a new identity subsequently.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 26 February 1985 at column 126.

Public Expenditure (EC Contribution)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated total EEC contribution to the public expenditure of £360 million listed in schedule 1 of the Integrated Operations document for Belfast presented to the EEC Commission in Brussels on 21 February.

Mr. Chris Patten: The European Community contribution will depend on the value of eligible projects and the rate of grant at which they are aided. Detailed discussions with the European Commission, on which firm estimates could be based, have yet to take place.

Abortion

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women have died as a result of illegal abortions in each year since 1967 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Year	Number
1967	Nil
1968	1

Assembly Members (Salaries and Allowances

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of Stat Northern Ireland how much has been paid to memb the Northern Ireland Assembly up to 31 January salaries, (b) in secretarial allowances and (c) in allowances.

Mr. Hurd: Members of the Northern Ireland Asse have received the following payments between 25 Oc 1982 and 31 January 1985:

(a) Salaries: £1,402,165
(b) Secretarial allowances: £707,319
(c) Travel allowances: £311,584

Area Health Boards

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of for Northern Ireland what is the policy of each of the health boards on providing (a) agendas for meeting ar confidential reports listed on these agendas to provincial newspapers in advance of the date of meetings.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is the policy of each healt social services board to make available to the agendas for board meetings, excluding confidential it in advance of meetings. Confidential reports are not available to the press.

Prison Service

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Nort Ireland if he will give a breakdown of (a) the cu complement of the Northern Ireland prison service, 3 March 1985 and at the same date in 1984, in term stated religion and (b) the stated religion of Nort Ireland prison officer casualties caused by direct att by terrorists on off-duty prison officers, during the pe 4 March 1984 to 3 March 1985; and if he will ma statement.

Mr. Scott: The complement of the Northern Ire prison service was 3,087 on 3 March 1985 and 2,94 3 March 1984. Details of the religious affiliations o members are not recorded, but we believe 7 per cen 10 per cent. are from the Catholic community.

During the year ending 3 March 1985, two membe the prison service were fatally injured when off duty result of terrorist action. One victim was reported to Protestant and the other a Catholic.

Limited List Prescribing

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Nort Ireland how many representations he has received f members of the public with regard to the Governme proposals to limit the range of drugs available on National Health Service.

Mr. Chris Patten: Five.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State Northern Ireland whether it is his intention that the lim list of drugs prescribable on the National Health Ser in Northern Ireland should be identical to that in Engl Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 5 Ma 1985]: Yes. In accordance with the long standing princ of parity in the provision of health services, the same will be applied in Northern Ireland.

European Social Fund

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for grant aid under the European social fund are now due for payment to Northern Ireland companies; what is the total amount of grant aid under the European social fund for which Northern Ireland companies are eligible in respect of which application has been made for payment; and what is the normal delay between receipt of application after a qualifying period and payment of European Economic Community grant aid under the European social fund.

Dr. Boyson: Seven hundred and nineteen claims are at present approved and due for payment. The total amount of grant sought in European social fund claims currently in hand — including claims not yet approved — is approximately £3·6 million. The date of payment is dependent upon the time of receipt of the funds from the Community.

Molins Engineering Factory, Maydown

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any public funds being put into the proposed successor to the Molins engineering factory at Maydown are being paid on the same terms as funds paid to other engineering firms in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1985]: Offers of selective assistance by the Industrial Development Board are tailored in form and amount to the needs of the individual project concerned. Similar basic terms and conditions apply to all offers.

RUC (Newry)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the last time, prior to the recent terrorist mortar bomb attack, that the chief constable of an assistant chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary visited Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station.

Mr. Hurd: Newry police station was visited on 8 February 1985 by the assistant chief constable with responsibility for police operations in the area covering Newry sub-division.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the temporary fabricated buildings were first erected at Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station.

Mr. Hurd: Temporary prefabricated buildings were first erected by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland at Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station in August 1973. Additional temporary buildings were added in 1974 and 1978, and the canteen, destroyed on 28 February, was completed in December 1984.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the last time, prior to the recent terrorist mortar bomb attack, that a member of the Northern Ireland police authority personally visited Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station.

Mr. Hurd: Members of the Police Authority last visited Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station on 30 May 1984 as part of their planned programme of visits to Royal Ulster Constabulary stations. Individual members of the authority may have visited the station since then, but no record is kept of these personal visits.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the last time, prior to the recent terrorist attack, that a Minister of the Northern Ireland Office visited Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station.

Mr. Hurd: I visited Newry Royal Ulster Constabulary station on 30 January 1985.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether every product in the amended limited list will meet the quality standards of the specifications in the British Pharmacopoeia.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The limited list of medicinal products in certain categories available in the National Health Service after 1 April, published by my right hon. Friend on 21 February, contains both proprietary and non-proprietary preparations. Of the non-proprietary preparations 23 are not currently the subject of monographs published in the British Pharmacopoeia. Of these 23, 12 have to meet standards published in the British Pharmaceutical Codex 1973; I understand that these are currently being reviewed by the British Pharmacopoeia commission with a view to the inclusion of monographs in a future edition of the pharmacopoeia. I also understand that the Commission is considering the preparation of monographs on the remaining 11 items.

Proprietary products are not normally covered by BP monographs, but most of those in the list contain active ingredients which are the subject of current monographs.

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many products listed in his proposed list of drugs and other substances not to be made available at the National Health Service expense from 1 April do not require licences under the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The list contains a small number of items which do not come within the difinition of "medicinal product" at section 130 of the Medicines Act 1968. Mostly these will consist of products which the advisory committee on boarderline substances have said should not be prescribed on form FP10. The total number of items concerned could be extracted only at disproportionate cost but is expected to be small because the list is concerned with particular therapeutic categories.

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he consulted the School of Aviation Medicine in drawing up the list of benzodiazepine preparations to be included in the limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No, nor did the School of Aviation Medicine submit any comments on our proposals.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received from members of the public with regard to his proposals to limit the range of drugs available on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received over 11,000 letters about the limited list proposals. About 6,500 of these were from hon. Members on behalf of constituents or directly from members of the public.

Private Residential Care Homes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to take any action to protect residents in private residential care homes where the fees of these homes increase above the limits provided by payments from his Department.

Mr. Whitney: Supplementary benefit payments to people in all forms of board and lodging accommodation have always been subject to limits and that will remain the case when a new system of limits is introduced shortly following consultation through the social security advisory committee. As part of these changes, there will be generous transitional protection arrangements for existing claimants whose current charges are being met above the new limits. The consultative document contains no proposals to protect charges which increase above the new limits.

Ambulance Service (Newcastle upon Tyne)

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he is taking to monitor the cost to the National Health Service in terms of the time of hospital staff resulting from the reorganisation and new operating practices of the ambulance services in Newcastle upon Tyne;

(2) what steps he is taking to monitor the cost to the National Health Service of using private taxis in the city of Newcastle upon Tyne to substitute for work that was previously carried out by the ambulance service.

Mr. John Patten: These are matters for the health authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of S Social Services if he is satisfied that the closur Benton road ambulance station is in the public in the light of representations that he has received co the reorganisation of the ambulance service in Ne upon Tyne.

Mr. John Patten: We agreed to the regiona authority's proposal to close the Benton road am station after considering all the representations wh been made to us.

Leukaemia

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of S Social Services what information he has ab incidence of leukaemia on the east Dorset coast each of the last 10 years; how the figures compa the national average for the incidence of leukaem if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information is shown table. Due to delays in the receipt of data from s the regions, the latest year for which data registration of leukaemia (as opposed to deat available is 1981. Great care should be taken in t draw any worthwhile conclusion from the figures east Dorset coast, as these are based on relative cancer registrations. The age structure of the pop also has to be considered. Age-adjusted rates for Dorset coast have therefore been provided for a comparison with the national figures.

The rates for males on the east Dorset coas allowing for the age of the local population, are than the national figures for seven of the 10 years 1981. It is not possible to determine whether en recognition and registration of leukaemia in east or different diagnostic terms, account for any excess. The rates for females show smaller diffe with no excess in east Dorset greater than migh from chance variation due to small numbers of ca

Registrations of leukaemia (ICD(8)204-207, ICD(9)204-208) in east Dorset coast (County districts of Purbeck, Poole, Bournemouth a Christchurch) and rates per 100,000 population for east Dorset coast (Crude and age-adjusted) and England and Wales, 1972-81

Resettlement Units

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money is estimated to be available for his recently announced plans to replace resettlement units, on an annual basis, following the closure of re-establishment centres.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that about £2 milli become available for resettlement purposes on an basis from the closure of re-establishment centres.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of St Social Services, pursuant to the answer to th Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 5 February, Official Report, column 548, which are the resettlement units outside London which are to be closed within three years.

Mr. Whitney: The intention is to make alternative provision that will make it possible to close the following resettlement units over the next three years:

Alvaston, Derby
Bishopbriggs, Glasgow
Brighton
Fazakerley, Liverpool
Plawsworth, Co. Durham
Stormy Down, Bridgend
Walkden, Manchester
Winterbourne, Bristol

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the animals now cared for in national reassessment centres; and what plans he has for their location following the closure of the centres.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 1 March 1985, c. 338]: In this Department's 23 resettlement units there are 15 cats, two dogs, a goat, a donkey, a guinea pig and varying quantities of rabbits, poultry, cage birds and fish. When the units close, these animals will be offered to staff, pet shops or farms as appropriate.

Drugs (Licences)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 17,000 products listed in the Prescription Pricing Authority's master drug index do not require licences under the Medicines Act.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Some items included in the Prescription Pricing Authority's master drug index are "borderline" substances which doctors can in certain circumstances prescribe under the NHS even though they are not "medicinal products" under the terms of section 130 of the Medicines Act 1968. The exact number is not readily available and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Flora Margarine

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the manufacturers of Flora margarine as a result of his withdrawing that product from National Health Service prescribing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Computers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the number of computers used in social security offices; and what assessments he intends to make of the possible effects this could have on his Department's manpower levels.

Mr. Whitney: Our plans for the application of new technology to social security are embraced within our operational strategy for social security, which provides a managerial and conceptual framework for a number of individual computer projects. The first of these to be introduced to the Department's local offices will be the local office microcomputer project, which will provide support to staff dealing with supplementary benefit. In total, some 2,600 microcomputers will be installed in over 450 offices. National implementation is scheduled to begin this summer and be completed within a year. At an earlier stage of planning is the local office project, which will link social security local offices into a national network. On current plans national implementation of LOP will commence in 1988-89. We expect these investments to improve markedly the service we provide for beneficiaries. The methods to assess the staffing implications of the changes will be discussed with the departmental trade unions. Discussions on LOMP are taking place at the present time.

Hypothermia

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to reduce the number of deaths resulting from hypothermia.

Mr. John Patten: Death resulting from hypothermia is relatively rare: it was mentioned as a cause of death in 539 of a total of 579,608 deaths in England and Wales during 1983. We have extended entitlement to regular weekly additional help with heating costs, which now goes automatically to all supplementary pensioner householders over 65. We also encourage and support the Health Education Council's activities to make advice and guidance on all aspects of keeping warm widely available.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he intends to have with Health Ministers in the United States Government about measures taken by them to combat acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus in the United States of America.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our officials have been in regular contact with officials of the Government of the United States of America, and staff of public health service and communicable disease centres, to keep up to date with the measures being taken in that country to combat AIDS. We intend to continue this contact.

Management Information System

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will name and describe the different types of regular report made from local offices as part of his Department's management information system.

Mr. Whitney: The main elements of the management information system used by the regional organisation are returns made by each local office at four-weekly and quarterly intervals showing work load data for contributory and supplementary benefits together with the manpower resources used. The four-weekly returns are made on forms MR150 (contributory benefit), MR250/251 (supplementary benefit) and MR650 (contributory and supplementary benefit); form MR351 is used for all of the quarterly returns. This regular information is supplemented by ad hoc inquiries when necessary.

Work load data include the number of claims received, the volume of work processed and the number of payments made. The four-weekly reports also include an assessment of performance based on a series of performance indicators covering the most significant areas of work. There are at present eight performance indicators for contributory benefit and six for supplementary benefit work. Two of the indicators monitor the accuracy of short-term contributory benefit payments (eg sickness benefit) and supplementary benefit payments; the others monitor the amount of work cleared. The staffing information gives a breakdown of the manpower resources which were available and includes, for example, overtime and staff absences because of sickness, leave, and so on.

Pharmaceutical Companies

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the recent reductions in return on investment guidelines discriminate against pharmaceutical companies with higher capital investment and research activity in the United Kingdom;

(2) what account he took of the differing levels of (a) capital investment and (b) research activity by pharmaceutical companies when deciding on the level of price reductions to impose under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: While it is true that generally the profit targets of such companies have been reduced by the greatest amount, they remain higher than those of companies with little capital investment or research activity in the United Kingdom. The lower overall profit target for the pharmaceutical industry under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme inevitably led to some compression of the range of individual company targets.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died of end stage renal failure in each of the last five years; and, of these, how many had received (a) transplants and (b) dialysis treatment.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally.

Pharmaceuticals (Prices)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the reduction in pharmaceutical exports which will be caused by the proposed price reductions in pharmaceutical prices which are to be effective from 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 7 December 1984 at column 320.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of retirement pensioners in Scotland in receipt of the 25p age addition, analysed by category and age.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is shown in the table:

Age of pensioner	With contributory basic retirement pension	With non-contributory retirement pension	A
80-84	84·4	1·6
85-89	37·1	1·3
90-94	10·9	0·7
95-99	1·9	0·4
100 and over	0·2	0·1
Total	134·4	4·1

Medical Students (Revenue Contributi

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Social Services what yield has been gained by t services of the National Health Service during e last four years resulting from revenue contribut postgraduate medical students from outside t Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke There is no direct rev to NHS clinical services from such students.

Postneonatal Mortality

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of Social Services what action he proposes in repo report entitled "A Multi-Centre Study of Po Mortality", by the Medical Care Research U University of Sheffield, which claims that in 1 cases of postneonatal mortality where a practitioner had been in contact with the dead i case conference found that the general practit acted inappropriately in 64 per cent. of cases; now update his response to those sections of t reports of the Social Services Committee, Secon Session 1979-80 and Third Report, Session relating to the quality of training provided fo practitioners wishing to practise obstetrics; and make a statement.

Mr. John Patten We have invited expe conference on 15 March at which the conclus recommendations of the multi-centre study discussed. We hope to have their news on posi that can be taken to reduce postneonatal mortality to improve the quality of infant care, where n Discussions about the training and other cri admission of general practitioners to the obstetri continuing at official level with the profession concerned. There is nothing further to add to the given to the relevant recommendations in th Services Committee's two reports.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of Social Services what was the cost of the survey ca on the public health laboratory service by inspectorate of the executive and personnel divisi Department.

Mr. John Patten The total cost is estimated to £135,000.

Factor VIII

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what applications he has received to vary product licences in respect of imported heat-treated factor VIII; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke Three existing licences for factor VIII have been varied to provide for the inclusion of heat treatment during manufacture and the new licences to which I referred in my reply of 20 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) at columns 498-500 have now been granted.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evaluation has been made by his Department of the relative economics of self-sufficiency and continued importation of factor VIII products; and if he will make the results public.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 19 February, at columns 446-7.

Haemophilia Society

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what applications he has received for financial assistance from the Haemophilia Society in respect of case funding; what response he has given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No application for case funding has been received. In response to a more general application for financial assistance, we have given the Haemophilia Society a non-recurring grant of £15,000 this year to help meet its expenditure on AIDS-related information and advice activities.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated incidence of serious brain damage following measles vaccination.

Mr. John Patten: Serious neurological reaction to measles vaccine has been estimated to occur in 1 in 87,000 injections. Nearly all the children suffering a serious reaction recover fully with no permanent damage as a result.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases he is aware of when parents of brain damaged children have been precluded from claiming under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act, because they were outside the time limit set by the Act; and if he will take steps to investigate how common a problem this is, and the nature of the reasons for parents not applying earlier.

Mr. John Patten: The time limits set by the Act first came into effect on 9 May 1984. Since then claims have had to be made within six years of the date of vaccination or the disabled person's second birthday. To date 16 claims have been disallowed because they were not made within these time limits.

The time limits have been explained in the current and all previous editions of the Department's leaflet HB3, entitled "Payment for Severe Vaccine Damage," and the 9 May time limit was publicised in February 1984 issue of the Department's periodical bulletin "Social Secu Notes," which is circulated widely among volunt organisations. I explained the time limits in my reply my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Y on 10 April 1984 at column 208.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Soc Services what action his Department has taken to ens that those parents whose children suffer brain damage af measles vaccination are made aware of the existence of vaccine damage payments scheme and the possibility t their child may be entitled to a payment under the Ac

Mr. John Patten: On publicity generally I refer right hon. Member to my reply today to his question ab our advice to health authorities on this subject. T scheme applies equally to vaccination against a numbe diseases. No additional steps have been taken specifica in relation to measles vaccination.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Soc Services what advice his Department has given to hea authorities and the medical profession regarding inform parents of brain damaged children of the vaccine dama payments scheme, when medical opinion is t vaccination is a possible cause of the brain damage.

Mr. John Patten: The Department issued health not (79)7 and local authority social services letter (79)1 January 1979 informing health and local authorities of introduction of the scheme and asking them to bring it the notice of staff and others working with possi beneficiaries so that they could ensure that those entit to submit claims were informed of the arrangements. T notice and letter are still current. The Department tries ensure that its leaflet on the scheme is widely available places where potential claimants are likely to seek h including social services departments, hospitals, citiz advice bureaux and voluntary organisations. T readership of the Department's periodical bulletin, "Soc Security Notes", which is widely circulated amo voluntary organisations, was also reminded of the sche when the introduction of the time limits set by the Act w publicised in the February 1984 issue.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Soc Services if he will uprate the £4 earnings limit for pers in receipt of supplementary benefit in such a way as restore the value it had in 1975.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to do so, but treatment of earnings was one of the matters considered the supplementary benefit review last year. We shall announcing the proposals arising from the review in c course.

Macclesfield Health Authority

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to make a decision relating to the early retirement of the chief administrator of Macclesfield district health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Shortly.

NHS (Senior Administrators)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the last meeting at which he was scheduled to discuss early retirement of senior administrators within the National Health Service was postponed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The general question of early retirement arising out of the introduction of the general management function has been discussed on a number of occasions and is still under consideration.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many senior administrators in the National Health Service have now indicated a wish to take early retirement following the introduction of managers to the service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authorities are still reviewing their structures following the appointment of general managers and most have not yet made application for the early retirement of other staff. It is therefore too soon to say how many senior administrators will wish to retire early.

Opticians (Prescriptions)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take action to ensure that opticians do not impede their customers' right to purchase spectacle frames in the private sector by denying or obstructing their right to be provided with a prescription.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From 1 April 1985 the National Health Service (General Ophthalmic Service) Amendment Regulations 1985 (SI 1985, No. 298) will require opticians to give a copy of the prescription to patients in all cases where they need glasses. The optician sho give the copy without making any cha practitioner who does not comply with th will be in breach of his terms of service disciplinary action under service committe regulations.

GPs (Private Prescriptions)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of S Services whether he has considered seek general practitioners from issuing private p Health Service patients for those items not list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The drugs left prescription on the National Health Servic clinical needs in the therapeutic categories proposals. There will therefore be no medi doctor to prescribe an item not on the lis patient elects to have a private prescriptio will be a matter of choice and we see no rea general practitioners issuing such prescripti

Sickle Cell Disease

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of Sta Services whether he will increase his Depar to the national voluntary organisations hel from sickle cell disease.

Mr. John Patten: We are well aware of role played by the national voluntary organis counselling the population at risk of sickle ce in spreading greater awareness of this condit professions and the general public. I ha decided to increase the grants given Organisation for Sickle Cell Anaemia Rese Sickle Cell Society for 1984-85 to £12,00 represents an increase of 50 per cent. over th 1983-84.

General Notes:

1. Senior Hospital Medical/Dental Officers (with allowance) are included in the consultant figures.
2. Analyses of maximum part-time contracts are not available prior to 1970. For SHAs/BGs maximum part-time figures are not readily available for any year. Where MPT figures are not shown the contracts have been included with the part-time figures.
3. There is some duplication in the figures due to some consultants holding contracts in more than one region and/or with more than one SHA/BG.
4. There were boundary changes in the 1974 NHS reorganisation which will effect comparisons between 1973-74. There were also boundary changes in 1982 which particularly affected North West, North East and South West Thames regions.
5. In 1984 Queen Charlotte's BG merged with Hammersmith BG to form Hammersmith and Queen Charlotte's Special Health Authority.

Spastics Society (Correspondence)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the letter sent to him on 22 January by Sir John Cox of the Spastics Society and others about the special programme funding of social services, together with his reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to the reply, 15 February 1985, c. 319]: The letter of 22 January from the Voluntary Organisations Personal Social Services Group and my reply are as follows:

"Dear Mr. Fowler,

RE: Special Programme Funding of Social Services

The Voluntary Organisations Personal Social Services Group is a group of directors of major voluntary organisations involved in the provision of care and support for people who are crucially dependent on personal social services.

In recent years our agencies have cooperated with government in a succession of 'special programmes'—for example the opportunities for volunteering scheme and the community programme of the Manpower Services Commission. A feature of these programmes has been the provision of special funds from central government, largely channelled through voluntary bodies such as our own. These schemes have been nicknamed 'funny money' programmes by the local authorities. Many of us have participated in these programmes, which have enabled much needed attention to be given to new priorities, experimental or innovative work. We are now concerned at the long term effects of the cuts to local government expenditure on services for our users, especially in the areas affected by large rate penalties, rate-capping and the abolition of the metropolitan authorities. We examine these programmes in this context.

The belief has grown up that some see 'special programme' funding as sugaring the pill of the cuts, or worse, setting up alternative provision to local authority services. Our concern was increased by your speech at the conference of the Association of Directors of Social Services in Buxton in 1984. You appeared to see the future role of local authority social service departments as concerned less with direct service provision than with coordinating private or voluntary services provided by other agencies.

Our view is that, even if the amounts of money were increased dramatically, these programmes could not and should not replace the existing range of services provided by the local authorities. Our welcome for these programmes is therefore qualified by the need for a clear understanding between all parties involved that they:—

i. are seen as supplementary to and not a replacement for the mainstream local authority services;
ii. are used primarily to enable the voluntary sector to concentrate on innovation, development, experimentation, and in the provision of wider informal services;
iii. are developed in such a way as to guarantee local authorities sufficient resources to act on the lessons and experience of these special programmes and to develop services accordingly;
iv. are recognised as short term in nature with all the limitations of such funding.

Voluntary organisations want a planned and close working partnership with local government. This may be a misunderstood concept but one thing it must not mean is robbing Peter to pay Paul.

We hope you will note our serious concerns, and we look forward to hearing from you as to your policy for the future funding of the personal social services.

Yours sincerely, on behalf of the following major national voluntary organisations.

"Dear Sir John,

Thank you for the letter you and your colleagues in the Voluntary Organisations Personal Social Services Group sent Norman Fowler on 22 January about 'special programme' funding of social services.

Essentially, I see services provided by voluntary organisations as adding to the range of services provided by local and health authorities rather than as a substitute for them. Central government funding of national voluntary organisations is intended both to strengthen the capacity of the voluntary sector to provide services and to give an opportunity to test whether a different mix of voluntary and statutory provision would make a better use of resources. As you point out, at local level central government funding schemes are primarily designed to achieve this by concentrating on innovative, developmental or experimental projects. If this approach is to make sense, it also follows that such central government support to a local project will by its nature be short term rather than permanent. However, I recognise the weight of the argument of the voluntary sector that an innovative local project will often need assurance of funding for two or three years if it is going to be able to establish its merits effectively. I have, for instance, taken this into account in the schemes being developed under the Helping the Community to Care programme, and in the proposals in the consultation paper which I published at the end of last year on the future of the Opportunities for Volunteering programme.

You suggest that a guarantee is needed that local authorities will have sufficient resources to act on the lessons and experience of central government funded projects. As you will know, local authorities decide their own priorities between the various services they provide, and the Government takes account of demographic and similar pressures on the personal social services in the Rate Support Grant settlements. Where experience shows that a centrally funded project involving a voluntary organisation can provide cost effective services, we would expect local authorities to take account of this when deciding their pattern of services.

I hope that you find this explanation helpful."

Tumour Necrosis Factor

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to sponsor or promote research in the United Kingdom into the substance known as tumour necrosis factor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend's practice is to give the MRC its grant-in-aid without direction as to how it should be allocated between its various fields of work.

I understand from the MRC that it has provided approximately £267,000 through its grant schemes to support work using the substance known as human tumour necrosis factor. The council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its research grant schemes in competition with other applications.

It is possible that research work involving the use of tumour necrosis factor is also being conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and reseach on the advice of the University Grants Committee, but no details of such work are available. The medical charities may also be funding research in these fields.

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about research into the substance known as tumour necrosis factor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that there has been interest in tumour necrosis factor (TNF) since the early seventies, but progress into research has been hampered by difficulties with its purification. The recent announcement that the gene for human TNF has been cloned in E Coli is a significant step forward. It should enable sufficient supplies of pure TNF to be made available for further laboratory studies and, subsequently, for trials of its use for therapeutic purposes.

TRANSPORT

Irish Lights (Costs)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the costs of the Commissioners of Irish Lights is now borne by shipping calling at United Kingdom ports; if he will express the amount in £ sterling; and what steps have been taken, or undertakings given, by the Government of the Irish Republic in response to representations made by Her Majesty's Government to ensure that such costs of the Commissioners as are generated within the Republic should be paid for there.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Commissioners' expenditure is met from the general lighthouse fund, which is derived from light dues paid by shipping using ports in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. In 1984-85 the forecast outturn of the Commissioners' expenditure is £10 million. Light dues collected in the Republic's ports in 1984-85 are expected to be about £1 million. On that basis about 90 per cent. of the Commissioners' expenditure will be derived, via the fund, from light dues paid by shipping in the United Kingdom, including, of course, Northern Ireland.

The Irish Government have accepted that a larger part of the costs incurred in the Republic by the Commissioners should be met from sources within the Republic, and negotiations to establish the amount are continuing between the Governments.

British Rail (Public Service Obligation Grant)

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has settled the amount of the public service obligation grant to be paid to the British Railways Board from January 1984 to March 1985.

Mr. Ridley: I am glad to announce that I have accepted the board's claim for central Government PSO grant for the 15-month period 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985 at £1,051·8 million, subject to adjustment for certain factors agreed with the board.

The claim normally covers a 12-month period. British Rail is however, changing its annual accounting period from a calendar to a fiscal year basis with effect from 1 April 1985. I have therefore agreed that the grant for 1984, which I announced on 7 June 1984, should be extended to cover the 15-month period.

The claim is £36·2 million less than the cash limit of £1,088 million which I announced on 6 December. The claim continues to reflect the board's progress towards achieving the 1986 grant target.

Of the total grant claim, about £210 million is in respect of the board's inter-city business, £338 million for the London and south-east sector and £504 million for provincial services, excluding those financed separately by the passenger transport executives.

WALES

Oxygen Therapy Service

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in Wales are supplied with oxygen by community pharmacists or through their own general practitioner; what is the cost of the service; how many of these patients would be classified as requiring major therapy and how many would be classified as requiring occasional use therapy; and how many patients in each of these categories use cylinder oxygen and how many use concentrators.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 30 September 1984, 6,026 patients were being supplied with oxygen by community pharmacists or by their own general practitioner. Of these, 143 patients would be regarded as requiring major therapy; a further 302 patients were supplied on a regular basis; and 5,581 were regarded as receiving occasional use therapy. All these patients were supplied by cylinder oxygen. The cost of the oxygen service in Wales for that month was almost £122,000.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average sums paid in rates by domestic ratepayers in Wales, gross and net of rate rebates, in each year since 1977-78.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The average sum paid by domestic ratepayers gross and net of rate rebates in each year since 1977-78 is as follows:

	Gross £	Net of Rate Rebates £
1977-78	68	64
1978-79	77	72
1979-80	97	91
1980-81	128	119
1981-82	155	143
*1982-83	184	165
1983-84	186	147
1984-85	201	160

* From 1982-83 domestic rate relief was 18·5p/£ compared with 36p/£ in the earlier years shown.

Figures from 1982-83 onwards are not comparable with the earlier years for the average sum paid net of rate rebates because of the introduction of the housing benefit scheme. Rate rebates paid to supplementary benefit recipients are included for local authority tenants from November 1982 and for all recipients from April 1983. Equivalent sums paid to supplementary benefit recipients under previous arrangements are not included.

Rating Revaluation

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Wales in which years since 1955 there has been a rating revaluation in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: 1956, 1963 and 1973.

Skimmed Milk (Intervention Stocks)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of skimmed milk presently stored in European Community intervention stocks in Bedwas; and if he will compare this figure with those for three, six and 12 months ago, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information cannot be released on the grounds of commercial confidentiality.

EMPLOYMENT

School Leavers

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walthamstow on 18 February, Official Report, column 351, about the educational attainment of unemployed school leavers, if a similar breakdown can be provided for unemployed school leavers (a) from the ethnic minorities, (b) from the Greater London area and (c) from the London borough of Waltham Forest.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the available information using final results of the 1983 labour force survey, including revisions to the figures given in my earlier reply of 18 February. The estimates are subject to sampling errors, which are greater for the ethnic minorities and for Greater London than for national totals. Corresponding figures are not available for Waltham Forest.

Hairdressing Trainees (West Midlands)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the available figures for the last two years of hairdressing establishments in the west midlands showing (a) the numbers of hairdressing trainees who entered training under the youth training scheme, (b) the number of hairdressing trainees who entered training as first year apprentices, (c) the number of youth training scheme hairdressing trainees who were subsequently employed under the young workers scheme and (d) the numbers of youth training scheme hairdressing trainees who entered second year apprentice training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is not available.

Youth Training Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give an estimate for the increased take-up of youth training scheme places when young workers scheme places became restricted to 17-year-olds.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At the beginning of 1984, it was expected that there might be between 15,000 and 35,000 additional entrants to the youth training scheme in 1984-85 as a result of the changes in the eligibility conditions of the young workers scheme.

However, it is difficult to estimate what the effects of the changes in the rules have actually been, because many factors affect the number of entrants to the youth training scheme, and it is not possible to identify separately the contribution made by the changes in the eligibility conditions of the young workers scheme.

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the youth training scheme in 1985-86.

Mr. Tom King: The Manpower Services Commission has submitted to me its recommendations for the scale and balance of provision for the youth training scheme in 1985-86 and the level of the grants and allowances.

I have approved the commission's recommendation that the youth training scheme in 1985-86 should be a programme of 379,000 places, comprising 297,000 mode A, 68,000 mode B1 and 14,000 mode B2 places. This should provide sufficient places for all eligible young people who are likely to come forward.

As regards grants to mode A managing agents, I have approved the commission's recommendations that the managing agent's fee should be increased from £100 to £110 per place from 1 April and that the contribution to training costs should be increased from £637.50 to £660 from 1 September. I have also approved the commission's recommendations for increases in the mode B grants in line with the mode A increases.

I have not yet made any decision on the level of the trainee allowance, which was increased to £26·25 per week in September 1984, but I have informed the commission that any increase in the allowance will result in a corresponding increase in the mode A block grant.

Girocheques

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances his Department makes ex gratia payments to replace girocheques issued by his Department's local offices which are subsequently stolen.

Mr. Alan Clark: Local offices of the Department of Employment's unemployment benefit service act on behalf of the Department of Health and Social Security in paying unemployment benefit. My Department will replace a girobank cheque for unemployment benefit which is reported stolen after receipt, or which is believed to have been stolen before receipt, provided there is no evidence that it has been cashed by the intended recipient or a member of his household.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by postal code district, for the east London postal districts E1 to E18 inclusive, the latest unemployment figures; and if he will show for each of these postal code districts the change in unemployment over the preceding 12-month period.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is not available in the form requested.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of people employed full-time in manufacturing industry in (a) the west midlands, (b) the Black Country area of the west midlands and (c) the Walsall travel-to-work area in May 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is from the June 1978 and the following September 1981 census of employment and is as follows:

Employees in full-time employment: Manufacturing industries

	June 1978 (thousands)	September 1981 (thousands)
West Midlands	916·7	743·6
Dudley and Sandwell, Wolverhampton and Walsall travel-to-work areas	268·5	213·3
Walsall travel-to-work area	65·8	55·3

As results of the 1978 census are not available for the new travel-to-work areas announced last year, information is given for the travel-to-work areas as defined before last year's review.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received concerning the access of employees to nursery provision.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Average Incomes

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the average national income for all individuals of the age of 16 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information on income from employment relates to the average gross weekly earnings in April 1984 of full-time employees aged 16 years on 1 January 1984 and are published in table 186 of "New Earnings Survey 1984," part F, a copy of which is in the Library.

National Freight Warehouse, Sheffield

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied that a thorough investigation is being carried out into the fire at the National Freight warehouse, Brightside Lane, Sheffield.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The Health and Safety Executive, in co-operation with the local authority environmental health department, local fire brigade and local fire authority, is preparing a thorough-going report into the causes of the fire and the precautions taken against exposure. The investigating team will draw on the expertise of Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate, the employment medical advisory service and the Health and Safety Executive's research and laboratory services division. The report will be published.

PRIME MINISTER

Henry Newton

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the late Henry Newton was at any time employed by Her Majesty's Government after May 1979; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I understand that certain allegations have been made about the existence of links between Mr. Newton, the security service and special branches. It is not the practice to comment on allegations of this nature.

Israel

Mr. White asked the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the state of Israel.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

ENERGY

Standing Charges (Small Usage Concession)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the cost in each quarter since its introduction of the small usage concession on the standing charge to domestic consumers of gas and electricity.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The industries' annual accounts for 1983-84 indicate that in that year standing charge rebates amounted to £42 million in the case of British Gas and £14·5 million in the case of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales.

I have asked the chairmen of British Gas and the Electricity Council to write direct to the hon. Member as to whether any further information is available.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether nuclear waste from European Economic Community nuclear power stations is being imported into the United Kingdom for processing.

Mr. Goodlad: No nuclear waste is imported into the United Kingdom for processing. BNFL has a number of contracts with overseas utilities for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Conservation

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is made by him for direct funding of energy conservation schemes for governmental and non-governmental organisations administered by his Department.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he intends to take to save energy in hospitals and other establishments under his control in the light of the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on National Health Service energy conservation.

Mr. Chris Patten: The report which was issued recently is currently under consideration. Already, as part of a public sector energy conservation drive which includes hospitals, a target for reducing energy usage by 10 per cent. at 1983-84 levels has been set for 31 March 1986. This target is to be achieved primarily by the reinforcement of "good housekeeping" measures. In addition, energy conservation measures are incorporated into all new capital projects.

Central Medical Advisory Committee

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what criteria were used in drawing up the list of organisations which will be represented on the Central Medical Advisory Committee for Northern Ireland;

(2) if he will provide places on the Central Medical Advisory Committee for representatives of junior doctors in Northern Ireland, in the same way as for the equivalent medical advisory machinery in England and Scotland.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Leeds Prison (Salmonella Poisoning)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the six prisoners who contracted salmonella poisoning in Leeds prison in October 1984 were at the time sharing a cell with another of these prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: Two of the six prisoners who contracted salmonella poisoning in Leeds prison in October 1984 were at the time sharing a cell with each other.

Ice (Rivers)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State fo Home Department if he intends to initiate pub campaigns alerting young children to the dangers of ice on river surfaces.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Central Office of Inform has, on behalf of the Home Office, been acti promoting both radio and television publicity on dangers during the past few months; and the broadca have provided time for its transmission.

Deportation Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State fo Home Department if he will list for each year from to date, the numbers of (a) deportation notices serve the Greater Manchester police, (b) deportations enfo by the Greater Manchester police and country where (c) illegal immigrants removed by police, and cou where sent, (d) persons held in Strangeways, Risley Styal awaiting deportation or removal, with lengt times held in custody, (e) people prosecuted Immigration Act offences broken down into offences being charged by the Greater Manchester police, numbers of cases where court recommends deporta and numbers of cases where his Department agrees to recommendation and (f) people interviewed by immigration department at Ringway in connection their immigration status having once entered the Un Kingdom, specifying how many of these were connection with (i) marriage and (ii) political asylum

Mr. Waddington: I regret that information on (a), (d), and (e) is not readily available.

With regard to (c), illegal entrants are removed u directions given by an immigration officer and the po are not normally involved in these arrangements. numbers of illegal entrants whose removal has b directed by the immigration service at Manchester si 1973 are:

Civil Defence

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what criteria grant applications for funds to build or improve emergency centres under the Civil Defence Regulations 1983 are assessed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Civil defence grant is approved on the cost of adapting premises to meet the minimum standards set by the Home Office. In exceptional circumstances additional payments of grant are paid to local authorities which are faced with particular difficulties.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has funds available to local authorities for the maintenance of emergency centres.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The costs of maintenance of emergency centres is a matter for local authorities, except that grant aid is available for maintaining accommodation for communications as set out in Home Office circular No. ES 8/1973. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inquiries from (a) members of the public and (b) voluntary organisations have been received by his Department about volunteering to take part in civil defence preparations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Inquiries from members of the public are referred to the appropriate county emergency planning officer; no central record is kept of inquiries from voluntary organisations.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the revised casualty estimates after a nuclear attack will be published.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of people who would be killed in a nuclear attack cannot be predicted; and we therefore have no proposals to publish casualty estimates.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans to produce a film on planning for peacetime emergencies.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from all chief constables on the extent of the practice of construction plant and machinery being stolen and dismantled on an organised basis for export abroad as spares and then reassembled for sale.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. The investigation of criminal offences reported to them is a matter for individual chief officers of police. My right hon. and learned Friend has noted the industry's concern in its letter to him of 27 February and is considering what advice and assistance might best be given to the industry.

National Reporting Centre

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he estimates to be the running costs of the National Reporting Centre in 1984; and who is responsible for the payment of its costs.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 14 January 1985, c. 15-16]: The additional cost of operating the National Reporting Centre during 1984 is estimated at about £130,000. The bulk of these costs were met from the Metropolitan police fund, except for the travelling and other expenses of police officers from other forces who attended the centre from time to time.

Sex Offenders (Treatment)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people convicted of sex offences are currently on probation conditional upon their receiving some form of medical or psychological therapy.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1985, c. 351-52]: The latest available information is for 30 June 1983, when it is estimated about 250 people convicted of indictable sexual offences were being supervised on probation orders including a requirement for psychiatric treatment.

DEFENCE

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost and the number of submarines and cruise missiles which would be necessary to equal the capacity of the Trident missile system by way of submarine-launched cruise missiles; whether such a system is of equal deterrence value; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: I refer my hon. Friend to the very full statement on this subject by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 29 November 1984, at columns 1125-28. The Government considered cruise missile options before decisions on Trident were taken and concluded that they were far less cost effective. This conclusion remains unchanged. Many more cruise missiles and warheads would be needed to provide a deterrent equivalent to that of a ballistic missile force, and at least twice the number of submarines would be necessary. Such a force would be considerably more expensive to procure and run than our planned Trident II force and would have a much inferior capability against any future developments in Soviet defensive systems.

Homosexuality

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces in each of the last four years have been disciplined on the ground of male or female homosexuality; under what military regulations they have been charged and disciplined; of the total number disciplined in each year, how many have been (a) discharged administratively, (b) dishonourably discharged, (c) court-martialled and (d) given military prison sentences; and, in these cases, what has been the minimum, maximum and average length of sentences in each year.

Mr. Lee: No member of the services is disciplined purely on the ground of being a homosexual. If an individual has committed no offence, he will usually be administratively discharged, which is not a d procedure. However, homosexual practice is under each Service Discipline Act, and ma administrative discharge or action under the A may result in dismissal or imprisonment.

Falklands Campaign (Official Secrets Act)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all inquiries which took place arising from the Falklands conflict, including those conducted at Northwood, concerning alleged breaches of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Heseltine: There have been six inquiries involving my Department about the possible deliberate and unauthorised disclosure of official information, arising from the Falklands campaign. Two of these cases concerned Lance Corporal Aldridge and Mr. Ponting: for the reasons given today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General in answer to a related question from the hon. Gentleman, it would be wrong for me to make public information about the others.

Trident

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates have been made to cover the additional requirements of command, control, communica intelligence for the Trident system; and if this included in the total cost estimate of Trident.

Mr. Butler: The cost information sought by Member is classified. The Trident estimate inc full cost of equipment fitted in the submarine a associated facilities dedicated to the Trident pro

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupils (Costs and Attainments)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for E and Science if he will list (a) the average nu school leavers with five or more O-levels, (b) the numbers of school-leavers with two or more A-l (c) the average cost of education per school pup the Inner London education authority, (ii) met districts, (iii) shire counties and (iv) England.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning educational aspects of workplace nursery provision.

Mr. Dunn: None.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in descending order the cost of educating the average pupil in each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 7 March]: The average net cost per pupil in primary and secondary schools for each local education authority is given in the following table.

ENVIRONMENT

Superstore Development (Eltham)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the proposed superstore development at Eltham High Street, SE9, following the public inquiry held from 28 January to 14 March 1984.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend hopes to be able to announce his decision very soon.

House Building

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public sector housing starts were under way in (a) Birmingham, (b) Coventry, (c) Wolverhampton, (d) Dudley, (e) Sandwell and (f) Walsall in each year since 1977 to the latest available date.

Sir George Young: The reported numbers of dwellings under construction for the authorities and for other public sector bodies appear in "Local Housing Statistics", available in the Library, in the following issues which, from 1979, include revisions and late return.

Rates

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the average sums paid in rates by domestic ratepayers in England, gross and net of rate rebates, in each year since 1977-78.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in which years since 1955 there has been a rating revaluation in England.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Revaluations in England took effect in 1956, 1963 and 1973.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make available the Cambridge report commissioned by his Department on the effects of business rates on the location of employment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report itself is being published by the authors and I have today arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

I have also today written to interested bodies giving them copies of the report and asking for relevant information they may hold on where the burden of business rates falls, before considering whether a further study might usefully be commissioned.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Sec for the Environment what representations h from the construction industry about th construction plant and machinery bein dismantled on an organised basis for ex spares and then reassembled for sale; and i a statement.

Mr. Gow: None, but I share the indus and I welcome the efforts that are being ma problem. SCOTLAND

"Broadleaves in Britain"

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the new management guidelines for broadleaved woodland which will result from the "Broadleaves in Britain" review will apply equally to woodlands in private ownership and the Forestry Commission's own woodlands.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes.

Conservation

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission's conservationists are given the discretion to refuse grant aid for forestry planting on sites of special scientific interest on the grounds that such planting would be harmful to the conservation interest of the site.

Mr. John MacKay: I take it that my hon. Friend is referring to Forestry Commission's conservators.

The views of the Nature Conservancy Council are sought by the Forestry Commission on every application for grant aid for planting on sites of special scientific interest. When the Nature Conservancy Council objects in whole or in part to a proposal, and agreement cannot be reached between the council and the applicant, a decision on grant aid is taken not by the conservator but by the Forestry Commissioners.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what scientific nature conservation expertise the Forestry Commission has to enable it to make decisions on conservancy at forest district level over management of ancient semi-natural woodland which reconcile the nature conservation and forestry interests of such woodlands.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission has many professional and technical officers at conservancy and forest district levels who have knowledge and understanding of nature conservation matters. They are backed up as necessary by specialist scientific advice both from the commission's own research and development division and from the Nature Conservancy Council. The commission is currently discussing with the Nature Conservancy Council the drawing up of guidelines for the management of ancient semi-natural broadleaved woodlands.

Oxygen Supplies

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in Scotland are supplied with oxygen by community pharmacists or through their own general practitioner; what is the cost of the service; how many of these patients would be classified as requiring major therapy and how many would be classified as requiring occasional use therapy; and how many patients in each of these categories use cylinder oxygen and how many use concentrators.

Mr. John MacKay: At the end of October 1984, patients in Scotland were being supplied with oxyg community pharmacists or through their own g practitioner. About 50 patients could be classifi requiring major therapy and the remainder as req occasional use therapy. All patients were suppli means of cylinder oxygen. The total cost of the serv October 1984 was £75,661.

Rates

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Sc in which years since 1955 there has been a revaluation in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: Valuations were reviewed continu until the passing of the Valuation and Rating (Sco Act 1956. Since then there have been revaluatio Scotland in the years 1961, 1966, 1971, 1978 and

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Sc if he will report on the outcome of his meeting in Sc on Wednesday 27 February with representative pharmacists to discuss further the implications o limited list of drugs available under the National H Service; what was the nature of the representatio received; whether he proposes to take any action as a of the meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I met representatives o Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, Sc Department and the Pharmaceutical General Co (Scotland) on 27 February for discussions on va matters associated with the Government's measur restrict the range of drugs available under the NH treatment of certain conditions. The main areas co were the arrangements for ensuring that patients in re areas of Scotland had access to sources of supply drugs, the supply position of manufacturers wholesalers on drugs which will continue to be avai on NHS prescriptions and the implications of the measures for community pharmacists' stockholdin drugs, remuneration procedures and terms of service. comments received from the profession are being t into account as appropriate in the detailed arrangem

NHS (Management)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Sco what action he is taking to implement his proposal developing the general management function in National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: I received some 90 responses individuals and organisations to the proposals I issue consultation in June last year. These indicate considerable measure of support for my intentio introduce the general management function into Scottish Health Service.

My Department is today issuing guidance to h boards requiring them to make arrangements to app general managers at board level. In mainland boards general manager posts will be new full-time p recruitment will be by open advertisement. Islands bo will select a general manager from their existing officers and general management duties will be perfor in addition to that officer's existing functions. Mainland and Island boards are expected to have general managers appointed by the end of 1985.

I will be considering further how to develop the general management function at unit level in the light of a study of unit management which my Department will commission.

To enable my Department to provide the necessary guidance on strategic tasks and targets and to monitor the National Health Service's performance, I have created a new under-secretary post with responsibility for NHS management, finance and operational planning. I intend to establish a Health Service Policy Board, under the chairmanship of the Minister with responsibility for health and social work, to advise on policy decisions required for the Health Service in Scotland, the efficient management of the service, and the performance of the service in implementing agreed policy. The membership will include the chairman of the Scottish Health Boards Chairmen's Group and the chairman of the Scottish Health Service Planning Council, together with my Department's senior administrative and professional staff and the Chief Scientist. It will be supplemented as appropriate by the under-secretary responsible for the social work services group.

I have arranged for copies of the circular to be placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Elena Gurevich (USSR)

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics about Elena Gurevich and her family who wish to emigrate to Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We have made clear our strong feelings about the refusal of the Soviet authorities to allow Jewish and other Soviet citizens, who wish to do so, to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Both my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend raised this question most recently with Mr. Gorbachev, whose answer, regrettably, gave no cause to hope for an early change in Soviet policy. We shall continue to press for full implementation by the Soviet Union of its commitments in the human rights field and will keep the case of Elena Gurevich and many others like it fully in mind.

Falklands Campaign (Official Secrets Act)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all inquiries which took place at Government communications headquarters, arising from the Falklands conflict concerning alleged breaches of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Rifkind: There has been one alleged case at GCHQ, which has required some investigating, but it would not be right to give any further information, and I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him yesterday by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas Cookers

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to introduce mandatory certification for gas cookers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I am not satisfied that there is a need to require certification of gas cookers using powers under the Consumer Safety Act 1978. I do intend, however, to introduce regulations under that Act to establish new maximum permissible temperatures for the fronts and sides of domestic gas and electric cookers below hob level. These regulations would, of course, apply equally to cookers of British and foreign manufacture. It is highly desirable that these regulations should be based on agreement reached within the framework of the British Standards Institution. As I stated in a press notice of 26 November 1984, six months seems a reasonable period for agreement to be reached on new temperatures lower than those in the current British Standard. I hope therefore to have regulations ready in draft before the end of May. An approach has already been made to the EC Commission seeking its advice and help on the best method of achieving our objective, which is the protection of consumers from domestic cookers which become too hot to touch on the outside, within the framework of our obligations as members of the EC.

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department has taken on the complaint of interference by citizens band radio in Maryer Road, SE7, brought to his attention by the hon. Member for Woolwich on 14 January; and when he expects to be able to resolve the matter.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Company Liquidations

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of company liquidations which have occurred in the west midlands in 1982 and 1983; what is the latest available figure for 1984; and what information he has as to the total number of employees in the companies involved.

Mr. Fletcher: I regret that figures of company liquidations are not analysed by area. No information is available on the number of employees involved.

Company Bankruptcies

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total number of company bankruptcies which have occurred in the west midlands since 1981.

Mr. Fletcher: The total number of bankruptcies administered in the years 1982 to 1984 inclusive by county courts in the whole of West Midlands county was 1,105 (a). The figure relates to all individuals and partnerships. For England and Wales as a whole, unincorporated businesses account for between 75 and 80 per cent. of the total. Official figures of company liquidations are not available by area.

(a) Provisional: will be overstated because the number of consolidations and recissions to be deducted for 1984 is not yet known. In 1983 there were 26.

Manufactures (Exports)

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he is taking to encourage the export of United Kingdom manufactured products;

(2) what support his Department provides to small companies which want to establish export markets;

(3) what has been the proportion of exports by United Kingdom manufacturing companies in percentage terms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Market Entry Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the operation of the market entry guarantee scheme.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Overseas Projects Fund

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small companies have received support from the overseas projects fund in each year since 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Extra-statutory Concession (VAT)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the last financial year the extra-statutory concession was exercised on value added tax paid as a result of misdirection by a Customs and Excise officer.

Mr. Hayhoe: The concession was exercised on 153 occasions in the financial year 1983-84.

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which fiscal year the extra-statutory concession was introduced on value added tax paid as a result of misdirection by a Customs and Excise officer.

Mr. Hayhoe: The concession was introduced in the financial year 1978-79.

VAT Registration

Mr. Conway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present rate of value added tax registration in the Shrewsbury and Atcham area compared with the same period in 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that detailed records are not maintained in this form. Statistics of new VAT registrations are prepared quarterly on a geographical basis by reference to the local VAT office at which the registrations are made. Available information for the Shrewsbury VAT office, which covers a somewhat larger area than my hon. Friend's constituency, is as follows:

Total number of registrations as at 3 January 1984 — 13,555.

Total number of registrations as at 3 January 1985 — 13,618.

New registrations quarter ending 3 January 1984—282.

New registrations quarter ending 3 January 1985—309.

Charities (VAT)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received proposing the extension of the limited relief from value added tax given to registered charities.

Mr. Hayhoe: During the last three months my Treasury colleagues and I have received a total of 56 representations from individuals and organisations regarding extension of VAT relief for charities. I met a deputation from the Charities VAT Reform Group on 4 December.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of value added tax paid by charitable organisations on the income received by them in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: This information is not available. Charities which engage in business activities must register for VAT and charge VAT on their supplies in the same way as other enterprises. Non-business income is not liable to VAT.

Capital Assets (Financial Management)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is done under the financial management initiative to ensure that line managers are fully informed of all the capital assets under their management; and what is the system of reporting on the condition of these assets.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Government Borrowing and Expenditure

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total Government borrowing requirement and the total of central Government's spending for each year since 1979; what proportion this represented of gross domestic product; and what information he has as to how these figures compare with those for the United States of America, Japan, Germany and Australia, respectively.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Capital Flows

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the inward and outward capital flows for the United Kingdom in the years 1979 to 1984; and what information he has as to how these compare with the figures for the United States of America, Japan, Germany and Australia, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Money Supply

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the rates of growth in the United Kingdom money supply, as measured by M0, M1, M3 and £M3, in the years 1979 to 1984; and what information he has as to the equivalent or nearest equivalent figures for the United States of America, Japan, Germany and Australia, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning tax incentives to provide workplace nurseries.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

PAYE Taxpayers

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list showing, by Inland Revenue region (a) the number of pay as you earn taxpayers, (b) the number of pay as you earn taxpayers, on the latest quarterly figures, not yet assessed or otherwise cleared for the last tax year and (c) figures comparable to (b) for the position of this assessing work in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Industrial Society

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any information was provided by the Inland Revenue to the Industrial Society during 1984 concerning the incomes of individual taxpayers.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 7 March 1985]: No information of this kind has been provided to the Industrial Society.

Allowances

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider retaining the system of first-year allowances on plant and machinery for unincorporated businesses at 75 per cent. and the 10 per cent. allowance on agricultural buildings.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 7 March 1985]: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for June 1984 the number of (a) whole-time and (b) part-time farmers, partners and directors of agricultural holdings of 100 hectares and over, the number of such holdings and the number of spouses in each case engaged in farm work, distinguishing the number who were also partners and directors and those who were not.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of farmers, partners and directors of agricultural holdings of 100 hectares and over total area recorded in the June 1984 agricultural census for England and Wales was as follows:

	Farmers, Partners and Directors*	*Related Holdings
Whole Time	37,600	24,500
Part Time	7,400	6,100
Totals	45,000	26,600

*ON 4,000 of the holdings there were both whole-time and part-time farmers, partners or directors.

The best available data on spouses on these holdings is as follows:

Spouses of:	Number
—whole-time principal farmers	7,400
—part-time principal farmers	400
—other farmers, partners and directors	1,700
All spouses	9,500

These figures relate only to spouses doing farm work. The census does not record the number of spouses who were also partners and directors: neither does it distinguish between spouses of whole-time and of part-time farmers, partners and directors, except as shown in the table.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing agricultural holdings by size of holding on the same basis as in table 9.7 of the 1979 edition of the annual abstract for the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is available from "Agricultural Statistics United Kingdom", published annually by HMSO and available from the Library of the House.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his coverage of farm incomes in Cmnd. 9423 covers public limited companies wholly or predominantly engaged in agriculture; and if he will publish such information as he has concerning the return on capital in such companies on an historic cost and on a current cost basis before 1978 and in 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: The calculation of output, input and net incomes of the agricultural sector covers such companies, but it is not possible to identify separately their contribution to the totals.

Salmon Stocks

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now publish all those statistics relating to his inquiry into the effect on salmon stocks of the north east drift net fishery which are not commercially confidential.

Mr. MacGregor: Apart from information which is commercially confidential, the statistics used in this inquiry have already been published in one form or another.

Cereals

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will break down the cereal figures in table 4 of the "Annual Review of Agriculture", Cmnd. 9423, to show wheat and barley separately; and if he will include figures for holdings of more than 75 hectares and 150 hectares, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is available for 1983 from table 7 of "Agricultural Statistics United Kingdom 1983", published by HMSO and available in the Library of the House. Figures for 1984 are not available.

Hill Farmers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government have considered the economics of paying hill farmers not to farm.

Mr. Jopling: No. I regard the continuation of farming in the hills and uplands as essential for conservation and important to the rural economy as a whole.

Poultrymeat

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to give protection to British poultrymeat processors from unfair overseas competition.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1985]: Various local authorities have responsibilities in relation to the water content of imported frozen chicken and other aspects of quality and hygiene under domestic and EC legislation. My Department keeps closely in touch with the organisations which represent the various enforcement agencies about the exercise of these responsibilities.

Any evidence of illegal national aids which might assist poultrymeat producers and processors in other member states to the detriment of the United Kingdom industry would immediately be notified to the European Commission; and we are continuing to press for the elimination of the distortion in competition created by the varying standards of enforcement of the EC poultrymeat hygiene legislation in the different member states.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the dates of introduction of all the drugs on his amended limited list;

(2) how many and which products on his amended limited list will fall into the category of only having a licence of right.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information about the dates of introduction of medicines on the selected list could be extracted from our records only at disproportionate cost. However, we do know that the great majority were already on the market when the Medicines Act became operational in 1971.

The table lists the products mentioned in the selected list which still have licences of right. The total is 394 licences. These represent just over half of the licensed products on the selected list. As part of our review programme these products will be assessed under the Medicines Act over the next few years.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Soci Services what specific publicity he proposes to institute inform the public of the list of medicines which will cea to be prescribable on the National Health Service after April.

Mr. Kenneth Clark: We have already made our ne proposals widely available through the press. A leaflet being prepared for issue to patients through gener practitioners and pharmacists.

Heating Allowance

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State f Social Services how many applicants there have been Gwent for heating allowance since November 1984; ho many of the applicants have been rejected; and how mar have received assistance.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that statistical information is n collected on the number of decisions to give or refus heating additions under regulation 12 and schedule 4 of th Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations.

About 200 lump sum payments have been made Gwent so far this year for extra fuel used by claimants the recent exceptionally severe weather. The averag amount paid is £6·62. It is too early to say what the tot number of payments made or the average amount paid th year will be. Information on the number of unsuccessfu claims made is not available and could be obtained onl at disproportionate cost.

NHS (Energy Conservation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State f Social Services what energy conservation schemes h intends to initiate in respect of National Health Servic hospitals and administrative buildings.

Mr. John Patten: It is for health authoritie themselves to initiate energy conservation measures a part of local revenue cost improvement programmes. Th Department will continue to encourage the adoption o innovatory measures and provide resources for monitorin demonstration schemes that will benefit the rest of th health service. Two hospitals, in Windsor and Dover, wi be used as demonstration sites for the effectiveness of ne measures, for energy survey and auditing method computer aids, small building management systems an involvement of all hospital staff in the drive to reduc energy costs in the existing National Health Service estat

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Soci Services what is the current ratio of pensioners in Scotlan to people of working age; and what assumptions he make about the ratio in (a) 1994, (b) 2004 and (c) 2024.

Mr. Whitney: The information as requested is n available. Based on the 1981 population projections, it estimated that the numbers of adults of working age an persons of pension age in Great Britain will be as follow

Year	Adults of working age (thousands)	Persons of pension age (thousands)	Ratio of A to B
1984-85	33,372	9,977	3·3:1
1995-96	33,647	10,174	3·3:1

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update the reply to the hon. Member for Westminster, North on 13 April 1984, Official Report, column 406, concerning measures introduced or improved since 1979 to increase the well-being of pensioners.

Mr. Whitney: Since April 1984 the Government have continued to promote the well-being of pensioners. In November 1984 we uprated the retirement pension by 5·1 per cent. This means that between November 1978 and November 1984 the rate of the retirement pension went up by 83·6 per cent., whereas the rise in the retail prices index during this period was only 77·2 per cent. This more than honours our pledge to maintain the real value of retirement pensions.

We have continued to keep down the rate of inflation, thus protecting the value of savings, benefits and non-index linked occupational pensions.

We are now spending more than ever on help with heating costs—an estimated £400 million in 1984-85. Some 1·5 million pensioner householders are amongst those who benefit from these heating additions, which have increased by some 20 per cent. in real terms between November 1978 and November 1984. In November 1984 we extended heating additions to include all supplementary pensioner householders aged 65 or over and gave higher rate heating additions worth £5·20 a week to all those aged 85 and over. It is now estimated that over 90 per cent. of supplementary pensioner householders get heating additions.

At present married women who qualify for the over 80s non-contributory retirement pension are paid at a lower rate than men and single women. The Social Security Bill provides for the abolition of this lower rate and to pay everyone equally from November 1985.

From November 1984 periods after people reach age 80 have counted towards the 10-year residence test for the over 80s non-contributory retirement pension. Before that date people entering, or returning, to the United Kingdom after the age of 70 were usually unable to qualify, no matter how long they lived in this country thereafter.

The inquiry into provision for retirement has now finished its work and Ministers expect to publish their proposals in the next few months.

Family Planning

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to improve the provision of specialised family planning services throughout the United Kingdom, with particular emphasis on special sessions for young people.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for individual health authorities to decide the priority they attach to these services, in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of district health authorities currently provide (a) sterilisation services for women, (b) vasectomy services and (c) sub-fertility services; what action he plans to increase those percentages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have comprehensive information. It is for individual health authorities to determine the level of provision of these services, in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Single Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in which parts of Great Britain supplementary benefit claimants may qualify for single payments on the grounds of exceptionally severe weather under the formula laid down by the Chief Adjudication Officer in respect of quarterly fuel bills for periods ended in February.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 14 January at column 64 and on 18 February at columns 389-93 and to the hon. Member for Walsall, North and my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 21 January at columns 349-53.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many wrongful refusals of single payments for furniture were found in the course of his inspectorate's inquiry on this subject; and whether those payments have now been made.

Mr. Whitney: The inspectors were of the opinion that in 18 out of the 200 cases examined there was a possibility that payment might have been wrongfully refused; but 16 of these were subsequently revised after appeal by claimants. Decisions on claims for single payments for furniture are made initially by independent adjudication officers in local offices, subject to the right of appeal to social security appeal tribunals and, on a point of law, to the Social Security Commissioners, As officers of the Social Security Policy Inspectorate are not adjudication officers, their opinion on the merits of individual cases cannot be decisive and does not provide grounds for reopening cases in which the claimant himself is satisfied with the decision.

NHS (GP List)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the outcome of the application to the National Health Service medical tribunal by the City and East London family practitioners' committee in May 1983 for the removal of a general practitioner from the National Health Service list; if he is satisfied with the operation of the tribunal timetable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the particular case to which the hon. Member refers, the tribunal hearing was reconvened on 20 February 1985. The general practitioner concerned undertook to resign from the medical list of the City and East London family practitioner committee and not to apply for inclusion in the list of any other family practitioner committee. On the basis of this undertaking, the City and East London FPC requested the tribunal's leave to withdraw its representations against the general practitioner and this was granted. The general practitioner has submitted his resignation to the FPC and this will be considered in due course by the Secretary of State for Social Services.

We are satisfied with the operation of the tribunal timetable.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the procedure adopted by his Department on receipt of an application from a general practitioner for inclusion on the National Health Service list, who has previously resigned from that list, and who has been the subject of an undetermined case at a National Health Service medical tribunal by virtue of that resignation prior to the relevant hearing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Where a doctor has given an undertaking to the National Health Service tribunal to resign from the medical list of a family practitioner committee and not to seek inclusion in the medical list of any other committee, and the Secretary of State has consented to the doctor's resignation, the doctor will be expected to provide the Secretary of State with evidence of his fitness to return to general practice in order to secure release from his undertaking.

Drug Addiction

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many complaints he has received from drugs specialists about his proposed television advertising campaign to dissuade youngsters from drug addiction and misuse.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Mr. Heatherington (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth can expect to receive a definitive answer to his letter dated 1 October 1984 about Mr. Heatherington of Long Lawford, near Rugby.

Mr. Newton: I regret the delay, and wrote to my hon. Friend yesterday.

Oxygen Supplies

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients in England are supplied with oxygen by community pharmacists or through their own general practitioner; how many of these patients would be classified as requiring major therapy and how many would be classified as requiring only occasional use therapy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: "Major therapy" and "occasional use therapy" are not terms which are readily definable at the moment. However, a survey of prescribing in England during the first half of 1984 showed that 31,715 patients received oxygen, of whom 28,096 or about 89 per cent. used less than five cylinders a month—an average consumption of less than two hour a day. Of the remainder, only 865 or about 2·5 per cent., required more than 25 cylinders a month or an average of 10 hours or more a day. Whilst these figures give an indication of the current usage pattern of domiciliary oxygen, we do not have sufficient information about each patient's prescribed treatment to enable us to classify the type of therapy prescribed in each case.

Social Services (Review)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for So Services when he plans to publish the consulta document on the review of social services.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to publish the consulta document in the summer.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for So Services if he will consult the local authority organisat to ascertain their views on the options to be canvasse his forthcoming consultation document, the review social services.

Mr. John Patten: No. The consultation process in itself enable local authority organisations to sug other approaches and to canvass views, if they wish.

Lynders Wood Court, Braintree

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for So Services how many residents at Lynders Wood Co London Road, Black Notley, Braintree, Essex, supplementary pensioners; and how many of them (a) being paid board and lodging allowance (b) allowances for residential care.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a re as soon as possible.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of S for Social Services what recent representations he received concerning workplace nursery provision.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Pregnancies (Statistics)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of S for Social Services if he will give a breakdown for e of the years since 1969 of the total numbers of concepti and the rate of such conceptions per 1,000 women in e age group which led to live or still maternities which w (a) legitimate, (b) illegitimate or (c) legitimate follow marriage after conception, and for conceptions termina by abortion, of women aged (i) under 16 years and under 20 years at the time of such conceptions.

Pre-School Playgroups Association

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the level of the grant made to the Pre-School Playgroups Association in 1984-85.

Mr. John Patten: We have decided to make a supplementary grant of £30,000 to the Pre-School Playgroups (PPA) this financial year to help ease the cash flow problem the association anticipates in mid-March. It should also, on our present information, enable the association to balance its income and expenditure account this financial year.

I want to take this opportunity to clarify certain aspects of the events of the financial year about to end. On 25 June 1984 I announced a grant of £361,000 for 1984-85. At the same time I offered—and PPA accepted—the help of a DHSS audit team to advise on financial management and to carry out a general financial appraisal.

On 25 June PPA sent a letter to the Department to say it had dismissed its finance officer (accounts) for misconduct and had called in its auditors. Charges have since brought against the finance officer.

The DHSS financial appraisal was carried out with the full co-operation of the volunteer officers and the staff of the association. The appraisal team's report, which PPA welcomed, made a number of recommendations to strengthen and extend financial management and control. PPA accepted the recommendations in full and is working towards their implementation.

I have also seconded, at no cost to the PPA, part-time, a DHSS officer at principal grade to help it to review its management needs. I hope that these measures will enable the association to set its affairs in order and continue to provide the support to the playgroup movement which we value highly.

It is clear from preliminary discussions with the association about its grant application for 1985-86 that this will be a difficult financial year. I am confident that it will be supported by its membership.

Social Security Commissioners

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of appeal applications which have been submitted to social security commissioners in each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of appeals and applications for leave to appeal in each year since 1979 are as follows:

	Number
1979	2,712
1980	2,428
1981	3,321
1982	3,173
1983	3,141
1984	3,220

The figures have hitherto not been collected separately. Arrangements will be made for this to be done with effect from 1 January 1985.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 7

SESSION 1984-85

25th February—8th March 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speakers rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading 'Speaker'.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of the volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
